Student in critical condition after weekend residence fire

By The Collegian Staff
A University student is in critical condition at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan., following a weekend fire.
Daniela W. Dalrymple, sophomore in general arts and sciences, was taken to The St. Mary Hospital and transferred to the University of Kansas Medical Center Burn Unit in Kansas City.
Sgt. Freeby of the Riley County Police Department said the fire was reported at 10:42 p.m. Saturday, with the first units arriving at 10:45 p.m. He said the fire, at 1803 College Heights, Apartment 2, caused "very, very minor damage to the apartment."

Freeby said initial reports indicated Dalrymple suffered burns over 40 percent of her body and possible inner-lung burns.
A spokeswoman for the Center's University Relations Department said Dalrymple was still listed in critical condition Monday afternoon, but could not release any further information.

Faculty Senate nominations due in offices by March 7

Marcos

Signs emerged that Aquino's call for restrained civil disobedience at a giant rally Sunday was having an effect.
The price of stock in the huge San Miguel Corp. dropped about 20 percent from last week. Aquino asked Filipinos to boycott the company, whose chairman, Eduardo Cojuangco, she called a Marcos "crony."
Several banks she listed for boycott reported heavy withdrawals.
Aquino has asked for strikes, school walkouts, boycotts and noise barrages the day after Marcos' inauguration, expected next week.
Habib would not give reporters any details of his talks.
"I've told you before, fellows," Habib told journalists at Cardinal

Jaime Sin's villa, "just take pictures and that's enough."
Sin laughingly said that he and Habib talked only about angels.
Habib also conferred with Jose Concepcion, head of Namfrel, the independent pollwatching organization National Movement for Free Elections. Namfrel still had Aquino ahead with incomplete returns 10 days after the election.
On the first day of what are to be her daily radio broadcasts, Aquino, widow of assassinated opposition leader Benigno Aquino, said she told Habib the crisis can be resolved only by making her president.
She indicated she thought Habib was more interested in the post-election crisis than in any evidence of election abuses she or Marcos might offer him.
She again said she would not join any "coalition government" with Marcos.

and flames confined within the booster casing. The rings are protected from heat and flame by a putty-like substance.
Documents released last week by the presidential commission show a history of concern among NASA and its contractors about the vulnerability of the rings. The concerns were linked to a 1983 decision to lighten the weight of each of the two shuttle boosters by 4,000 pounds and to increase the power of their motors.
The changes, made so the shuttles could lift heavier payloads, put greater stress on the joints, the documents show.
In Washington, in a move tied to the shuttle accident, NASA general manager Phil Culbertson was relieved of his duties and assigned to work on special projects for acting administrator William Graham.

The general manager post was created when Graham, who was new to the agency, became acting director two months ago after administrator James Beggs took a leave to prepare his defense for a fraud trial.
Culbertson was a link between Graham and other NASA top officials. These officials now will report directly to Graham, NASA spokesman Dave Garrett said.

KU proposed Washburn not be allowed into the regents system until adequate funding is created.
"This was rejected because who says what adequate funding is?" Elmore said. "There's not enough research done by ASK to make a proposition on it. We're not in a position of defending our dues paying member; Kansas State University has to look out for its own interests."

Fugitive faces charges for trying to kill pope

By The Associated Press
ROME — A prosecutor on Monday demanded life imprisonment for a fugitive Turk charged in absentia with being the second gunman who tried to kill Pope John Paul II nearly five years ago.
Prosecutor Antonio Marini made the request during his fifth day of summing up the state's case against three Turks and three Bulgarians charged with complicity in the May 13, 1981, shooting of the pope.
It was the first time he had revealed what sentences he would seek against any of the six defendants.
Two of the Bulgarians and one of the Turks, Oral Celik, have never been in Italian custody. Celik's whereabouts have not been known since the pope was shot.

Students accompanying Elmore and Lambert to Lawrence Sunday were Doug Chamblin, senior in mechanical engineering; Matt Livingston, sophomore in pre-law; Patty Hipsheer, junior in political science; Chris Steineger, senior in political science; Al Madrid, freshman in pre-law; Troy Lubbers, freshman in business administration; Scott King, freshman in pre-law; Kevin Eickmann, junior in information systems; Lori Shellenberger, sophomore in pre-law; and Steve Debaughe, senior in mechanical engineering.
But Marini said there was sufficient evidence to convict Celik of being with convicted papal assailant Mehmet Ali Agca in St. Peter's Square and taking part in the alleged plot. According to the indictment, Celik fired the third and last shot.

Coliseum estimate moves $1.4 million above budget limit

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

The construction cost of the proposed 13,500-seat Fred Bramlage Coliseum is $1.4 million more than the $14.5 million budgeted for the project, coliseum architect Bill Livingston of Wichita said Tuesday.

Following disclosure of the budget estimate and two hours of discussion, the Coliseum Program Committee unanimously voted to recommend to President Duane Acker that project planning continue despite the budget shortfall.

The coliseum's total cost — including construction costs, the architect's fee and finishing touches — is now pegged at $17.5 million. The original design called for a 16,000-seat building at a total cost of $16.1 million.

Acker must review the committee's recommendation and, if comfortable with redesign plans, request approval from the Kansas Board of Regents to remove the $14.5 million budget cap so that Livingston may begin developing construction documents.

Livingston's cost estimate is critical to any decision concerning the project. The KSU Foundation must pay for any portion of the budget exceeding the $14.5 million figure. Acker has indicated he will not approve plans that do not specifically identify all sources of funding.

Arthur Loub, executive director of the Foundation, said the Foundation currently has $8.1 million in pledges, but at least $350,000 of the pledges are uncollectable. Although more than $7.7 million is available, the sum cannot cover $650,000 of the increase.

Congress must reduce funds for 1987 targets

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress was told Tuesday it must cut $37 billion from existing programs to meet fiscal 1987 deficit targets, but lawmakers said the Congressional Budget Office estimate was too optimistic and could hurt the push for reducing red ink.

"The outlook for reducing budget deficits has improved dramatically since last summer," CBO director Rudolph G. Penner told the Senate Budget Committee.

Congress' new deficit-reduction law, although facing a court challenge, was helping its own goal by promoting lower interest rates and strength in the economy, he said.

Penner's estimate of a $37 billion gap between projected spending and the $144 billion deficit target in the new law was about $1 billion less than the Reagan administration estimated.

The CBO assumed 3.6 percent growth in the Gross National Product, not as optimistic as the Reagan administration. Moderate inflation and declining long-term interest rates were also predicted in the CBO report.

Unlike the president, however, CBO assumed that military spending will rise only to cover inflation.

The assumptions behind the seeming good news brought quick scrutiny by Senate Budget Committee members.

If President Reagan's request for a Pentagon budget increase is added, Congress' cost-cutting task balloons to $51 billion, said Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M.

Using low-cost assumptions, the CBO "makes the problem appear less urgent," Domenici told Penner. "It seems to me that we have just

Ag quadrathlon teams use practical knowledge

By DIXIE GLANVILLE
Collegian Reporter

Most college students don't get a chance to test their practical knowledge until they become part of the working world.

But students in the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry put their learning and experience to the test last week in the Academic Quadrathlon.

"It's a learning experience. You're taking things that are abstract and putting them with practical uses," said Evon Lynch, senior in animal sciences and industry and captain of last year's winning team.

The finals of the competition took place Tuesday night at the Block and Bridle meeting in Weber Hall.

The Palpaters Inc. won the overall competition. Team members are: Barb Downey, Steve Gleason and John Ericson, seniors in animal sciences and industry; and Mark Maris, senior in feed science and management.

They defeated The Hitch Boys, Kevin Schultz, Mark Wulffkuhle,

Mike Barrett and Dave Clawson, all seniors in animal sciences and industry.

The winning team will travel to the Midwest Section of the American Society of Animal Scientists meeting, March 24-26, Des Moines, Iowa for the regional competition.

"This is the way we choose the K-State teams to represent us in Des Moines," said Walt Smith, associate professor in animal sciences and industry.

The Palpaters Inc. placed second in the lab practicum, written exam and oral presentation sections, and first in the quiz bowl.

According to Smith about a dozen teams compete at the Midwest meeting. Last year, the K-State team (the Lynch Mob), placed second in the regional contest in Chicago. The Lynch Mob consisted of Lora Henry, freshman in veterinary medicine; Randy Milne, graduate in reproductive physiology; Tim Tyson, senior in animal sciences and industry with Lynch as the captain.

Cities change to survive, mayor says

By SARAH KESSINGER
Staff Writer

America's cities must adjust and prepare for the changes of the future if they are to survive, said Henry Cisneros, mayor of San Antonio, Texas, and president of the National League of Cities.

Cisneros spoke about "The Survival of American Cities" to a crowd of about 700 at an All-University Convocation Tuesday morning in McCain Auditorium.

Cisneros, the first Mexican-American to be elected mayor of a major U.S. city, said cities are important to the functioning of society and play a larger role than most people acknowledge.

"With the continuing transformation of the American economy, the movement of people across the landscape and the decentralization of government down to lower levels, cities and our concerns about them are going to be more important," Cisneros said.

Changes in society must be dealt with as they come and those who are unprepared for these changes will be left behind, Cisneros said.

There is continuing economic growth evident in the move from manufacturing to technology, he said. Harnessing this growth "not to line the pockets of a few developers and bankers but to make it work for the poor and disadvantaged" is vital to a city's survival.

Cisneros noted there are deep implications for public policy in the changes, including the availability and kinds of jobs and fundamental changes in education.

"Education is wrestling with a transformation from the three R's — the basic reading, writing and arithmetic — to the three C's of the technology era — ability to calculate, compute and communicate in the language of technology," Cisneros said.

Class distinctions may also be an insoluble problem if the gap widens between those who are technologically literate and those who are illiterate in that respect, he said, because of the lack of early education in science, mathematics and computers.

Cisneros said because of the trend of growth in specific parts of the country, such as in the Sun Belt area, local governments need to re-evaluate their role.

With a decentralization of government and the way in which people live, Cisneros said, "people are becoming much more pragmatic — they want to solve problems at the local level. The action is going to be in school districts and counties and cities; that's where the solutions are going to be hammered out."

No area will feel the impact more than America's cities, he said. It is to the cities people come "for their first step on the ladder of opportunity. City governments are the crucible of America's civics" and provide the daily impact on

Reagan requests funds for Nicaraguan rebels

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, saying Nicaraguan rebels cannot fight the Sandinista government with "Band-Aids and mosquito nets," opened a campaign Tuesday for $100 million in aid to the Contras.

In a meeting with top Republican congressional leaders, Reagan belittled the $27 million in "humanitarian" aid approved for the rebels, known as Contras, and urged an end to restrictions on military support.

Although the president said that the humanitarian assistance has helped "maintain the pressure of resistance" to the Sandinistas, he added that "more effective" aid is necessary.

"You can't fight attack helicopters piloted by Cubans with Band-Aids and mosquito nets," Reagan said in a statement read to the lawmakers.

Congress in 1984 banned military aid or ammunition for the Contras and required that the money approved be used exclusively for medical supplies, clothing and transport trucks. From the end of 1981 until the spring of 1984, the United States provided about $80 million in covert aid.

Reagan repeatedly has asserted that the Sandinista leadership is fomenting revolution and communism in Central America, backed by Cuba, the Soviet Union, Libya and North Korea.

Manuel Cordero, minister-counselor of the Nicaraguan

Embassy in Washington, termed Reagan's decision to seek a resumption in military aid "a slap in the face" to eight Latin American nations that have urged the United States to back peace talks in the region.

During his remarks on Nicaragua, Reagan was flanked by Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel, R-Ill.

After the session, which involved some 20 members of Congress, Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said that Reagan had called for $70 million in military assistance and $30 million in logistical and other non-lethal aid.

"I think it's a good program," Lugar told reporters.

"We have to decide whether we are going to have a Soviet base on this continent or not," he said. "Essentially we are going to have one if the Contras are not successful."

Lugar, noting that the current funding for humanitarian assistance to the Contras expires March 31, said he thought Reagan's formal aid request for the rebels in Nicaragua would be made in the near future.

Michel told reporters Reagan asked that the $70 million in military aid be administered "at his discretion," or secretly.

"There's some things that frankly ought to be done that can't be all that open and be effective," Michel said in defense of handling the military aid in a covert manner.

Train collision kills 69 passengers

SANTIAGO, Chile — Two crowded passenger trains collided on a bridge damaged last year by a terrorist bomb, and the chief government spokesman said today 69 people died and 510 were injured. Initial reports indicated 15 people were killed and some 200 injured in Monday night's collision, but the government's chief spokesman, Francisco Cuadra today put the number of dead at 69 and the injured at 510. He said 154 of the injured were seriously hurt. Scores of soldiers, firefighters and police worked all night to retrieve the injured and recover the bodies from the wreck near the town of Limache, 87 miles northwest of Santiago.

Israeli troops search for comrades

TYRE, Lebanon — Israeli troops and armor swarmed over south Lebanon with air and naval support Tuesday searching for two comrades captured by Moslem guerrillas, who threatened to kill one unless Israel withdraws. A Moslem extremist group said it had killed a Lebanese Jew kidnapped a year ago as revenge for the raid. Helicopter gunships strafed suspected guerrilla hideouts to support the hundreds of Israeli troops on the ground. Jet fighters crisscrossed the skies, breaking the sound barrier over Beirut, Tyre and Sidon. Lightly armed guerrillas fought advancing Israelis in the olive groves and tobacco fields. Lebanese radio stations claimed the resistance was stiff, but security forces reported only scattered fighting and said the powerful raiding force overwhelmed pockets of resistance. The captives were taken Monday in an ambush inside the "security zone" Israel maintains just north of its border with Lebanon. The Israelis mounted the rescue raid almost immediately, renewing it at dawn Tuesday. The Organization of the Oppressed on Earth said in a statement delivered to the independent Beirut newspaper An-Nahar that the kidnapped Jew, Elie Hallak, 52, was slain in retaliation for "terrorist operations Israel is conducting against our oppressed people in south Lebanon."

Art collector receives Paris' award

PARIS — Los Angeles businessman and art collector Frederick R. Weisman on Tuesday received the city of Paris' highest award for his contributions to the visual arts. "All of Paris can admire you as a patron of the arts," said Deputy Mayor Francoise de Panafieu in presenting the Vermeil Medal to Weisman, whose contemporary art collection is being exhibited in Paris for the first time. The Frederick R. Weisman Foundation Collection includes nearly 300 works by artists such as Andy Warhol, David Hockney and Jasper Johns. The Paris show is the first leg of the collection's two-year tour of major European and Far Eastern cities. After the tour, it is to settle in the foundation's permanent home, a mansion in Beverly Hills, Calif. The 73-year-old Weisman, who has been collecting contemporary art since the 1940s, made his fortune as head of the Hunt Food Corp. He said he was "enormously pleased" to have the show in Paris.

Safety board studies plane crash

FARMINGTON, N.M. — The National Transportation Safety Board is investigating a plane crash in northwest New Mexico that killed three Wichita residents heading home after a weekend of skiing. The dead were identified as Judith Boothe, 43, and her teen-age sons, Vance, 17, and Matthew, 14. State police Sgt. Richard Martinez identified the injured as Reginald Boothe, 43, the pilot and husband of Judith Boothe, and Thad Clements, 17, of Wichita, a friend of the Boothe boys. Boothe, a partner in a Wichita company that operates about 20 pizza restaurants nationwide, was being treated at the University of New Mexico Hospital in Albuquerque, but a hospital spokesman said the man requested no information be released. Clements was listed in critical condition Tuesday at San Juan Regional Medical Center in Farmington. Darla Romero, state police air search coordinator, said the Cessna 210 crashed Monday afternoon while on a flight to Wichita.

Jury sentences sailor for slaying

NEWPORT, R.I. — A black sailor on Tuesday was sentenced to life in prison for fatally stabbing a white lieutenant in the back aboard a Navy frigate at sea. Petty Officer 3rd Class Mitchell T. Garraway Jr. was spared the death penalty by an eight-member military jury that deliberated four hours. The same panel convicted Garraway, 22, of Suitland, Md., on Jan. 30 of premeditated murder in the slaying of Lt. James K. Sterner with a foot-long Marine survival knife. Garraway showed no emotion as Cmdr. Jean R. Kendell, president of the jury, read the sentence, which includes his dishonorable discharge and the forfeiture of pay.

Judge blocks Kaupaun's suspension

TOPEKA — A Shawnee County District Court judge Tuesday issued a temporary restraining order, blocking implementation of a one-year suspension of Wichita's Kapaun-Mt. Carmel High School from participating in post-season athletic competition and other extracurricular activities. Judge Fred Jackson scheduled a hearing March 3 on arguments whether to keep the injunction in effect while nearly 200 parents and students of Kapaun pursue a lawsuit challenging legality of the suspension handed the school by the executive board of the Kansas State High School Activities Association on Feb. 12. In their petition, the plaintiff parents and students allege the board violated the Kansas Open Meetings Act during a six-hour hearing and meeting to consider allegations that three student-athletes of the Catholic school had their tuition paid by someone other than their parents, a violation of association rules. It also contends the board exceeded its authority in imposing the suspension and violated certain due process constitutional rights of the plaintiffs. Attorney General Robert T. Stephan appeared at Tuesday's hearing before Jackson to urge granting of the temporary injunction. His office also revealed it is investigating the allegations of Open Meetings Act violations. The petition lists the names of 93 students and 106 parents, but there are a few duplications in the long list of plaintiffs' names.

First 'SGA Day' to feature 5 speakers

By The Collegian Staff

The Student Governing Association will feature five speakers in the Student Government Services office as part of the first "SGA Day" from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Thursday in the Union.

Rachel Vining, senior in agricultural journalism and student government communications chairperson, said each speaker will be allotted one hour. In general, she said, each speaker will talk for 15 minutes and the remaining time will be spent answering questions from the audience.

Brett Bromich, junior in business administration and member of the Coliseum Program Committee, will be the first speaker. He will talk about the latest information on the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for educational and student services, will speak at 11 a.m. about ways students can get more involved at the University.

Steve Miller, assistant director of the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, will speak at 1 p.m. about the athletic department and the proposed athletic fee.

George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, will speak at 2 p.m. about the possible increase in student fees.

William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, will speak at 3 p.m. about student recruitment and retention.

Vining said people may ask any speaker any question they want and they should be comfortable in coming and going as they please.

"The purpose is to give people a chance to learn what is going on in the University," Vining said.

Vining said anyone who comes into the SGS office on Thursday may fill out an entry blank and be eligible to win the job of student body president for a day in a random drawing.

Investigation delays Air Force shuttle launch

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The Air Force still hopes to launch a shuttle from the West Coast in July, but the much-delayed event is likely to be again postponed by the investigation into the Challenger disaster and doubts about the safety of new, lighter boosters.

Workers at the $2.8 billion launch complex at Vandenberg Air Force Base expect to start late this week assembling the lightweight boosters, Vandenberg spokesman Capt. Rick Sanford said. He said the assembly should be finished by month's end.

A statement issued by Vandenberg last week said preparations for a mid-July launch continue as planned, dependent on findings by the presidential panel looking into Challenger's Jan. 28 explosion, which killed its crew of seven.

"Until the causes of the disaster are understood and corrective action taken, obviously the system is not ready to fly," said Seymour Himmel, a retired National Aeronautics and Space Administration official and now a consultant to its Aerospace Safety Advisory Panel.

He called plans for a July launch "very tenuous at best."

Vandenberg's debut as America's second spaceport — originally set for last October — has been postponed twice because of construction delays, manpower shortages, problems in preparing military payloads and launch facilities, and troubles with NASA's overall shuttle schedule.

Even before the Challenger accident, it was doubtful that the July launch target would be met. Now, of course, there are hard new questions about the shuttle system.

A report last Wednesday by the NASA safety panel said there is considerable concern about the strength of the casings of the new booster rockets.

Questions also have been raised about the safety seals between segments of the rocket and how they might be affected by stresses caused by differences in construction of the launch pads at Vandenberg and Kennedy.

The lighter booster casings are vital to helping the Air Force overcome a serious weight problem at Vandenberg.

Shuttles from that base 140 miles northwest of Los Angeles will be launched into a polar orbit, so they do not get a push from the Earth's rotation as do most shuttle missions. Thus, a shuttle launched into a polar orbit will carry about half the payload of previous missions.

The total weight of the shuttle, boosters and auxiliary fuel tank at Cape Canaveral is about 4.5 million pounds. The new lightweight boosters will cut 66,000 off that total — and boost the payload weight from Vandenberg to 35,000 pounds.

Protest, boycott hit Philippine economy

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — The Philippine peso took its biggest plunge in 15 years Tuesday, and there were indications an opposition boycott called by Corazon Aquino was hitting the nation's already troubled economy.

Some top businessmen quit as advisers to President Ferdinand E. Marcos, and stock prices of the country's biggest manufacturing company fell after Aquino urged the boycott to protest declaration that Marcos won the controversial Feb. 7 presidential election.

The peso's value fell by 10.3 percent Tuesday, from 19.98 to the dollar Monday to 22.04 in trading at the foreign exchange center.

"The most important factor was market nervousness because of the political uncertainty," a government bank source, who demanding anonymity, said of the Philippine currency's decline.

Elsewhere, state prosecutors filed multiple murder charges against Arturo Pacificador, a powerful Marcos ally in the National Assembly, and 5,000 protesters took to the streets to denounce election fraud and what they claim was U.S. support for Marcos.

At a nearby church, Jose Concepcion, chairman of the National Movement for Free Elections, a citizens vote-monitoring organization known as Namfrel, wept for a volunteer who was shot to death when he tried to stop gunmen from stealing ballot boxes during the election.

Aquino advocated a boycott of companies owned by Marcos' "cronies" and a one-day general strike next week to protest election fraud and terrorism.

Coliseum plans must be reviewed carefully

University President Duane Acker will soon make an important decision about the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum. He must decide whether to accept a Coliseum Program Committee's recommendation to seek from the Kansas Board of Regents the authority to increase the project budget.

Tuesday afternoon the committee voted to recommend to Acker that planning should continue and that the budget should be increased, despite an apparent shortage of funds. The coliseum architect told the committee that he estimates the construction cost of the facility is $1.4 million above the $14.5 million currently allocated.

In a meeting of the committee in January both Athletic Director Larry Travis and alumnus Fred Bramlage stated that raising additional funds for the project would definitely consume some alumni donations for athletic scholarships. Thus it is unclear where the bulk of the money will come from.

One of four promises Acker made to the students in November 1985 about the coliseum is that money to cover any budget increase must be identified.

Unless sources of funding — that do not harm athletic or academic programs — are made known, Acker should not permit project planning to continue.

The worst thing Acker could do at this point is move too quickly and ask the regents for a budget increase without first determining exactly where money to pay the bills will come from. He should research the committee's recommendation carefully. He should not break his promise to students.

Vote in run-off today

Students should make their way to the election boxes one more time today to vote in the student body presidential run-off. Steve Johnson, sophomore in agricultural economics, and Steve Cashman, junior in marketing, are the finalists.

The president is the most visible element of student government. A successful candidate must be able to seize each opportunity to influence the decision-making process. To just go through the motions is not enough.

While most presidents have been able to use the position to effect change, the winner today should be especially mindful of the issues confronting us in the coming year. The winner must remain responsive to student concerns beyond election day.

Voting records should aid choice

Voters had a tough time last week choosing among the five student body presidential candidates.

Many students said the Collegian soapboxes were of little help because the Collegian did not ask the presidential candidates their views on certain student issues, as it did the Student Senate candidates. The views of the presidential candidates could be gleaned from various Collegian articles, but information on the candidates was lacking.

Now that the student body presidential race is narrowed to two, Steve Cashman, junior in marketing, and Steven Johnson, sophomore in agricultural economics, voters can more ably assess the similarities and differences. Both have accumulated voting records that may give the voter an idea, at least, of their past political behavior. The two claim that their political views have changed with time and caution voters not to place too much emphasis on voting records.

On the whole, Cashman's and Johnson's voting records differ little. Both voted "No" on the bills that were brought before senate last spring and again this fall calling for postponement of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum project until more studies could be completed.

In addition, the year before Cashman voted "No" on a proposal that would have added the word "student" to the title of the coliseum to recognize students' $7 million contribution to the project.

Both voted to reduce the recreational services budget by $3,000 during 1984-85 after Recreational Services Director Raydon Robel agreed to the reduction in order to fund the Sports Club Council.

In the previous legislative year, Cashman

CATHERINE SAYLER
Collegian
Columnist

voted against the reduction because Robel was out of town and could not be reached for comment. In the controversial sports club funding that year, Cashman eventually voted to allocate $3,113, an increase of roughly $400.

On the proposal to increase Students' Attorney Dianne Urban's salary by $800 last year, both Cashman and Johnson voted "No," as did they on the proposal to fund the Gay and Lesbian Resource Center. Just last week the two participated in the vote to allocate a portion of the $700,000 — made available from the refinancing of student debt — to finance the Holton Hall renovation project. Both voted to reduce the Holton allocation to zero.

Cashman's voting record from the 1984-85 Senate includes "No" votes for funding of the Coalition for Human Rights, the Early Childhood Development Laboratory and a fee increase for Lafene Student Health Center. He also voted against inclusion of mandatory maternity coverage in the student health insurance plan.

President Duane Acker reversed Senate's decision on the insurance plan and included maternity coverage because to do otherwise would have violated the Title IX protection against sexual discrimination.

Cashman is quick to point out that his early voting record does not reflect his views now. He believes that the Coalition for Human Rights should receive student activity funds and has a stronger appreciation for the importance of child care.

The only recorded differences in Cashman's and Johnson's voting records involve Debate Squad funding from the student activity fee, and the method by which student fee increases should be legislated.

Cashman has supported debate funding, while Johnson has not. However, both voted last week to give debate an $80,000 endowment from the $700,000 refinancing money. Johnson said his earlier "No" votes on debate funding reflects his position as a representative from the College of Agriculture.

Cashman and Johnson would support an athletic fee, but the method by which they would institute the fee is perhaps the biggest difference between the two. Johnson prefers to leave the issue to Senate while Cashman said he will insist on a student referendum vote. If Senate votes in an athletic fee, Cashman said last week, he would use his presidential powers to veto the Senate vote in order to force Senate to send the issue to the students for a vote.

Cashman and Johnson may have other differences in voting records but since not all issues went to a roll call vote, where either a "Yes," "No," or an abstention is recorded.

Voters have a tough choice today. Just where the two stand on current issues is still unclear. Students should query further and use the two's voting records as only one tool by which to judge the candidates.

Computer shortage

Editor,
I am taking a personal computing class which teaches students how to use popular software programs. We are supposed to use the computers in Fairchild Hall. I use the word "supposed" because it is ludicrous to think 500 students can use 16 computers and two printers to learn how to use WordStar. A grade school student can tell you this is close to impossible.

I tried to do my first assignment in WordStar, and I was down in Fairchild three different times. I was able to do my assignment in the printer-less room, but I couldn't get to a computer to print it. I finally asked a friend if I could use her computer to print my assignment.

If I am an average student, and I went to Fairchild three times, that would mean that those 16 computers and WordStar programs were used about 1,500 times.

It is true that some students can use other computers as I am right now. That doesn't excuse the school from having to provide the necessary equipment to effectively teach a course. I will be doing my essay assignment on a Commodore 64, but I resent it. I paid to learn WordStar, and the assignment was supposed to help me understand and learn aspects of the program. I am being cheated. Do you wonder why K-State keeps losing students?

Candidate qualities

Editor,
Some are excited, some are disinterested, some continue with optimism, as others look ahead to the future. Myself — I am confused, but also reassured.

In one form or another the Student Governing Association presidential election has tapped K-State, drawing from it a flurry of concerns, criticisms, hopes and expectations.

Having attended forums and viewed the similarity of platforms, I have drawn the much deliberated conclusion that the candidate with the better communication and leadership skills shall fill the position most successfully. How can this conclusion be justified?

The power of an SGA president to markedly "make Kansas State University a better place" is small and limited. Moreover, the issues the candidates support that are realistic are, for all practical purposes, the same. Therefore, with these two excellently qualified candidates, both heading in a common direction. The one who will travel the farthest is the one who can best bring the point across.

Knowing the candidates equally excellent qualifications and well-set goals, I am left but to choose a candidate on the criteria of presentation skills.

Steve Johnson, sophomore in agricultural economics, is professional, has excellent dialogue and mannerisms and would be most effective in lobbying...yes.

Steve Cashman, junior in marketing, is extremely personable...and good at shaking hands and kissing babies (if you will)...yes.

Again, myself — confused but also reassured. Reassured in that whoever wins, the other will take an important part in the goal setting and program implementation of the other.

We all take steps forward — to common goals — and we all are winners in the end.

Placing the blame

Editor,
Re: Jerry Strunk's letter, "Engineer Abuse," in the Feb. 17 Collegian.

So you want to be an engineer? It has been my experience that professional engineers are capable, hard working and responsible. Where do they get these traits from? Surely they don't come from immature students who hold someone else accountable for their own mistakes.

There are only two reasons students can be dropped from a class: not showing up for it, or not having the prerequisites. Neither of these requirements are unique to the College of Engineering, and both have a sound basis for existing. Whichever reason you were dropped for, those are the rules, and if you aren't responsible enough to follow them, then you shouldn't be allowed to graduate with any type of degree.

The goal of the college is not to cause hardship. The college has a responsibility to both the students and general public to ensure that the students who graduate are competent and capable of being professional engineers.

Can you imagine what would happen if students were allowed to graduate without a working knowledge of their field? Are math majors allowed to graduate without understanding calculus? The college cannot be blamed for having a curriculum which its students must follow to obtain a certain degree. If a student does not want to follow the recommended course list, he or she is free not to, but it becomes that person's responsibility to meet the requirements for a degree.

I have never felt that I was "dehumanized" when dealing with either the administration or my adviser. I feel that the administration has done an excellent in supporting the students. I agree that feeling alone is detrimental, but irresponsibility is inexcusable. I suggest the fault lies more with the student than it does with the college.

Leading fund raiser

Editor,
I would like to call attention to an inaccurate statement made by Whit Welch, Sig Ep Fite Nite director, in the Feb. 14 Collegian. In that article Welch claimed that the Fite Nite was the leading fund raiser on campus. This simply isn't true.

Last fall the men of Phi Gamma Delta raised over $5,000 for the Leukemia Society of America. We earned this money by going door to door in Manhattan asking for donations.

In the four years I've been at this University, we've raised over $15,000, not once falling below $3,000 in donations. All this from a fraternity that has only 43 in-house members.

Our much larger chapter at the University of Kansas raised over $10,000 this year, and combined we have raised over $70,000 in our Run for Leukemia's 12-year history.

I don't mean to belittle the efforts of the Sig Eps. Fite Nite is usually a good time, and it's for a good cause. I just feel credit should be given where credit is due.

Editor,
Re: Jerry Strunk's letter "Engineer abuse," in the Feb. 17 Collegian.

I want to work to become an engineer. This is the real world, not "Fantasia," and one of the laws is you don't get something for nothing. Yes, the engineering curriculum at K-State is tough, and for good reason: Engineers' mistakes cost people their lives (for example the Hyatt Regency accident in Kansas City). I think you are confusing dehumanization with motivation (or the lack thereof).

The electrical engineering requirements when I started at K-State were 133 hours of credit composed of a general engineering core, 15 hours of humanities and social sciences, 12 hours of complementary electives (non-electrical engineering courses), plus 16 hours of technical electives. This comes up to 32 percent of the curriculum being the student's choice.

The advising system of the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering is very efficient, when used. I have helped with pre-enrollment and student advising for two years. In that time I've learned that a lot of engineers are organized enough to figure out what they want to do without asking an adviser. But the advisers are there and are happy to help, the only problem being that they won't chase you down the hall and tell you what to do. They advise, but it is the student's decision.

To go through drop-add in the College of Engineering a student must have an adviser's signature (any faculty member is qualified), and the dean of engineering's signature. Students must have special permission to take more than 18 hours. This is to assure that they don't overload themselves.

The college requires that students have a C or better in any class that is a prerequisite for a higher level course, otherwise the college drops you automatically. If you were dropped from a class, you didn't meet the prerequisites; in other words, you didn't cut the mustard. That isn't the engineering administration's fault, so please give credit where credit is due.

Engineering is a tough field, and if students make it through the core of their curriculum, the faculty backs them all the way through graduation and beyond. I think that is the same attitude taken by the College of Veterinary Medicine. Only the "fittest" or "most motivated" remain for the upper-level courses, providing for a better teacher/student ratio.

I didn't come to K-State for a free ride, and I sure didn't get one. I came hoping to become an engineer, and now I'm almost there.

Rezoning possible for neighborhood

By JEFFREY J. BIELSER
Collegian Reporter

A large section of Manhattan is a step closer to rezoning after the action taken Tuesday by the Manhattan City Commission with the approval of an ordinance's first reading.

The section rezoned from R-3, multiple-family residential, to R-M, four-family residential is generally east of campus and north of Poyntz Avenue.

The major difference between the two ordinances is that current zoning allows construction of high-density units on 60-foot-width lots, while the new zoning restricts dwellings to a maximum of four units on the same size lot.

The new ordinance does not change requirements for single-family or duplex dwellings.

Larry Hulse, Manhattan chief city planner, said the main reason for the change is the impact of high-density units on residential neighborhoods.

The commission also approved a text change in the city's zoning ordinance to allow non-conforming structures suffering damages of more than 50 percent to be rebuilt.

Prior to the change, owners of such structures were required to obtain variances to rebuild structures with damages of more than 50 percent.

The commission also rescinded one resolution in favor of another concerning an agreement between the city and the Kansas Department of Transportation for the Southern Arterial Project.

The change was required for the city to proceed with the project's bid letting process, said Bruce McCallum, Manhattan director of public works.

McCallum said KDOT made minor changes in the original agreement with the city due to the arterial's construction in two phases.

He said KDOT put the arterial under two project numbers for its own bookkeeping reasons and funds for the project will be prorated, or distributed proportionally, for each of the phases.

He emphasized the city will receive all funds for the arterial, to be located on the vacated Rock Island Railroad right-of-way, which are allocated by KDOT.

Election to determine 17 members of council

By The Collegian Staff

The College of Arts and Sciences is sponsoring elections for Arts and Sciences Council from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. today in the upper level of the Union.

This year 30 students are running for the 17 open positions. This shows an increase of interest in the office from last year when 15 people ran for the 17 positions, said Don Smith, assistant to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

The council is responsible for allocating over $11,000 to clubs in the college. Members of the council also participate in the College of Arts and Sciences Telefund program in the spring and fall.

Several members of the council also serve on the course and curriculum committee, which changes or deletes curriculum requirements.

Candidates' applications will be displayed at the polls to help voters decide whom to vote for.

Smith said he believes the goals of the new council should be to perfect the new programs which have been developed this year.

Week of floods leaves Californians homeless

By The Associated Press

NAPA, Calif. — This waterlogged town in the heart of California's lush wine country called in the National Guard on Tuesday after a week of mighty storms drove the normally tranquil Napa River over its banks.

"We have 400 to 500 people in shelters, but I understand people who have left on their own could number in the thousands," said sheriff's Capt. Ken Narlow. "We have no way of knowing."

"The National Guard has been called out. ...We're surrounded by about 3 feet of water at the sheriff's station."

States of emergency were declared Tuesday in Napa, Sonoma and Humboldt counties by Gov. George Deukmejian, a preliminary step in making them eligible for federal disaster assistance.

In this community northeast of San Francisco, which is divided by the river, water peaked almost 5 feet above flood stage and flooded much of the downtown area.

Store entrances were sandbagged to keep water out. The Sonoma Valley Airport outside town was under water, the few planes it handles huddled on a small dry section of the field.

Napa Valley wineries reported little trouble, since grape vines are dormant during the winter and aging wine was safe indoors.

"We closed Monday and we're closed again Tuesday," said Chip Bouril, assistant director of operations at the Domaine Chandon winery in the little town of Yountville. "The winery hasn't had any serious flooding. I haven't been out in the vineyards, but there has been some erosion. ...There's a possibility later in the spring there could be some root damage if the soil remains waterlogged."

Lawmakers discuss lottery issue

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — As lobbyists on both sides of the lottery issue scrambled Tuesday to shore up their positions, House Speaker Mike Hayden predicted the chamber will pass a resolution allowing voters to decide whether to establish a state-owned lottery.

"It's down to a very small handful of votes," Hayden said after the House gave the lottery measure tentative approval on an unrecorded voice vote Tuesday. "I think it will pass."

However, spokesmen both for pro- and anti-lottery groups were more cautious. The Rev. Richard Taylor, director of the anti-gambling Kansans for Life at Its Best, said he believes floor debate Tuesday was an indication things are not going well for lottery supporters.

"I would certainly say they are in trouble," Taylor said.

Although lawmakers thwarted nine amendments during the debate, they approved adding a provision that would prohibit any advertising of the lottery — a move

Taylor said he viewed as a victory for anti-lottery forces.

Hayden and other legislative supporters of the lottery said they believe the advertising ban, a potentially fatal flaw in the measure, eventually could be removed before it wins final clearance from the Kansas Legislature.

If the resolution is approved by two-thirds of the 125-member House, it would next go back to the Senate for consideration of amendments.

Legislation to emphasize education

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — High school students should place more emphasis on their education than they do on participation in extracurricular activities, the House Committee on Education was told Tuesday.

"Those who seek to take advantage of the many fine extracurricular activities that are available should be challenged in their educational curriculum," said Rep. Mike O'Neal, R-Hutchinson. "We should be providing our students some incentive to excel or at least succeed."

O'Neal asked the committee to approve a bill he introduced that would require all high school students to achieve a grade point average of 2.0 or higher on a 4.0 scale before they can participate in extracurricular activities.

If a student received a lower GPA in any one grading period, under the bill's terms, the student would then be suspended from any extracurricular activities.

Under current law, students must pass five courses with a grade no lower than a D-minus in order to participate in extracurricular activities. However, each school district is allowed to invoke stricter requirements.

"It is argued that for some students a D is the highest grade they can hope to achieve with their abilities, and the extracurricular activities may be the only thing keeping those students in school," O'Neal said. "I suggest that the student knows all he has to do in order to participate in the activities is to obtain a minimum passing grade in his courses."

Bill Curtis, a spokesman for the Kansas Association of Public Schools, said he is against the proposal because most schools already have rules concerning minimum GPAs.

Horticulture Club places in show

By DAN SMITH
Collegian Reporter

The Horticulture Club's display at the Topeka Flower, Lawn and Garden show last weekend received second place in the educational division for its tie-in with the "Hawaii" theme.

The show, at the Topeka Municipal Auditorium, is a yearly event in which the club members try to participate.

The 32 club members spend approximately five hours a night the week before to get ready, said Jim Stambaugh, senior in landscape design and president of the club.

"Our club is notified a year in advance of the theme," Stambaugh said.

The purpose of the show is to promote horticulture in Kansas, and to encourage the public to become involved in horticultural pursuits, he said. It is also used to raise money for K-State endowment scholarships.

"We also take this opportunity to attract more students to our University, which is not that difficult when you have around 1,400 people attending the show," Stambaugh said.

"This year, we took second place in the educational class, but the past two years we took first place," said Kevin Kelly, senior in horticulture and chairman of the club's committee which prepared for the Topeka show.

The plants taken to the show are all grown on campus, including some exotic things like the banana tree the club took this year, Kelly said.

Decorations of tropical plants are placed throughout the auditorium, and the public is given samples of different tropical fruits to try, Stambaugh said.

The other displays at the show included chemical, lawn treatment, tractor and florist companies, nursery and greenhouse suppliers.

This year the club spent $250 for the show, Stambaugh said. The cost included cardboard, paint, cloth, wood rental and transportation to and from the show.

Other activities coming up for the club include the bedding plant sale, which will be the first week of May. This is a fund-raising activity where students start plants from seed and grow them to a marketable size to sell, he said.

"The club is open to all majors, and only costs $2 for the whole year," Kelly said. "There are no qualifications that members must meet, except to pay their fees."

The club was established 21 years ago and has participated in the Topeka show for the last three years, Stambaugh said.

Brown's student body presidential term soon to conclude

By JOLA MURPHY
Collegian Reporter

The end is near for the "Party" Party. The student body presidential term of Steve Brown, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, ends Feb. 27.

Brown said he believes he had a successful term but now is ready to let someone else take over.

"Now I can get back to school," he said. "I've missed a lot of classes because of meetings."

Brown said he spent an average of 20 hours per week in the Student Government Services office and attended at least one meeting a day since he was elected president last spring.

"I feel like a lot has been accomplished since I started my term," Brown said. "I spent several hours on the Student Advisory Committee, which is currently working on the teacher evaluation program."

Brown was also on the search committee for Vice President William Sutton and is currently a member of the Presidential Search Committee to replace Duane Acker, current University president. He is also a member of the Coliseum Program Committee.

"People don't realize how much time and effort people put into these committees," he said.

Brown was on the Student Advisory Committee. This year, the SAC approached the Board of Regents about receiving a higher education manual of several universities to be used for comparison costs and degrees available. The regents agreed to work with the SAC.

"I think image is K-State's biggest problem right now," Brown said. "We don't go out and sell the University like KU (the University of Kansas) does. The new student body president is going to have to work to sell the University. We've got the talent — we just need to market it."

Brown says the key to increasing enrollment is recruitment and retention of students.

"If we can sell the University we'll get recruitment and retention," he said. "This is why I feel the new president should abolish the current college ambassadors program. We need someone to go out and sell the University in general and not each separate college."

Brown is also concerned about the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum. "I'm all for the new coliseum but I will not vote for anything that exceeds the budget or that is not quality," Brown said. "I think the reason so many students are against building it is because they really don't understand what it's all about."

Brown said Farrell Library should not be an issue during the term of the new student body president.

"If students are really concerned about the library, they should join Friends of the Library," Brown said. "It's a good way to show your support for the upkeep of the library. I joined it and it only costs $5."

Brown said students should try to get to know the new student body president and senators by visiting with them in the SGS office in the Union.

"A lot of people probably don't even know where the office is at," he said. "I would like to encourage any student who has a question or a complaint to visit the office instead of writing letters to the editor."

Brown said it's hard for him to pinpoint the best candidate.

"It's hard to say who the best candidate for president is," Brown said. "I guess the best candidate is the one who wins the students' votes."

Lafene staff notes rise in flu cases

By KIM KINSLOW
Collegian Reporter

Cases of influenza at the University "have at least doubled, if not tripled," this year, said Dr. Larry Moeller, physician at Lafene Student Health Center.

The staff at Lafene is treating about 20 to 25 students with symptoms of influenza per day, he said.

"I am definitely seeing more cases than last year," Moeller said.

Influenza symptoms include muscle aches, fever, dry cough, headache and sore throat. These symptoms sometimes resemble a severe cold.

Students can prevent contraction of influenza by taking a vaccine against the disease, but this preventive measure must be taken in the autumn if it is to be effective. The vaccine reduces or eliminates the possibility of contracting influenza, Moeller said. The cost of the vaccine is $3 at Lafene.

The vaccine is usually only good for one year because the influenza strain develops immunity to the previous vaccine. The only other preventive measures which can be taken are the usual good health habits, such as eating nutritional foods, drinking lots of water, getting rest and exercising, Moeller said.

Once someone contracts influenza, there is medication available to combat the disease. The medication is called Amantidine, but only works on the influenza strain A. Patients are usually advised to take this medication because it is hard to distinguish between strains A and B, Moeller said.

Influenza usually hits the elderly and those with chronic illnesses the hardest, but anyone is susceptible to the disease.

"Kansas appears to be a hot spot right now for influenza. There is no age limit but those with chronic diseases such as heart, lung and diabetes problems are at the greatest risk," Moeller said.

Virginia Shepard, spokesperson for the Shawnee County Health Department, said there "is an increase in the amount of kids missing school because of influenza."

Influenza appears in cycles and during the period from November to February when it's in full swing. Influenza can linger for up to two months, but if it is promptly taken care of with the proper medication, it can disappear in two to three weeks, although some symptoms may linger, Moeller said.

Lady Cat Theza Fitzpatrick, left, congratulates Tracey Blecinski after a second-half play in which Blecinski was fouled while scoring in the Cats' 83-65 win over Oklahoma State University Tuesday in Ahearn Field House.

Staff/Chris Stewart

K-State trounces Cowgirls

By DARAN NEUSCHAFER
Sports Writer

K-State guard Susan Green described the Lady Cats' play lately as a "total team effort," and last night in Ahearn Field House, the Lady Cats continued that team effort in downing the Oklahoma State Cowgirls, 83-65. "Everybody has started to put it together, and we are finally playing as a team," Green said. "It is basically a total team effort. It's more of a team concept now."

Green paced the team effort, which saw five K-State players score in double figures, with 16 points. Last Saturday against Iowa State, the Lady Cats had six players reach double figures.

Lady Cat coach Matilda Mossman said she believes her team is finally realizing they can score and beat people.

"I think we figured out that if we score points we can beat some people," Mossman said.

K-State has scored 70 or more points in four of its last five games, and appears to be ready to make a run at the league leaders come postseason tournament time.

"The last two games, along with the second half of the Oklahoma game, have probably been our best team play of the season," Mossman said. "I just hope it continues."

In the first few minutes of the contest, things didn't appear as though they were going to be as easy as they turned out to be with Oklahoma State grabbing an early 10-2 lead. But K-State battled back to regain the lead with an 11 point outburst.

The two teams traded baskets for much of the remainder of the half, until K-State put together a 10-4 run at the end of the first period to take a 39-31 halftime lead. Green hit six of those 10 points with three straight jumpers from the top of the key.

Oklahoma State stayed in the game during the first half thanks to the efforts of Jamie Siess and Clinette Jordan who combined for 25 of the Cowgirls' 31 points. Siess, who had 15 in the first period, finished with a game-high 25 points, most of which came on long range jump shots.

Siess' efforts were not enough, however. In the second half, K-State got its transition game going in full force and turned the previously close contest into a blowout.

The Cowgirls appeared to be outmanned as K-State shredded the Oklahoma State full-court press to score some easy baskets.

"We have been trying to play since December with only six players, and it was apparent tonight that we just can't match up with teams when we get in this physical type of game," Oklahoma State coach Dick Halterman said.

K-State's transition game opened things up for the Lady Cats' Carlisa Thomas, who was held scoreless in the first half. Thomas, who has been K-State's offensive leader in recent games, did not contribute much in the first half, as she was forced to sit out much of the half due to early foul trouble.

But in the second half, Thomas found the faster pace to her liking as she ran the K-State fast break to perfection. She handed out four assists and scored eight points for the game, all of them coming during the second half.

Mossman was glad to see her team was able to play well, even though Thomas did not have a particularly good first half.

"I was happy that everybody picked up the slack tonight for Carlisa," Mossman said. "It seems lately that if Carlisa played well, we played well, and if Carlisa didn't play well, we didn't play well."

Baltimore may sit out USFL's fall season

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Commissioner Harry Usher said Tuesday that the United States Football League is prepared to play next fall without the champion Baltimore Stars, whose owner suggested that the USFL consider scrapping the 1986 season.

"We've been drawing up a seven-team schedule if it comes to that," Usher said. "We're working on the assumption that we'll have an eight-team league but if we have to play without Baltimore we're prepared for that also."

The commissioner's comments came as the USFL, already down to eight teams from 14 last season, prepared for meetings here Wednesday to plan its first season in the fall following three in the spring.

Originally called as a procedural and housekeeping session, the session was presented with a new and explosive issue last week, when Myles Tanenbaum, owner of the Stars, told the Baltimore Sun that the USFL should consider remaining idle until its $1.32 billion suit against the National Football League is resolved. That led Herschel Walker of the New Jersey Generals, one of the league's last remaining high-priced stars, to say he would join the NFL's Dallas Cowboys if the USFL did not play in 1986.

Tanenbaum, the USFL's last original owner, has contended in the past that the league's survival depends on the lawsuit rather than what has happened on the field.

Felton interested in Wildcat position

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

George Felton says he just wants to be honest with people about his interest in the head basketball coaching job at K-State.

A story in Monday's editions of the Kansas City Times revealed Felton, who is currently associate head coach at Georgia Tech, has applied for the position.

The job opened up with the recent resignation of Jack Hartman.

Felton didn't hide his interest in the K-State job in his statements to the Times. After an interview with the Collegian Tuesday afternoon, Felton still appears interested in the K-State position.

He said Athletic Director Larry Travis' presence at K-State and the tradition of Wildcat basketball have attracted him to the job. Travis is a former assistant athletic director at Georgia Tech.

"My entire approach in the situation is to be honest. It's a big step for me and a big step for the school...

"I've been associated with Coach Travis for roughly three years at Georgia Tech," Felton said. "I also know Kansas State has a fine reputation. The people I talked to (about K-State) thought the job was good. It's rich in tradition. I think it would be a great opportunity."

Felton said he and Travis are well acquainted with one another.

"I've been in close contact with him in different areas of emphasis in the (Georgia Tech) program," Felton said. "Yes, I can say I've had a close relationship with Coach Travis."

Much of Felton's background at Georgia Tech includes work as a recruiter.

"When I first came, we needed players, so I spent much of my time trying to attract players to come to Georgia Tech," Felton said. "Both assistant coaches spent a lot of time on the road and came to practice when they could."

Felton called recruiting "a strong point" with him.

"Recruiting is one of the most important keys to the longevity of a program," he said.

Felton said if he were to be offered and accept the job, he would "try to have an equal balance and recruiting."

"If the job were offered to me and I accepted, my largest responsibility would be to talk to those who have not signed and see if they have an interest in Kansas State," he said.

"As you know, there is an early signing period and a majority of major college players have already signed. However, some of those have not signed."

Felton said if he were hired, he would like to sign one or two players who could make an immediate impact on the program. He said a center, a guard and a small forward would be at the top of his recruiting list.

He also said he was somewhat familiar with the players K-State has returning next season.

"(Norris) Coleman is a good player. (Benny) Green too. They also have some other kids returning that are starters that have potential," he said.

If K-State is going to hire Felton though, it may not be without some competition from Oklahoma State and Florida State, two other schools in search of a new head coach that have shown an interest in Felton.

Felton said he has not had much contact with Florida State, but hopes to talk to athletic directors from Oklahoma State and K-State soon.

"All I'm looking to do within the next four to five days is to talk to Coach Travis and the athletic director at Oklahoma State, Myron Roderick," Felton said. "I want to sit down and talk with those two schools and see what they have to offer and what direction they plan to take with their programs."

"And if things work out good with both, it could lead to an interview and a visit to each campus."

Hansen's sense of humor persists, despite being fired as OSU coach

By TIM FITZGERALD
Assistant Sports Editor

Paul Hansen is keeping his wits despite the announcement last week saying he would not be rehired as the head basketball coach at Oklahoma State.

Hansen, a man always known for a quick wit, proved his firing hadn't taken away his sense of humor following Oklahoma State's defeat of Missouri Saturday. Hansen was shocked to see so many members of the press show up at his team's game.

"I haven't ever seen this much media here before. Is this my funeral?"

The Cowboys aren't particularly pleased about the firing of their coach — ask Missouri. The Cowboys pounded on the Tigers Saturday 86-65 at Stillwater, Okla.

All this emotion may lead to fireworks when Hansen and Jack Hartman, two Big Eight coaches who will not be returning next season, meet tonight in Ahearn Field House to do battle for the last time, barring a meeting in the conference tournament.

It would be an understatement to say Hartman and his Wildcats have had a long week.

The Wildcats took two road trips this week, and in the process faced the No. 2 and 3 placed teams in the conference — Oklahoma and Iowa State. On top of that, both teams had substantial home court winning streaks going.

Yes, K-State's hands were full when the team traveled to Norman, Okla., Feb. 11 and to Ames, Iowa, Saturday. And, as it turned out, the two teams were just a little bit too much for the young Wildcat squad to handle.

Now the Wildcats can finally come home and Oklahoma State can be the ones doing the traveling.

But, Hartman finds himself in an unfamiliar position — Ahearn hasn't been that friendly to his Wildcats this season. K-State owns a 1-4 Big Eight record at home.

The Oklahoma State team visiting Ahearn tonight is not the same team everyone thought it would be after losing its two leading scorers to grades at the semester break. Most people believed the Cowboys would flounder, but Hansen's squad is 4-6 in the conference and is beating some teams which might have earlier counted a win against the Cowboys.

Tonight's game, which pits the sixth and seventh place Big Eight teams against each other, is vital for the Wildcats (3-7 in conference play) as they attempt to climb up the ladder and avoid a match-up with Oklahoma in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament.

Hartman tried to shuffle his lineup Saturday against Iowa State for more points on the scoreboard, but the tactic didn't work as designed.

"They (freshmen) have been coming on. We tried to get some more offense into the lineup," Hartman said.

The Wildcats made late-game runs at both the Sooners and the Cyclones, but the rallies fell short.

Big Eight coaches subject to rumors

Just when you thought the Big Eight Conference had turned the corner in basketball and had begun to gain some of the respectability the conference has had in football for so many years, rumors and reality have cast a shadow over the future of the conference as a legitimate basketball power.

The Big Eight has based a great deal of its turnaround on its eight fine head coaches — several of which are numbered among the most respected coaches in the nation by their peers.

The list is a virtual "who's who" of the coaching profession. Norm Stewart, Larry Brown, Jack Hartman, Moe Iba, Billy Tubbs, Paul Hansen, Johnny Orr and Tom Apke — any other conference in the nation would love to have a lineup featuring even half of these men.

With recent announcements by K-State and Oklahoma State, however, and the rumors surrounding the programs at Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa State and Colorado, it is possible — although not highly probable — the conference may have six new coaches next season.

Jack Hartman started the ball rolling downhill with his announcement Jan. 30 that he would be stepping down as K-State's head coach effective at the end of the year. With Hartman's announcement, the rumor mill among the writers covering the conference started producing some of its best information in recent years.

One of the biggest early rumors, and one which was confirmed just last week, was that Paul Hansen would be fired at Oklahoma State. Shortly after the rumors started, the Oklahoma State athletic department announced Hansen had in fact been released from his duties effective at the end of the season.

This announcement came at about the same time Iowa State Head Coach Johnny Orr was mentioned as a possible successor to Ohio State head man Eldon Miller, who resigned the week after Hartman. With Orr's ties to the Big Ten Conference (he was the former head coach at Michigan), he would seem a likely choice for the Ohio State job.

DAVID SVOBODA
Editor

Two other rumors involve KU's Larry Brown and Nebraska's Moe Iba. Iba was rumored to be headed to Oklahoma State to replace Hansen. K-State assistant Darryl Winston was rumored to be a candidate to replace Iba.

Brown, who came to KU from the National Basketball Association's New Jersey Nets, was rumored by ESPN commentator Dick Vitale to be a top candidate to replace Hubie Brown with the New York Knicks. With the recent announcement that Brown's wife has taken a job with a New York public relations firm, the rumors would seem to have credibility. Not so, said Brown on Vitale's radio program Monday night.

The final rumor involves Colorado's Tom Apke. Apke is reportedly on shaky ground because of several consecutive sub-par seasons. This would appear to be the rumor with the least amount of substantiation.

Norm Stewart, who is the mentor of Big Eight coaches, and Billy Tubbs, who has Oklahoma in the top 10 every season, appear to be the only coaches in the conference whose positions haven't been surrounded by controversy in recent weeks. And even Tubbs was rumored Monday to be going to the University of Houston to replace the retiring Guy Lewis.

Rumors are just that — rumors. Chances are the Big Eight will see only Hartman and Hansen replaced before the coming year. The conference has established itself as a power with these fine men as coaches, and Big Eight fans like myself hope these men realize how truly valuable they are.

Record-breaking rifle team may win intercollegiate title

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State rifle team is almost sure it has the national championship locked up, said Alan Arwine, the team's player-coach.

At the National Rifle Association Intercollegiate Rifle Sectional Saturday in Manhattan, the team set a new national championship team record in the air rifle event, scoring 36 points more than last year's national winning score.

Awards will be given at the All-American Awards Ceremony at the United States Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md., March 15. K-State's Arwine and Andrew Vikman have been nominated for the All-American team.

Arwine, Timothy Putnam, and Vikman also qualified for the United States shooting team tryouts in June. The U.S. shooting team will compete in the world championships at Suhl, East Germany, this September.

Tigers post 71-62 win over ISU

By The Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Derrick Chievous scored 18 points and Jeff Strong added 16 more to lead Missouri to a 71-62 Big Eight Conference victory over Iowa State Tuesday night.

Chievous and guard Lynn Hardy scored six points apiece as the Tigers outscored the Cyclones 21-4 in an eight-minute streak that ended at 9:23 of the first half. Missouri outrebounded Iowa State 20-8 during the stretch.

The Cyclones hit only 34 percent from the field during the first half and only 36 percent for the entire game. Missouri, which made 45 percent of its attempts from the field in the contest, led 37-27 at intermission.

Missouri scored eight unanswered points at the start of the second period to take its largest lead, 51-35, with 15:33 to go in the game.

Iowa State battled back with an 18-8 scoring burst led by six points each from Jeff Gray and Ron Virgil, but it was as close as the Cyclones could get.

Hardy and center Dan Bingenheimer threw in 13 points each for Missouri, which raised its record to 19-12 overall and 6-6 in the Big Eight.

Palpators Inc. won the contest and will travel in March to a regional competition in Des Moines, Iowa.

Team shares experiences with rancher

By DIXIE GLANVILLE
Collegian Reporter

Bill Lynch, commercial feedlot operator from Dodge City, has made a definite impact on Evon Lynch, senior in animal sciences and industry, and three other members of last year's winning Department of Animal Sciences and Industry Academic Quadrathlon team.

Evon Lynch came across Bill Lynch's name last year when she was searching through her pile of names during the College of Agriculture telefund.

The Lynch Mob, as the team was called, had just made it into the K-State finals of the quadrathlon when Evon ran across Bill's name and decided to call him.

"I called him and he seemed real interested and sincere. I thought gee, I ought to tell him about the Lynch Mob," Evon said.

Bill and Evon are not related. "We got to talking and then he said 'I'll tell you what. If the Lynch Mob wins, we'll host you in Dodge City for a weekend,'" she said.

The team won the contest and Evon called Bill to tell him the good news. Bill kept his promise and they set April 13 and 14 as the dates the team would go to Dodge City.

Meanwhile, Lora Henry, freshman in veterinary medicine; Randy Milne, graduate in reproductive physiology; Tim Tyson, senior in animal sciences and industry; and Evon traveled to Chicago, Ill., to compete in the regional contest.

"We took second, losing out to a tough Missouri team," Evon said.

They pulled out Saturday morning, April 13, for Dodge City and arrived at 4 p.m. Then Bill took them on tours of the feedlots.

"We were all animal science majors, or had that interest, but none of us had ever worked or grown up on a commercial feedlot," Evon said. "We got to see quite a few of them out there."

"That's their industry out there, it's like dairying in Wisconsin," she said.

The group investigated feed rations and the feed-processing units, ear-tag systems, drainage systems, handling, storage and the cattle-pen system.

After the tours were over, the group went out for dinner. As the evening progressed, the dinner conversation turned toward snow skiing.

"Skiing is one of Bill's loves. In fact, on his Ford Bronco, his license plate says 'skier'," Evon said.

"If I were single and 21, I would spend every day on the slopes," Bill said.

"He then proceeded to make us an offer to take us skiing over Christmas break," she said.

"Tim, I and a friend took him up on the offer," Evon said. "We drove out to Copper Mountain Jan. 9 to go skiing. We skied Keystone on one day. We headed home Jan. 14, with Bill picking up the tab for the trip."

Henry and Milne were unable to make the trip due to prior commitments.

Bill, a 1958 K-State graduate in agriculture education, had only been back to campus once since his graduation. Evon wrote a letter to him inviting him to visit the campus as a gesture of appreciation for all he had done for the team.

Department faculty and team members took Bill to lunch last Thursday.

Bill seized the opportunity to visit with the faculty about things that affect the business he is in (commercial cattle feeding).

"They really picked his brain to find out what he thought about the curriculum and the facilities as a whole," Evon said.

"The thing he noticed that had changed the most was interaction between faculty and students," she said. "When he was here the students and faculty were miles apart because the faculty were considered upper echelon. They didn't socialize with the students."

"There is a camaraderie between faculty and students that wasn't there before. We made it through the '60s and now the students are no longer afraid or suspicious of anyone 35 years of age or older," Bill said.

They took Bill around Weber Hall to show him the facilities. He also attended a marketing class with Evon and Tyson.

"I saw the flow of information being handed out and being received by students," Bill said. "The transfer of knowledge was very refreshing."

He recalled the meats laboratory was in Waters Hall when he was going to school here, Evon said.

The rest of the visit consisted of touring the Veterinary Medicine Center and watching videotapes of the oral presentations and the lab practical portions of this year's quadrathlon.

Thursday night Bill had the opportunity to sit in on some of the quadrathlon events and Friday morning he and team members toured the dairy unit, beef research unit and some of the other animal science units.

"It was important for us (the team) to get him up here because he hadn't been here in so long and he is so curious. He asks 'is this still there — is that still there?'" she said.

"He gets pleasure from pleasing. It's Bill's nature. He gets pleasure from doing stuff for others that he thinks they normally wouldn't get to do, like the skiing trip," she said.

"The number of teams in the K-State quadrathlon is up to 19 this year, up three from last year," Smith said.

"The quadrathlon consists of four different events," said C.L. Norton, professor of animal sciences and industry.

"The first of which is a public presentation. The participants have 90 minutes to get their thoughts together on a subject they select," Norton said. "The teams are given an opportunity to choose from a pre-selected group of topics."

"They then have 30 minutes to present an extemporaneous speech on their topic. Participants attempt to present the pros and cons of their particular topic," he said.

The second event is a laboratory practicum. This demonstrates the students' skills in identifying equipment or demonstrating procedures used in animal sciences.

"Each team is given 15 minutes per station, at six different stations, to identify equipment or demonstrate a procedure," Norton said.

A written examination covering general agriculture and animal science topics is the third event. The questions are written at a senior academic level.

"A quiz bowl rounds out the competition," Norton said. "The teams compete on a head-to-head basis. Each quiz-bowl round ends after 40 questions have been used or at the end of 20 minutes, whichever occurs first. Teams compete on a single-elimination basis."

"This (the quiz bowl) is a demonstration of how quick-on-the-draw the contestants are," he said.

The quiz-bowl scoring is based on the round when a team was eliminated and then ranked, therefore the lower the score the higher the rating.

The students who participate as team members in the quadrathlon can get one hour of credit through Animal Sciences and Industry 661. Most of the team members are animal science or pre-vet students, Norton said.

"This is a tremendous learning experience. It makes the students participating aware of areas in agriculture," Smith said.

However, Leslie Longberg, controller for the Foundation, said Tuesday he believes interest and dividend income on coliseum donations will be used to cover the shortage. No indication had been given by Foundation executives that the additional revenue is available. The amount of the extra funding has not been calculated, Longberg said.

Budget estimates on the coliseum during the past several months have fluctuated widely. Livingston, a partner in Gossen Livingston Associates, told the committee in January the project would cost a minimum of $500,000 and a maximum of $1.1 million more than budgeted. Regent architect Warren Corman told the committee the figure was closer to $2 million more than estimates.

A group of architects working on the project met Tuesday morning before the committee meeting to review Livingston's cost analysis and agreed that the redesigned coliseum can be built within the new budget.

If the regents grant a request this month to increase the budget ceiling, final coliseum documents could be complete in September and bids opened Oct. 15. Construction would begin in December and be finished in October 1988.

A decision was made to include $350,000 in concrete piling and support structures to prevent the foundation from cracking when the soil shifts and resettles.

The committee has been meeting regularly since August 1985, when all bids on the coliseum were $3.4 million over budget. All the bids were rejected by the University and Livingston agreed to redesign the facility.

Athletic administration offices, coaches' offices and a concession/restroom facility have been eliminated from the base bid in an attempt to bring the project within budget.

The coliseum is to be funded with $7 million in student fees and $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, which has received a line of credit from the Foundation for its share of the cost. The Foundation is responsible for the remainder.

Police question man for locker room visit

By The Collegian Staff

A complaint was filed with the campus police on Sunday regarding a foreign male in his late 20s seen in the women's locker room at the Natatorium.

According to Karen Foehse, graduate in food science, the man was standing at the end of the lockers watching her undress when she saw him. Foehse immediately wrapped a towel around herself and asked him what he was doing in the locker room.

"He asked me if this was the men's room," Foehse said. "I tried to explain to him that he was in the women's locker room and that he was not allowed in here. He seemed to understand what I was saying."

Foehse told the lifeguard about the incident and the campus police department was notified. The lifeguard said a young girl had seen a man in the locker room earlier that day. Two more women noticed the man after Foehse told him to leave. Campus police took him to the station for questioning.

According to Richard Herrman, investigator for the KSU Police Department, the subject told the police that in his country men and women shower and dress together. The officers explained the customs that are followed in the United States.

"I could understand if he made a mistake one time, but he made it three times," Foehse said. "After I explained to him how to tell the difference between the two locker rooms, I was sure he would leave but he didn't. I think he's some kind of weirdo."

The man told Foehse he had just arrived three days earlier from Nigeria.

Apparently no advances were made toward any of the women by the subject. No arrests were made.

Ag committee passes bill to boost farm aid

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — State Treasurer Joan Finney's proposal to make it harder for financially strapped farmers to lose their farmhomes and surrounding 160 acres in bankruptcy and foreclosures Tuesday advanced past the Senate Agriculture Committee.

Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa and chairman of the committee, said the proposal is not a "savior" but will help some Kansans faced with the loss of their homes during poor economic times.

"This isn't going to solve the farm crisis, but it is a step," Allen said. "This is going to help a few people, but it's not a savior. It's just one of many bills we're going to consider this session."

The bill now advances to the Senate Ways and Means Committee. It was double-referred, meaning it must win a stamp of approval from both committees before it will reach the Senate floor for debate and action.

Allen said the extra committee step was added because the bill calls for using $500,000 state tax dollars and it was appropriate for the budget panel to consider the bill.

Finney's bill would create a review board to help farmers who have attempted to restructure their loans without success and have already called the Farm Assistance Counseling and Training Referral hotline seeking assistance in preparing cash-flow projections and are facing foreclosure.

Farmers could petition the credit board to review their cases. The board would attempt to mediate and negotiate between the bank and the farmers and restructure the debt so the farmer could save as many acres as possible.

Film shows reality of feminist conflicts

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

At the beginning of "Pumping Iron II: The Women," the camera slowly pans down the nude body of a woman bodybuilder. The camera is inches from the woman, following her contours, her rippling muscles. This beginning is definitely voyeuristic, but it also sets the conflict to come: What is the meaning of femininity? Holding on to the notion of feminine beauty creates some real problems when women bodybuilders step on stage with biceps thicker than the necks of many men.

Film Review

George Butler, also the maker of the first "Pumping Iron" movie (which turned Arnold Schwarzenegger into a star), isn't just filming a bodybuilding contest, the 1983 women's World Cup Championship; he helped put the event together. A large part of the movie's $1.5 million budget went into paying for the rooms at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas and into building the proscenium on stage. Butler even took an active role in finding the women to compete. This was to make sure there would be some drama and conflict before his camera.

For this purpose he flew to Australia to convince Bev Francis, a world-record powerlifter with 16½ biceps (who can squat lift 470 pounds), into competing. Francis then trimmed down from 180 pounds to just 140. The results are stunning. No one in the contest has anywhere near the same muscles as Francis, but that brings up the question of whether muscles alone are necessary to win the competition.

Rachel McLish, the two-time Miss Olympia and winner of the 1982 World Championship, is lithe in comparison to Francis, but McLish knows how to work the crowd and the judges. She wiggles her hips and blows kisses.

The judges then end up arguing over just what they are looking for. Does a woman have to look like a woman? What is a woman supposed to look like? What is femininity and should that be used as a criteria in the judging?

The judges can't agree. One woman judge is repelled by Francis. She shudders and says how a victory by Francis would be the worst thing possible for the sport.

The spokesman for the bodybuilders ends up being a black bodybuilder named Carla Dunlap.

First-day blood donations under goal

By RON RENO
Collegian Reporter

The annual University spring blood drive began Tuesday, but it fell almost 50 pints behind the daily goal set by the American Red Cross. Volunteers collected 301 pints, short of the original goal of 350.

The drive lasts from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Tuesday through Friday and is located in the KSU rooms on the second floor of the Union.

The equipment and qualified personnel are supplied by the Wichita division of the Red Cross, but the students are responsible for setting it up, said Karen Grause, junior in accounting and student co-chairperson of the drive.

Grause said last semester's drive, which also had a total goal of 1,400 pints, fell short on the first day. Last semester's drive, however, ended up with a total of 1,509 pints, and she said she hopes the same pattern occurs this semester.

Troy Millsap, junior in secondary education and the other co-chairperson of the drive, expressed some anxiety about making the goal. "That's a lot to make up," he said.

Grause and Millsap are both members of the Circle K International service organization sponsoring the Bloodmobile during both the spring and fall semesters on campus.

The blood donated by students is used to service most of Kansas (except for the Kansas City area) and a large part of northwestern Oklahoma, said Chick Ciccarelli, mobile unit assistant with the Red Cross.

Ciccarelli said donors with all blood types are welcome, but added donors with O negative blood are always in demand because that type can mix safely with all others.

Besides being a "good thing" to do, Grause said she sees the competition with the University of Kansas as an added incentive to students. In the past, K-State has donated more than KU, and Grause said she would like to see the trend continue.

Circle K also fosters a competition among students within the University. Plaques are awarded to the winners of the greek living group division as well as both the large and small residence hall and cooperative living group divisions.

Grause said each team receives one point every time a person from that organization donates a pint of blood or serves as a volunteer worker for two hours. Grause said volunteers are still in demand.

Volunteer donors and workers are given the opportunity to sign up for a certain time, but those who walk in are welcome as well, said Grause.

Another advantage to giving blood besides helping others, Ciccarelli said, is that donors and their families receive the blood itself free should the need arise.

Grause said the hysteria surrounding AIDS may cause some to be reluctant to donate, but said their fears are groundless.

"There is absolutely no possibility of getting AIDS from donating blood," said Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center. "There is nothing that comes in contact with the donor that has ever been in contact with anyone before."

Committee considers land lease allowance

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Farmers who lose land to creditors should be the first people considered when those creditors want to lease the land, witnesses told a House committee Tuesday.

The House Agriculture and Small Business Committee is considering a bill that would require creditors to meet first with the former owners of farm land and the creditors want to lease, if the former landowners want to lease the land back.

If a former landowner is able to farm the land and has access to the equipment to do so, that person would be given the first opportunity to lease the land under the bill.

Supporters of the measure said it is designed to help Kansas' troubled rural economy by keeping farmers on the land and in their communities. But an opponent said such legislation could end up hurting farmers in the long run.

Ivan Wyatt, a lobbyist for the Kansas Farmers Union, told the committee the bill would help farmers in trouble by helping them continue their operations.

And, if the rural economy is given a boost, financial institutions in rural areas also will be, said Bill Fuller, a lobbyist for the Kansas Farm Bureau.

Cisneros discusses Mexican immigrants

By SARAH KESSINGER
Staff Writer

Mayor Henry Cisneros of San Antonio, Texas, said he does not see himself as a spokesperson for the Hispanic community, which makes up a large percentage of his state's population.

But he was put into that position during a question-answer session following his All-University Convocation Tuesday as he discussed Mexican immigration in the United States.

The problem of immigration across the U.S.-Mexican border exists as a problem in the Sun Belt area because the number of incoming Hispanics has grown in the past decade, he said. The Mexican-American population is seen as the fastest growing ethnic group in the United States today.

Cisneros said although the United States has had a large flow of immigrants before, Hispanics are concerned as they see dark hair and faces, strange foods and clothes and hear a different language.

"I think the problem is natural ethnocentricity and the notion of keeping the country as homogeneous as possible," he said. "I think (the problem) will take a very ugly form and take its toll on Hispanics who are naturally born here."

"Bandaid solutions" such as putting a fence along the border will not solve the problem, he said.

"Mexico suffers from sagging oil prices, debt and industrial stagnation. America must realize this — that there is hunger and a need to work," he said.

Cisneros said blocking poverty stricken immigrants coming from Mexico would only force them back into an already poor country and potentially cause revolution.

The solution to "getting the Mexican economy started," Cisneros said, comes with getting the government to hold multi-lateral discussions with U.S. businesses and to allow more American investment.

"It's not our fault that Mexico is in the state they're in, but we can't ignore it," he said.

Cisneros also discussed Central American issues at a press conference before the convocation. Cisneros was a member of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America in 1983 where he wrote a dissenting note calling for an end to U.S. aid to Nicaragua.

Costa Rica is the "Switzerland of Central America" with no army and a sound democracy with exchange of power between parties at each election. The country has lately found itself battered by economic problems, Cisneros said.

Honduras houses a large American presence and has seen a buildup in military in both Honduran and American forces, he said.

"Hondurans welcome the United States because of their fear of sharing a long border with Nicaragua, which they feel could easily be transversed by Nicaraguans," Cisneros said.

"I wish to reduce the American presence in Honduras, and I think that ought to be a goal of the U.S. policy to return it to the independent democracy that it can be."

Guatemala is one of the most repressive nations of the area, with severe human rights violations, he said. Elections this year brought to power a centrist with strong democratic credentials.

But discrimination against the Indians of the area who have been forced to flee into southern Mexico has been so serious that President Carter lifted United States assistance to Guatemala until it restored democracy, Cisneros said.

El Salvador is an interesting case, he said, because of its president, Jose Napoleon Duarte. Cisneros regards Duarte as "one of the truly heroic figures of the southern hemisphere."

"Duarte finds himself in the very difficult position of squarely in the center," he said, with leftist guerrilla forces in the field and a right-wing military and paramilitary, known for its brutal death squads, which demand a share of the power.

"He is trying to get a handle on the forces almost by sheer force of personality" to forge a democracy, Cisneros said.

people's lives the federal government does not, Cisneros said.

In too many places today the picture of America's cities is one of decline, he said.

"It is (a picture) of an urban reservation populated by permanent underclass, places of drugs and lawlessness, neighborhoods in decline, the investment and physical structures eroding, tax bases deteriorating... abandoned by Washington, ignored by the metropolitan area of which they are a part, families breaking up, a fixture of economic bankruptcy and spiritual exhaustion," he said.

Cisneros said in order for cities to continue to be "the engines of our nation's economy and democracy" they must have both a defense and an offense.

The dramatic cuts the government must make to reduce the deficit will mean the breakdown of domestic government as it is seen today, he said.

Cuts will affect extension services, law enforcement, education and housing, he said.

Not everything is negative for America's cities, he said, as racial integration, women's rights, urban renewal and central city redevelopment have shown significant progress. But, Cisneros said, he is afraid of how much these will be eradicated in the next few years.

The cities need a defense for these kinds of problems, he said. But, those which will succeed are the cities who maintain an offense as well who become "masters of their own destiny."

"The cities that are pro-active in the same sense as universities or businesses or individuals, who have a sense of where they want to go, will be better off than those who don't," he said.

"The history of America's cities is full of incidents and examples where that kind of vision has paid off," Cisneros said, citing New York, Boston, Houston and Dallas as examples of "not an accident, not fate, but human determination."

Cisneros said he sees the latest development in cities as a "new infra-structure" which holds small businesses as critically important and creates small business incubators which provide a place for businesses to begin.

"It's not fate, chance or an irreversible tide of history we've lived. It's reason, principle; it is the work of our own hands," he said.

"assumed" the deficit away."

"After looking over the CBO annual report, you almost need sunglasses because of the glow," said Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., the panel's ranking Democrat. "It's quite a reversal from last year's predictions."

Penner said his estimates were, as usual, based on the CBO's assumption that current law will dominate, including this year for the first time the deficit-reduction law designed to force a balanced budget by fiscal 1991.

He said looking only at the $37 billion cut outlined in the report "greatly underestimates the task."

The $37 billion would be taken off the already-reduced spending levels that take effect March 1 under the deficit-reduction law known as Gramm-Rudman. The March 1 cut is scheduled to trim $11.7 billion in spending, equally divided between military and domestic programs.

Another round of cuts would be ordered for Oct. 1, the beginning of fiscal 1987, if Congress and the president don't approve spending bills to meet the deficit target another way. That cut would take another 8.4 percent from domestic programs, on top of the 4.3 percent March cut.

Military spending, cut 4.9 percent March 1, would drop another 6.2 percent.

Donor solves coliseum budget crisis

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

A contribution of $640,000 from the major donor to the 13,500-seat Fred Bramlage Coliseum will solve the current budget crisis, and could clear the way for approval of the revised design and budget, President Duane Acker said Wednesday.

The gift from Fred Bramlage, a Junction City businessman, in addition to other funds previously collected and committed, would allow financing of the $15.9 million construction cost agreed to by the project architect and University officials Tuesday.

"Certainly (the contribution) is a vote of confidence in Kansas State University and illustrates the enthusiasm that Mr. Bramlage has for the University," Acker said.

Bramlage had previously contributed $1.75 million to the project. His new gift brings that total to $2.4 million.

"We, of course, know his dedication to the University is pretty deep. He visited with me over the last several days of the need to be sure funds were available to build the coliseum," Acker said.

The coliseum's total cost — including construction costs, the architect's fee and finishing touches — is now estimated to be $17.5 million. The original design called for a 16,000-seat building at a total cost of $16.1 million.

"We all want (the coliseum) to go. There is only one way to do it, and that is to get the money," Bramlage said. "K-State needs it. The money is there to do the project."

Jack Goldstein, chairman of the KSU Foundation and Manhattan businessman, met with key donors and informed Acker that with Bramlage's additional gift, interest income on early pledge payments and other funds channeled through the Foundation, the budget shortfall could be met.

Leslie Longberg, controller of the Foundation, said the bulk of the money Bramlage decided to commit to the project is currently invested in certificates of deposit.

Initially, the money was given anonymously and was not specifically designated for the coliseum, Longberg said. It was hoped the money could be used to support the activities of the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, he said.

Bramlage had the final say in how the money was used, Longberg said.

"Certainly the budget problems are taken care of. I have spent a lot of time going over the figures and everything looks great," he said.

Following disclosure of the anticipated construction cost Tuesday by coliseum architect Bill Livingston, of Gossen Livingston Associates of Wichita, the campus committee monitoring the project recommended to Acker that project planning continue.

Acker must review the committee's recommendation and, if comfortable with redesign plans, request approval from the Kansas Board of Regents to remove the $14.5 million budget cap so Livingston may begin developing construction documents.

Arthur Loub, executive director of the Foundation, said the University fund-raising organization had $8.1 million in pledges before Bramlage made his gift. However, at least $350,000 of the pledges are uncollectable, he said.

Although that left more than $7.7 million for use on the coliseum, the sum could not cover the $650,000 shortage.

The project has been under review since August 1985, when bids on the then planned 16,000-seat coliseum were all at least $3.4 million above the maximum budget of $14.5 million. All the bids were rejected by the University and Livingston agreed in September to abide by his contract and redesign the facility for free.

Since that time 2,500 seats, administrative offices and coaches offices, and the concession/restroom

Johnson wins race drawing more than 55 percent of vote

By LEANNE STOWE
Campus Editor

Steven Johnson received 1,134 votes, 55.9 percent of the total 2,028 cast, in Wednesday's Student Governing Association election to become the new student body president.

Johnson, sophomore in agricultural economics, edged out Steve Cashman, junior in marketing, who got 704 votes. Cashman collected 852 of the 2,778 votes cast in the primary election Feb. 11 and 12 compared to Johnson's 704 votes.

"I'm really excited about it. I'm not a real emotional guy, but I really am just overjoyed," Johnson said after getting the call telling him the election results.

"I know it was a very close race and I know Steve (Cashman) is a very capable guy and the elections proved that. I'm really looking forward to the coming year and I hope we can be successful in keeping in touch with the students and working to execute the position as well as possible," he said.

Johnson said he wants to get to know the people he will be working with.

"The first thing will be getting acquainted with the people I'll be working with," he said. "I'll be trying to find out the channels I'll work through — find the positions I will have to fill and fill them."

Positive action is what Johnson said he believes the University needs.

"On whatever we decide on the (Fred Bramlage) coliseum we need to be working to improve the image that we have across the state so that we can get more people excited about our University and attract them here," he said.

"Right now there are still a lot of answers to come in on the coliseum if anybody knew exactly what to do I'm sure we'd be doing it," he said.

Johnson said he believes decisions that affect students need to have student input.

"We need to say this is what we're going with and my main role there will be to see if it's along with the student interests," he said. "We need to hit it positive and go that direction."

He said the $640,000 additional contribution by Bramlage to the coliseum fund is a positive step.

"I think the plans still do accomplish the interests that we need to. I've looked into the alternatives, and the problem there is that we don't have enough seats (with renovation of Ahearn Field House).

"I think we could be successful either way, but I think a new building does have some things to offer and I also realize that some people won't agree with that — my opinion won't be the only one that counts. It is im-

U.S. notes Marcos' election fraud, threatens to close Philippine bases

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Accusations of election fraud and veiled threats to close U.S. military bases descended on President Ferdinand E. Marcos from Washington on Wednesday. Corazon Aquino, who claims she won the presidency, spoke of mass revolt.

Marcos accused his Western allies of meddling and raised the possibility of declaring martial law, which he did once before during his 20 years in power. On Wednesday he got the first, and only, congratulatory message on his disputed election victory, from the Soviet Union.

The National Assembly, whose canvass is final, declared last Saturday that Marcos had won the Feb. 7 election, but an independent poll-watchers' group said its count showed Aquino the victor. Marcos supporters hold two-thirds of the assembly seats.

In Washington, the Senate declared by an 85-9 vote that the elections were "marked by such widespread fraud that they cannot be considered a fair reflection of the will of the people of the Philippines."

Sen. Richard Lugar, an Indiana Republican who led a team of U.S. observers, said before the vote that he and his colleagues had seen widespread fraud.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz hinted that the Reagan administration would consider withdrawing from Clark Air Force Base and Subic Bay Naval Base if it decides Marcos kept power by fraud and no longer has his people's support.

"Let's put our stake in democracy and freedom above the bases," Shultz told the Senate Budget Committee.

U.S. aid is a major factor in the Philippine economy, and American officials have tied future support for the government to an election that is perceived by Filipinos to be free and honest.

The 68-year-old president said early Wednesday that he would "exercise to the limit the provisions of the law and the constitution to prevent turmoil."

He noted that the constitution, which he designed, gives him "certain powers that can dismantle the machineries of civil disobedience," but he did not say which ones he would use. His special powers include ordering arrests, ruling by decree and declaring martial law.

Aquino, 53, went to Angeles City on the outskirts of the Clark base for her first post-election rally outside Manila and declared: "Let us not rest until we have brought down Marcos."

The opposition leader, whose husband, Benigno, was Marcos' chief political foe until his murder in 1983, told 20,000 people at the rally that she had been warned she might be killed.

"My answer is that when Marcos and his puppets planned the death of Ninoy (Benigno's nickname), they probably told themselves that it would be all right to kill him because after a month or two people will forget, but they were mistaken," she said.

"This is my message to Marcos and his puppets: Do not threaten Cory Aquino, because I am convinced that I am not alone, that many of my countrymen are ready to come to my help if Marcos and his puppets have any evil plans."

The military said Aquino was killed by a communist agent. Gen. Fabian C. Ver, the army commander, 24 other soldiers and a civilian were acquitted of murder and conspiracy charges in the assassination.

Philip Habib, President Reagan's special envoy, met with Vice President-elect Arturo Tolentino on Wednesday but continued a four-day silence about his talks in the Philippines. A U.S. Embassy spokesman said Habib would remain here at least until the weekend, meeting with government, opposition, business and church representatives.

Embassy officials said no decision had been made about who would represent the United States at Marcos' inauguration next week.

Aquino called for strikes and school shut-downs on the day after Marcos' Wednesday inauguration for a new six-year term, and urged a boycott of banks and newspapers owned by Marcos' "cronies."

Aquino, who had vowed to lead daily demonstrations if she was cheated at the polls, has also called on military and police to disobey orders that were "unjust."

Federal commission says engineers warned against ill-fated launch of shuttle

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — At least three NASA officials involved in the decision to launch space shuttle Challenger were not told that booster rocket engineers had "strongly urged against the launch," the presidential commission investigating the accident said Wednesday.

Upon learning of that problem last Friday, the commission ordered the space agency and booster rocket maker Morton Thiokol "to collect and retain any and all documents, memoranda or personal notes of all persons" who took part in the decision to launch the shuttle on its ill-fated flight of Jan. 28.

The three NASA officials, described as "key," were not identified in the commission statement issued by spokesman Mark Weinberg.

CBS News, however, identified them as Associate NASA administrator Jesse Moore, Robert Sieck, the launch director, and Arnold Aldrich, shuttle manager at Johnson.

The announcement came as a Morton Thiokol engineer in Brigham City, Utah, said that he and others argued against launching the shuttle in weather far colder than on any previous flight.

Allan J. McDonald, who has been at Morton Thiokol for 26 years, said his objections were overruled by his boss, J.C. Kilminster, who transmitted a launch approval letter to NASA. McDonald said he continued to object to the launch even after the letter arrived at Cape Canaveral.

McDonald said he feared the low temperatures, which dipped to 24 degrees overnight before the late-morning launch, would cause synthetic rubber safety seals between segments of the booster rocket to shrink and become ineffective.

Such a failure has been cited as a likely cause of the accident.

Morton Thiokol, through spokesman Thomas Russell in Chicago, conceded that its engineers were against the launch initially on Jan. 27.

But Russell said that "at a subsequent time in the early evening, after considering some additional information, Morton Thiokol was in a position to recommend a launch."

He declined to say what the information was or whether the decision was made over the objections of some Morton Thiokol engineers.

Train collision results in 4 arrests

SANTIAGO, Chile — A station master and three dispatchers have been arrested for routing two passenger trains into a head-on collision that killed at least 58 people and injured 510, authorities said.

The Monday evening collision of the trains, packed with more than 600 vacationers, was Chile's worst rail disaster.

Mayor Alejandro Vial of Limache, the nearest town, said two dispatchers at the Limache and Penablanca stations were arrested Monday night in a court-ordered investigation of presumed negligence.

Police detectives said they also arrested a dispatcher who worked on the track between Penablanca and Limache, and the acting supervisor in charge of both stations, who is based in Limache.

The chief government spokesman, Francisco Cuadra, said 154 people were severely injured and the death toll could rise as soldiers, police and volunteer firefighters cut into the wreckage with blowtorches in search of trapped victims.

The crash occurred in a Pacific coastal mountain valley 87 miles northwest of Santiago. Two-way rail traffic had been reduced to one track since guerrillas bombed a bridge in September 1984.

Last year, Cuadra said, 69 bombings damaged rail property and thieves took down 632 communications cables, apparently to resell the copper wire.

The trains were dispatched at dusk onto the same winding segment of track from different stations. One was a four-car eastbound express from coastal resorts to Santiago, the other a two-car train headed from Los Andes to the coast.

France refuses asylum to Duvalier

PARIS — France on Wednesday officially rejected a request for asylum by deposed Haitian president Jean-Claude Duvalier, a French attorney for Duvalier said.

The attorney, Sauveur Vaisse, said on a radio interview show that the request was formally rejected by the French Office for the Protection of Refugees. An official of that agency, citing his office's rules on confidentiality, said he could not comment on the lawyer's statement.

Duvalier, 34, his family and a group of supporters have been sequestered in a luxury lakeside hotel in southeastern France since arriving Feb. 7 aboard a U.S. Air Force transport plane from Haiti. He fled Haiti in the face of growing anti-government unrest in the impoverished Caribbean nation.

The French repeatedly have said they only accepted Duvalier temporarily at Washington's request until a permanent refuge could be found. No country acceptable to Duvalier has offered to take him.

Washington apparently also refused to accept Duvalier, scuttling France's plans to send him to the United States.

Only Liberia has indicated a willingness to accept Duvalier, the former "president-for-life" known as "Baby Doc," but Vaisse has said Duvalier does not want to go to Liberia.

Michener recovers after operation

AUSTIN, Texas — Author James Michener was recuperating in stable condition Wednesday after undergoing quintuple heart bypass surgery, officials at Seton Medical Center said.

Michener, 79, a professor emeritus at the University of Texas, was hospitalized Saturday after complaining of chest pains. Doctors operated Sunday night, said hospital spokeswoman Linda McFarland.

"He did not have a heart attack. They did detect some blockages, and the doctors decided now was as good a time as any to perform the bypass surgery," McFarland said.

During bypass operations, surgeons remove veins from another part of the body and use them to replace clogged arteries, McFarland said. She said the operation is fairly common.

She said Michener likely will undergo a typical recovery program, including exercise and diet consultation.

Singer introduces new 'Libra' shoes

MIAMI — Spanish singing idol Julio Iglesias has already captured women's hearts, and now he's after their feet.

As some 300 screaming women broke through police lines at the Dadeland Mall to get within heavy-breathing distance of Iglesias, the singer introduced his "Libra" line of shoes on Tuesday.

"I am a Libra. That's why they're called Libra," he told the crowd of his Spanish-made line of multi-colored pumps, flats and sandals with prices that start at $42. There is also a men's collection.

"I'll buy a pair in every color if he'll only kiss my mother," said Alina Sed, 28.

Not everyone was impressed.

"They look like nurses' shoes," said Shirley Hamilton, 51.

"Bowling shoes," sniffed Diana Figueroa, 40.

Senate joins 96 nations in treaty

WASHINGTON — The Senate Wednesday approved a 37-year-old treaty making genocide an international crime.

The vote was 83-11 in favor of a resolution ratifying the pact, which has already been approved by 96 other nations. It began as a reaction to the holocaust of World War II, when millions of Jews were killed by the Nazis.

The vote was a special victory for Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., who has risen on the Senate floor daily since Jan. 11, 1967, to urge ratification of the treaty. He has made more than 3,000 speeches calling for ratification.

The treaty makes it an international crime to kill or injure members of national, racial, ethnic or religious groups.

President Reagan urged ratification of the pact in October 1984, and last December he again asked that it be approved.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, told his colleagues that "today is a day I know many have long awaited."

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said, "it is long past due that we approve this."

But Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., called the treaty "a great constitutional evil" and said that although he opposes genocide, he thinks the pact may infringe on American sovereign rights.

Assassin kills newspaper executive

GLENDALE, Calif. — An executive of the Philippine News, a newspaper opposed to the regime of Ferdinand Marcos, was shot to death at home Wednesday after receiving a threatening note, authorities said.

Several shots were fired in Oscar Salvatierra's bedroom at his single-story home in the foothills north of downtown Los Angeles, said police Sgt. Randy Tampa.

Aides to Sen. Alan Cranston, a longtime friend of Philippine News publisher Alex Esclamado, said the FBI had been asked to protect Esclamado and other News executives who had received similar threats.

Cranston said he was taking seriously suspicions that agents of the Marcos government were involved in the death.

"What Marcos has done to his country is criminal. He must not be permitted to export his criminal activities to this country," the senator said.

The newspaper published a 1982 story that said Marcos wore fake medals and that $9 million had been offered to Esclamado to cease publication, said Ben Aniceto, Los Angeles editor for the News.

Bill to give house historical status

TOPEKA — The House Ways and Means Committee endorsed Wednesday and sent to the House for debate a bill permitting the state Historical Society to acquire the Charles Curtis home and preserve it as a historical site.

The action came after two House members, the president of Historic Topeka Inc. and a history buff urged the panel to support the bill and create a memorial to the only native born Kansan to serve as vice president of the United States and as a U.S. senator and member of the U.S. House of Representatives.

Curtis, whose father was a soldier and mother was a Kaw Indian, was the nation's 31st vice president, serving in 1929-33 under President Herbert Hoover. He died in 1936 at the age of 76.

His home, now 106 years old, is located at the corner of 11th and Topeka Ave. across the street west from the Capitol complex near downtown Topeka. It is distinguished by its unique Moorish architecture.

Joseph Snell, director of the Historical Society, has placed the probable value of the property at $180,000 and also has estimated it will cost about $240,000 to renovate the home, because it is in a severe state of deterioration.

Man pleads guilty to car accident

OSWEGO — A Coffeyville man pleaded guilty Wednesday to charges in an auto accident that left an 18-year-old woman dead.

Richard A. Axthelm, 23, pleaded guilty to aggravated vehicular homicide, driving left of the center lane and driving with a suspended license.

In exchange for the guilty pleas, charges of driving under the influence and driving without liability insurance were dropped.

Sentencing was set for March 19.

Axthelm was charged following a Dec. 27 accident in which Rachael D. Moses of Chetopa was killed. She was a passenger in a car driven by Axthelm which went out of control, left the road and traveled more than 250 feet in a ditch before striking a culvert.

More students vote in council's election

By The Collegian Staff

More than four times the number of people voted in this year's Arts and Sciences Council elections as compared to last year, said Don Smith, assistant to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

The council is responsible for the allocation of about $11,000 to clubs in the college and members are expected to participate in the telefund, the telestudent, which boosts recruitment of prospective and admitted students, and serve on one or more of the council's committees.

The 17 students who will be on the council and the number of votes they received are:

Michael Armstrong, sophomore in pre-law, 68; Susan Brent, sophomore in political science, 110; Ann Clifford, junior in journalism and mass communications, 68; Monica Daniels, junior in public administration, 70; Erin Elcher, junior in journalism and mass communications, 66; Judy Goldberg, junior in journalism and mass communications, 80;

Robin Harnden, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, 78; Patty Hipsler, junior in political science, 171; Carrie Cox Mannell, junior in arts and sciences, 68; Andrew Martin, junior in chemistry, 91; Michael Morris, junior in journalism and mass communications, 66; Brian Nelson, senior in political science, 88;

Todd Schultz, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, 75; Julie Sinclair, junior in political science, 69; Jack Taylor, sophomore in microbiology, 69; Teresa Temme, junior in journalism and mass communications, 85; and Shelly Wakeman, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, 90.

Supporters certain of lottery's revival

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — After suffering a major defeat in the Kansas House on Wednesday, lottery supporters said they're confident a measure still can be pushed through the 1986 Legislature that would allow voters to decide whether to establish a state-operated lottery.

"That was round one," said Mike Swenson, press secretary for Gov. John Carlin. "Now we're ready to go on to round two."

The House rejected the Senate-passed lottery resolution on a vote of 79-46. The measure fell five votes short of the 84 needed for two-thirds approval in the 125-member chamber before a constitutional amendment can be submitted to voters.

It was the first time in Kansas' 125-year history the issue had reached the House floor for a vote. The resolution would have liberalized the Kansas Constitution by removing a prohibition against gambling on anything other than bingo games.

The final tally came after nearly an hour of pressure-filled waiting while supporters tried to persuade opponents to change. At one point, vote changes brought the total to 80 in favor and 45 against but supporters were unable to sway any others and one final vote change left the total at 79-46.

The resolution cleared the 40-member Senate, 28-11, in action last April.

"What happened today was really very positive because it was the first vote ever on a lottery in the House," said Swenson, who added the roll call vote forced lawmakers to line up on one side or the other.

"We have today significantly narrowed the focus on who we need to work with to get the necessary votes," Swenson said.

Although the Rev. Richard Taylor Jr., chief lobbyist for Kansas' anti-gambling forces, said he was pleased with the House action, he said he didn't know how long he could hold off Carlin, House Speaker Mike Hayden and other lottery supporters.

"Who knows," Taylor said, refusing to speculate whether lottery opposition will erode. He said that Kansas business leaders should note the House action and realize that lottery is bad for the state.

"Hopefully, some businessmen across Kansas will start using their heads," Taylor said, referring to the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and Industry's support for the lottery.

"Everyone knows that gambling has been bad economic news."

Swenson said lottery supporters were discussing new strategies Wednesday afternoon but said he was unsure of what would be the next move.

Hayden, R-Atwood, said a motion to reconsider the vote would be offered Thursday and that he believes he has the 84 votes necessary to pull the parliamentary maneuver and keep the resolution alive. The speaker said he did not know when the resolution itself again might be put to a vote in the chamber.

Swenson, Hayden and House Minority Leader Marvin Barkis, D-Louisburg, agreed that lawmakers from urban areas who voted against the proposal would be primary targets for arm-twisting by lottery supporters.

"There's no partisan fault here," Swenson said.

Rivers recede; disasters claim 13 lives

By The Associated Press

Torrents of muddy water from a week-old series of Pacific storms continued cascading across the sodden Western states Wednesday, and the estimated number of flood refugees rose past 11,000. But some rivers receded and people began returning home.

At least 13 people were dead and three were missing in floods, mudslides, avalanches, icy roads, high wind and smashing surf from Southern California into Canada.

Hardest hit was Northern California with up to 22 inches of rain and 9 feet of snow in the mountains. Reservoirs were brim full, towns and farmland were flooded and water and landslides blocked major highways.

"There's no town left," said Guerneville, Calif., resident Beatrice Wood. She and nearly 600 other residents were stranded in a church and were removed Tuesday by helicopter. The unincorporated resort community north of San Francisco remained under water Wednesday, although the Russian River had receded 6 feet from its record peak of 49 feet; flood stage is 32 feet.

The sky cleared over some areas during the morning, and while more rain was forecast, "it looks like we're on the uphill side of things now," said Ed Clark, a National Weather Service forecaster. "We're expecting more rain on Friday and Saturday, but it doesn't look like it's going to be as major as anything we've had in the last week."

Area residents begin to return home

Elsewhere, rain during the night caused renewed flooding that forced the evacuation of up to 750 people in northwestern Nevada, and sandbag crews were hurried back out in one northern Utah county. Many Nevada state office buildings in Carson City were closed and 15 square blocks of the downtown area were flooded. Part of one Colorado town was evacuated during the night.

"It's raining hard and the river is rising and the streams in the upper valley are coming up," emergency services director Brad Dee said Wednesday in Utah's Weber County. Streams in the region had receded Tuesday after damaging 300 homes and eroding roads.

Floods had chased more than 11,000 northern Californians from their homes since the series of storms arrived Feb. 12, said Dick Thornton in San Joaquin County because of danger of levee failure and more had fled homes elsewhere.

The normally wet town of Kentfield, about 40 miles north of San Francisco, had the highest amount of rain with 21.98 inches in just seven days, weather officials said. In northern California's mountains, the Heavenly Valley ski resort reported 9 feet of snow.

About 400 people were evacuated overnight in the northwestern Colorado town of Hayden after Mayor John Sundberg declared a state of emergency, but they were allowed to return home Wednesday morning after Dry Creek receded.

In Utah's Morgan County, Commissioner Ken Adams said water was receding but "several hundred" homes had water damage and estimated the flooding caused $250,000 in damage to roads. Weber County sandbag crews were sent back out during the night as a fresh storm system hit northern Utah and streams rose.

Nevada authorities had estimated Tuesday that the weather had done about $10 million in damage, but that was before Wednesday morning's renewed flooding around Carson City, Gardnerville and Dayton.

Freshman devotes efforts to agriculture

By ROXIE MCKEE
Collegian Reporter

LaReina Waldorf, freshman in agriculture journalism, devotes most of her time to agriculture, whether it is for a class, club or simply enjoyment.

Even though Waldorf is only a freshman, she already has a long list of accomplishments in agriculture.

Waldorf is currently the state reporter for Future Farmers of America, president of International Junior Brangus Breeders Association and was the 1984-85 Miss International Brangus Queen.

"FFA is the nation's largest youth organization," Waldorf said. "Members are 14 to 21 years of age, and there are currently 434,000 members nationwide. The collegiate chapter at K-State meets once every two weeks and has 25 active members."

Waldorf is not yet a member of the collegiate chapter, but may join at a later date.

"There are seven FFA districts in Kansas and as state reporter, I travel to the different districts throughout the year," she said. "We make visitations and talk about the FFA. We call it boosting the greenhands (first-year members of FFA) along."

As a state reporter for FFA, Waldorf writes agriculture stories for The Kansas Future Farmer, which is printed four times a year.

"I help our state executive secretary, Mr. Earl Wineinger, publish The Kansas Future Farmer, which is a newspaper-type publication," Waldorf said.

She is currently working on the State Convention issue which will come out in the first part of June.

Waldorf was elected as state reporter last June, which is a one-year term of office. She has been active in FFA five years. She has been particularly busy during National FFA Week, which began Feb. 15 and runs through Saturday.

"This is our week to promote FFA. We want to encourage students to see more than just the farming aspect. There are over 200 career opportunities available to agriculture students," Waldorf said.

"Only 2 percent of the agriculture population is actually involved in production," she said. "There are 23 to 25 million people who work in different phases of agriculture."

"These opportunities are what we want to promote," Waldorf said.

Waldorf is also president of the International Junior Brangus Breeders Association.

As an officer, one of her main duties is to help plan and conduct the National Junior Heifer Show, in August in Collierville, Tenn.

"One of our main duties is to go out and find sponsors for our shows," Waldorf said.

Waldorf also served as the 1984-85 Miss International Brangus Queen.

"The competition is held every June and involves various interviews, luncheons, and activities," she said. "They (judges) look for good speaking ability as well as your ability to get along with others your age."

The competition is nationwide, and each region sends a candidate. Kansas is now a regional association, but it wasn't at the time she was competing, Waldorf said.

"I was just representing Kansas," she said, "and competed against girls from Oklahoma, Texas, and Arkansas to win the competition."

As Miss International Brangus, Waldorf went to the major Brangus shows within her region and awarded ribbons to the winners.

"Basically I served as a goodwill ambassador for the breed association," Waldorf said.

She also had various speaking engagements as queen to further promote the association.

Waldorf said her family is supportive of her work in agriculture.

"Both my dad and my brother have registered herds. My dad has been involved with Brangus since 1978," Waldorf said.

Waldorf said she has six registered Brangus show heifers and remembers the first time she showed as "very frightening."

She said after shows they usually sell their heifers, which is sometimes hard because it is easy to grow attached to them.

"Almost every year I've gotten too attached," Waldorf said.

Waldorf points out that raising Brangus is expensive, but at times it can pay off.

"One of my Brangus won the National Show of Merit in Oklahoma City, where it sold for $20,000. I was really fortunate that year. She was the sale-topper," Waldorf said.

Waldorf said her agricultural interests stemmed from her love for animals.

"I'm an animal lover and this is a great opportunity to work with animals," she said. "Hopefully when I graduate I can get into some form of ag publication — basically beef publication, like the Brangus Journal."

Search for president continues with vigor

It is unfortunate that K-State appears to have lost a University presidential candidate with impressive qualifications.

John Slaughter, chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park, reportedly withdrew his name from those being considered. Slaughter is a 1956 graduate of K-State and has also been the director of the National Science Foundation in Washington, D.C.

The reason for his withdrawal seems to have been because his name was released as one of nine semifinalists for the presidency.

There are valid reasons both for and against releasing and publishing candidates' names. On the one hand, the public should have the right to inspect the credentials of a person who is vying for the University presidency. If search proceedings are kept closed, as they usually are, the public must place great trust in the small number of people charged with finding the best person for the job.

On the other side of the spectrum, candidates whose names are made public may face pressure from their current employers. Their priorities and loyalties will be questioned and they may be forced to choose sides.

It is not unrealistic for one to be willing to place one's name on the line for a position such as the University presidency. The next president will dictate the future of the University. He will have impact beyond the campus. It is to be hoped that a person exercising that kind of power would be capable of withstanding public scrutiny.

Despite the loss of one candidate, it is still possible to find a president who will bring strong leadership to K-State. It is time to stop mourning the loss of Slaughter and look toward finding the best possible person to fill the position.

Removal of capsules an adequate response

Because of a woman's recent death from cyanide-laced Tylenol, and reports indicating that another bottle of the capsules containing cyanide was found, representatives from Johnson & Johnson announced this week that the company will no longer manufacture over-the-counter medication in capsules.

Seven deaths resulting from consumption of cyanide-laced Tylenol occurred in 1982 in Illinois. James E. Burke, chairman of Johnson & Johnson, said Monday the decision was made to halt production because the company can no longer guarantee the safety of the product.

The company is urging people to switch to coated oval-shaped tablets, and Johnson & Johnson has offered to exchange tablets for capsules for free. The replacement program will cost the company about $150 million. About 30 percent of Tylenol sold is in capsule form.

Since the woman's death, at least 14 states, the District of Columbia and Italy have banned sales of Tylenol capsules. Local merchants began to pull Tylenol capsules off the shelves on Friday.

Johnson & Johnson is also offering a $100,000 award for information leading to the conviction of the person or persons responsible for the recent poisoning. The responsible party should expect a severe prison sentence.

By taking the drug off the shelf the company is demonstrating its concern for the public. In addition, the decision is an attempt to avoid lawsuits that would stem from the incident.

The Food and Drug Administration is not forcing the company to discontinue sales of Tylenol capsules; the company is acting on its own accord. In the world of dog-eat-dog business dealings, it is a relief to know a company cares about the public's welfare.

U.S. must help Haiti with development aid

During the riots that preceded Haitian President Jean-Claude Duvalier's hasty departure to France, Haitians rejoiced in the imminent downfall of a cruel and violent dictatorship.

On Wednesday France rejected an appeal from the former "president-for-life" for permanent asylum. For good reason, the U.S. government refused to accept Duvalier, scuttling France's plans to dump him on the United States.

The country's new leader, Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy, said he will establish a democratic government and permit free labor unions and political parties. Talk, however, will do little to solve Haiti's serious economic problems.

The country is the poorest in the Western Hemisphere. With a population of about 6 million, Haiti is one of the world's most densely populated countries.

The future of Haiti is not promising. The end of Duvalier's reign is a necessary step in improving the economic status of Haitians, but it will take foreign aid to bring about change.

The United States is by far the largest provider of foreign aid, about $53 billion last year. Reagan administration officials say they are considering releasing $26 million in aid to the new civilian-military junta. If foreign aid is available, it should be given.

ON BEHALF OF THE CREW, THANK YOU FOR FLYING WITH EASTERN. Hesitancy to work a real problem

Procrastination is my middle name. "Always put off to tomorrow, or the day after tomorrow, or better yet, the next week, what you should have done yesterday," could be the words to my theme song. But countless others who delay until it's almost too late also hum the tune.

Many times this delay tactic can be hazardous to one's health and grade point average — especially where the Collegian is concerned.

For example, I usually put off writing a column until the day before it's scheduled for print because I've convinced myself I'm too busy to work on it before that. Besides, I can always make time to write, even if it's midnight.

Obviously, this pushes back my entire schedule until I'm napping during the afternoon, going to meetings in the evening and studying in the wee hours of the morning. Whenever one of my friends asks why I put myself through the agony of last minute rewrites, I always have a patented excuse. I had to do my manicure, my car needed a wax job or I couldn't miss "Miami Vice."

But my excuses are amateurish compared to other students' "explanations."

Ridiculous as it may seem, students with an abundance of spare time procrastinate. They keep telling themselves they have plenty of time to finish the chore, but when the due date appears on the horizon, the task has yet to be started.

Collegian
Columnist

Their philosophy leads to interesting situations such as living in a design studio for three days to finish a drawing or hibernating in Durland Hall before a chemistry "quiz." Whatever the situation, the project always receives slipshod treatment and looks like it was pieced together.

Others procrastinate because they think the situation is hopeless. Whenever I had a chemistry test, I always waited until the night before the test to pour over my notes for guidance. I reasoned that I didn't understand the subject in the first place and several days of studying before the test wouldn't help.

Some students simply hate the class and refuse to study. But the fear of their monetary support being withdrawn by their parents and the fact that they need the credit hours forces them to give token thought toward studying. The closest they come to studying for the test is to read the chapter's title.

People could develop this characteristic by observing those around them who are experts in the field. Children may learn to procrastinate by imitating their parents or other family members, while college students observe their campus buddies and sorority sisters.

Other students procrastinate because they are "too tired" to work on the project. They had a hard day at the office, they stayed up too late the night before to study for a test that was canceled, or the neighbors' baby kept them up until 4 a.m.

Another reason is laziness, which can be attributed to nobody but the procrastinator himself. While some people are lazy in certain situations, others are inherently lazy and can only be motivated by a kick in the derriere.

Another plausible explanation (excuse) is fear of the unknown. If the person doesn't take action, everything stays old and familiar, thus reducing the threat of encountering something beyond the procrastinator's abilities or realm of comprehension.

Last but not least is apathy. But who cares about that, anyway. Whatever the cause, remember that there is a cure for procrastination — if you have the time to find out what it is.

Pop music logs cultural attitudes

There is such a thing as a time machine, and I have ridden it. It's called music. It will take you anywhere you want. It's the easiest way to go back to good times — or bad ones — and most of the time it doesn't cost a penny.

The other day, I went back to the summer of 1981 (via Phil Collins' "In the Air Tonight" and Steve Winwood's "Arc of a Diver") and spent another of the greatest days of my life working as a lifeguard at a waterslide — minimum wage for girl-watching.

A few minutes later I was back in high school with my best friends, singing Beethoven love songs and drinking ale to enhance the harmony.

Some of the best times of my life faded with high school graduation. Probably everyone's senior year was one of their best. I can remember long afternoons after school in theater rehearsals, riding around in my buddy's Corvair, blind dates straight from the pages of H.P. Lovecraft...all of it is surrounded by musical bookends.

Our generation is influenced in a thousand ways by the music we listen to. Almost every generation can be typified in a few songs — the Charleston of the '20s, Glenn Miller and the Big Band sound of the '40s, The Beatles, The Who and Creedence Clearwater Revival of the '60s and '70s, and Bruce Springsteen, Sting and Hall and Oates of the '80s. For every generation, there is a tune for the times.

The answers to "Where are we going?"

RICH HARRIS
Collegian
Columnist

and "Why?" don't come from our parents, friends or instructors. They come from inside — like the answers to all important questions — and I think the music we listen to helps find the answers.

Take a look at the music we listen to from the Heartland. Groups as diverse as Chicago and ZZ Top sing about the same sorts of things: love and the eternal "good time." Slip inside my sleeping bag, indeed.

From the West Coast, the land of fruits and nuts, Huey Lewis and the News, a prototypical party band, combines humor and bebop and makes million-sellers while they sleep. Eagles alumni Glen Frey and Don Henley make seamier sides of life real — "Smuggler's Blues" and "The Boys of Summer" are sad songs, but like the eternal teenager Dick Clark says, "They gotta good beat, and you can dance to 'em...I gotta give 'em a 10."

From the Unpleasant Belt (New Jersey, Maryland and most of Pennsylvania) comes the man who may define this generation, Springsteen. While others have adopted his method of honoring blue collar workers, no one makes audiences stand up and bellow like the "Boss."

All this says something about who we are and where we're headed. I think today's music reflects a growing inclination to take ourselves too seriously. Music today means something; it's got a message; can you gimme a hallelujah?

"We Are the World," we are told. Well, swell. I am the world. I am the children. I am sick of that song. The sentiment is more than admirable, the intentions overwhelmingly good, but the overplay nauseating.

Live Aid raises millions of dollars for what is arguably the second most important cause in our history, and I applaud them, but if I have to endure one more self-serving political statement from another has-been, I will throw my radio out the window.

Let me make a distinction between songs with meaning and songs that are meaningful. For me, "In the Air Tonight" and the Electric Light Orchestra's "Evil Woman" will forever be more meaningful than "We Are the World." Anyone can write a song with meaning. The secret is to make it meaningful.

The music we listen to today will be that which characterizes us and our actions tomorrow. Is Cyndi Lauper going to be what your grandchildren think you stood for?

Letters

Undeserved praise

Editor,

Re: San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros' All-University Convocation on Feb. 18:

What was it you were applauding? Was it Cisneros' claim that cities should become masters of their own destinies? No, Cisneros went on to say that revenue sharing shouldn't be cut, meaning your tax dollars go not to your own community where you can see them work, but to an "unelected bureaucrat in Washington," as Cisneros put it, who determines how money is spent.

Was it his call for increased aid to the cities? No, surely everyone realizes that the rest of the nation can't afford this. Who does Cisneros suppose is going to subsidize the cities — our bankrupt farmers?

Was it his criticism of tax reform? No, this was just support of special interests over the well-being of the rest of the country. Or were you applauding his call for increased taxes? Apparently so.

What I don't recall is Cisneros saying anything about paying for these programs. What he advocated was simply business as usual; let the government pay for it. What this country needs is quality leadership that isn't afraid to address these issues.

I think I understand what Cisneros' ovation was for — an outstanding performance. For one hour he had us believing the illusion that the government can and should provide more benefits to us than it currently does, despite the fact that we aren't even willing to pay for what it gives us right now. I guess I should have been applauding his performance along with everyone else.

Clarification

Due to an editing error the process whereby the University gains approval from the Kansas Board of Regents to increase the budget on the proposed 13,500-seat Fred Bramlage Coliseum was not clear in Wednesday's editorial. "Coliseum plans must be reviewed carefully."

The Coliseum Program Committee, a campus group monitoring the project, recommended Wednesday to President Duane Acker that project planning should continue. It is Acker's responsibility to recommend to the regents that the budget should be altered.

Budgetary questions in relation to the $17.5 million project are beyond the scope of the committee and rest solely with the president and fund-raising officials at the KSU Foundation.

Mystery and suspense, crime and violence. What is it about these elements of intrigue that attract so much attention? Six professors are following the lead of such folks as Dr. Quincy and Sherlock Holmes. They search for clues in a variety of crimes and give local police what they have to offer as forensic investigators.

Cliff Meloan, professor of chemistry, said he is not out to solve crimes. But he is available to help local police with crimes involving chemical analysis.

"We can take a look at what you've got, and say 'this is what we can tell you about it.' We don't try to prove a case one way or another. If the conclusion goes against you, you have to accept it," Meloan said.

Meloan is an analytical chemist. He finds out what is there and how much of it there is. He said there is a little bit of Sherlock Holmes in everybody, and attributes much of the success of modern criminology to this fictional character.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, author of the Holmes mysteries, was a physician. He traveled around the country speaking with professors and wove modern-scientific techniques into his crime stories.

Soon, juries were no longer satisfied with eye-witness accounts in trials, Meloan said. They figured if Sherlock Holmes could use these techniques to identify physical evidence, so could real-life detectives.

Meloan, in his real-life detective work, deals mostly with fingerprints.

It used to be thought that fingerprints couldn't be taken from a live body, Meloan said. But a man working for the Kansas Bureau of Investigations developed a technique so it could be done. However, with this method there was one chance to get the fingerprints, and it took a lot of practice to perfect the technique.

Meloan said many times fingerprints are the only physical evidence left by the criminal in a rape case. The method developed by the Kansas Bureau of Investigation man took too much time, and had to be taken within two hours of the rape. A more simple technique had to be developed.

"Chances are the rape will happen at night when all the lab people are gone, and by the time the female regains her composure and goes to the police, a minimum of one hour to 1½ hours are gone," Meloan said. "And after about two hours the print is gone, so we really don't have enough time."

Meloan is working on a method of identifying fingerprints that would make them more visible, make them last longer than two hours, and be simple enough for everyone to do.

He discovered a method using iodine, photographic film and a dye, but the "picture" of the fingerprint did not stop developing on the film. Meloan looked for something to stop the development that would be something common to any policeman's office.

The solution to Meloan's problem was rubber cement.

"When we put it on the film, it stops the developing and preserves the print," Meloan said.

Meloan and Jeff Payne, graduate in chemistry, are working on an image-enhancing technique to make a positive identification of faded fingerprints.

Meloan is also working on a method to identify a knife or ice pick used to slash tires. He could tell the difference between car, truck and semi-truck tires, but he could not identify the specific tire.

But through a density-gradient test, Meloan heats the rubber until it is partly decomposed.

"Each car is driven differently — over different roads, in different weather conditions, through different chemicals, and the tires age differently," Meloan said.

Meloan has also worked on other crime cases, such as identifying hair and analyzing the mineral content of bones to aid in identification.

A degree program has been considered in criminalistics, Meloan said, but the idea has been rejected.

"We have a nucleus of people here who could present a good degree program, but there are not that many jobs in this area," he said. "We don't want to bring someone in, train him, and then have no jobs available."

Randy Bresee, associate professor of clothing, textiles and interior design, works with fibers and hairs when he is trying to help solve a crime.

"We use microanalysis in our work. We need sensitive, sophisticated equipment, which is usually expensive. Because of this it has to be a major crime to work on it — murder, rape, hard drugs," Bresee said.

Bresee said the general problem in forensic analysis of fibers and hairs is the society of mass production and mass consumption. People all wear basically the same kinds of fibers — the same color, the same size, the same shape.

It is often difficult to determine from where or from whom a particular fiber came. When investigating a case, Bresee said he tries to figure out how a certain person could contribute fibers to the crime.

"We have to think through the reasonableness of this fiber-transfer stuff," Bresee said.

Bresee has been involved with a number of nationally publicized crimes including the Atlanta child murder case.

"Wayne Williams was initially arrested for killing two black men, and it was discovered he had killed 20-plus kids," Bresee said.

Bresee testified in the defense of Williams, because he said fibers found on the two victim's bodies could have been associated with Williams, but they also could have come from somewhere else. The fiber evidence was not strong enough to convict Williams, Bresee said. However, he was convicted on the basis of other evidence.

Bresee also worked on a case in Australia. A man and woman were camping in an unpopulated area of the country with their infant. They left the baby sleeping in the tent and went to gather firewood. After a while, the woman went back to check the baby, and saw a dingo, a wild dog, leaving the tent with something in its mouth, Bresee said.

When the woman reached the tent, the child was gone, but the clothes were still there. Australian authorities found evidence they thought pointed to the woman as a murderer. She and her husband were charged with first-degree murder, Bresee said.

But the defense lawyers contacted Bresee during the trial, asking him to run tests on the fabric of the baby's clothing. Bresee's experimentation took too long to be used in the trial, but he said he believes an animal took the child and that the parents are innocent. The couple are appealing the case in Australia.

In dealing with cases like these, "you risk a lot. You put your reputation on the line when you get on the stand to testify. It's not a very comfortable situation," Bresee said. "So you make money off as many cases as you can."

Bresee said he is trying to increase the ease with which he can identify fibers by looking at the effects the consumer has on the material.

People perspire differently, they use different detergents, their clothes are exposed to different amounts of sunlight and a person's skin has varying degrees of oiliness, Bresee said.

"If we can qualify the fibers by consumer use, it can really narrow down the possible field when we are trying to identify where a fiber came from," he said.

For Ted Barkley, professor of biology and curator of the K-State herbarium, forensics work is a minor part of his job.

"For the herbarium, forensics work plays a relatively minor role. We do routine identifications whenever we get a request," Barkley said.

Barkley helps identify plants on inquiries such as noxious-weed cases, plant poisonings, involvement with drugs and damage to plants. He has also identified plant materials from dead bodies, and he has gone to the murder site to collect plants. He testified once in court.

"Normally we treat the information from here as public knowledge. We get no money. All we do is give information about the plants. When it is involved in a court case, I write three letters — one to the prosecutor, one to the defense, one to the judge. Then I am considered a 'friend of the court,'" Barkley said.

Barkley said the legal cases involving poisonings of cattle, sheep and other animals are the "most interesting, most vicious cases."

"The animals get sick or die. The veterinarian gets suspicious and the materials come to us, or we go collect samples. Sometimes we go through the contents of a cow's stomach, which is a smelly affair," Barkley said.

Mike Finnegan, professor of anthropology and certified forensic anthropologist, studies bones.

Finnegan is usually asked to identify bones when they are so decomposed that a pathologist is unable to identify them.

"First we have to figure out, 'Who is it?' We can determine the sex, stature and age at time of death. Then we start checking missing persons records, or we even advertise we have an unidentified body," Finnegan said.

Finnegan then starts looking for anomalies (normal anatomical variations like blood type), pathologies (abnormal variations from normal conditions) and signs of trauma, such as broken bones.

Finnegan said he is usually able to identify the person on the basis of this information. Once he has an idea who the person might be, he checks for dental records and other medical records that may provide him with a positive identification.

After he has identified the person, Finnegan tries to pinpoint the cause of death.

"This is one of the most difficult areas. There are so many ways to kill a person and not have it show up in the bones. There are poisons, diseases, suffocation; a person can get shot and not have anything show up in the bones," Finnegan said.

The bones Finnegan analyzes are either sent to him or collected by him in the field. Going to the field is more helpful, Finnegan said, because he can find more bone because he is trained in this area. The particular scatter of the bones can also suggest where to find more bone.

Finnegan said if the bones are more than 50 years old, there is a good chance he can't do anything with them. But he did work on a case that involved bones he thinks are more than 100 years old.

"I got some bones from Missouri that a local coroner had looked at but hadn't been able to tell much about. They ended up being human and nonhuman bones, probably male. I couldn't tell the race. The individual was 38 plus or minus four years at time of death, and he died around 100 years ago," Finnegan said.

He was also able to tell by looking at the teeth that the person had probably had a high temperature or lacked an element in his diet when he was young.

Finnegan relayed this information to the historian who sent him the bones. The historian told Finnegan he had just identified the bones of Jesse James.

All of the information Finnegan gave the historian seemed to validate this claim: the age was correct — he died 97 years ago; James had been ill when he was 6, and the bones were excavated from an area documented as James' burial place.

"This doesn't prove these were the bones of Jesse James, but it all sure fits," Finnegan said. "And this is probably the neatest case I've done because if the results were accurate or not accurate, it was not going to hurt anybody."

Finnegan said he doesn't solve murders or identify the criminals. The judges or coroners do that.

"We just supply the information," Finnegan said.

In cases that involve animal bones, another K-State crime investigator is called in.

Harry Anthony, head of the Department of Veterinary Diagnosis, identifies what kind of animal the bones came from, the approximate age and the cause of death.

A few years ago, people began finding a large number of dead, mutilated animals.

"Many people got excited because they thought it was a maniac or a cult, but it was really just normal deaths with predators mutilating the bodies," Anthony said.

Another forensics area dealing with animals is toxicology, the study of poisons.

Fred Oehme, professor of surgery and medicine specializing in toxicology, investigates cases dealing with suspected poisonings.

About 30 percent of Oehme's work is with humans. The rest of the time he deals with animals.

"People come to us with a problem. We investigate the problem ourselves or look into the information we are given to generate new information," Oehme said.

The simplest kind of investigations Oehme does are when someone sends in a sample of feed or tissue from an animal. The person tells Oehme what he thinks the problem is and Oehme investigates to see if the suspicion is true. He then reports back to do the individual.

Sometimes people "call and say 'we have animals sick or people sick. What samples should we collect? Do you know what it is?' So we help them collect samples, and suggest possibilities to them. With our combination of information and experience we can do tests and examinations to help them interpret the problem," Oehme said.

In this type of work, Oehme is sometimes called in by the government and state agencies in an advisory situation, such as what should be done in a chemical spill.

The third kind of work Oehme does is when he comes into the situation after the problem existed. He looks at what the problem was to determine if it was handled properly.

This work is on a more national or international level, Oehme said. It is a long-term situation, usually not involving laboratory testing.

Oehme said the first task when doing an investigation is to identify a substance as a specific chemical and then to measure exactly how much is there.

"We find out we have a certain substance, and then we try to determine 'does it relate to the situation or the question?' That part is the art. The science is the measuring. The relation of the measurements to the problem is the art," Oehme said.

Heart studies to draw funds

By JEFF TUTTLE
Collegian Reporter

February is National Heart Month for the American Heart Association, and a nationwide campaign for donations will kickoff this weekend throughout the country. Of the money collected, K-State will receive approximately $50,000 for heart disease research.

Dr. Robert Sager, a local dentist and president-elect of the Riley County Heart Association, said the money Riley County residents donate goes back into the University for research.

"We hope to raise $40,000 this year. That is $10,000 less than goes into K-State," Sager said. "This helps people know where and how their donated money is being spent."

The money Riley County residents donate goes into the national campaign fund and is divided into three areas. Thirty percent goes to public education, 22 percent to community services, 9 percent to professional education, 13 percent to fund-raising and 23 percent to research.

The Kansas affiliate of the American Heart Association gets $482,222 to divide to 29 individual researchers at K-State, Kansas University Medical Center, St. Luke's Hospital in Kansas City, Veteran's Administration in Wichita, and the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

The University has four professors and one student involved in the research. Gerald R. Reeck, professor of biochemistry, is studying the properties of the Activated Hageman factor, which acts upon proteins in the blood to produce clotting. Reeck is involved in researching a drug that would work against the Activated Hageman factor and help eliminate an undesirable blood clot.

David Rintoul, assistant professor of biology, is studying cellular communication, which should help in the detection of diseases which will also help to improve our knowledge of cellular functions.

Brian Spooone, sophomore in microbiology, will be studying lungs and the various problems in their development.

Delores Takemoto, assistant professor of biochemistry, is studying the enzyme that helps control the relaxation and contraction of the heart. This will help scientists develop a drug than can work as a substitute in case of hypertension where the enzyme is ineffective.

Carol Klopfenstein, assistant professor of grain science, is studying beta-glucan, a fiber extracted from oats, barley, wheat and sorghum grains, which has shown some potential as a cholesterol-lowering agent.

The Riley County Heart Association will be sponsoring a door-to-door campaign beginning Saturday. It will be aimed at business people and individuals. A telepledge will be conducted Feb. 25-26 aimed at Manhattan professionals, including teachers, doctors, architects and lawyers.

"Our goal last year was to raise $33,000 and we beat it by a couple of thousand dollars," said Sager. "To raise $40,000 ought to be a real challenge, but with the help from the entire community I think we can do it."

Getting away Howe's plan for comeback

By The Associated Press

Tucked away in the northwest corner of Montana, miles from a major highway and even farther from the major leagues, is where Steve Howe works these days.

He is still pitching. But for now, he's a pitcher for two small radio stations in Whitefish, Mont.

"He's our national sales representative," says Benny Bee, owner of KJJR-AM and KBBZ-FM. "He's also doing color commentary on high school basketball games."

Howe's job at the station also includes servicing the broadcasting towers atop Big Mountain, plus a few other odds 'n ends.

And that all leads to the big question — can the same person who was suspended for the 1984 season and then broke down in opportunities with the Los Angeles Dodgers and Minnesota Twins last year put his cocaine and alcohol-riddled past behind him?

"I tell him we have to make a little progress everyday," says John Lence, the Whitefish-raised, New York City-educated attorney representing Howe. "He knows this is his last shot."

Lence met Howe shortly after Howe began working at the radio stations on Nov. 1.

As part of Howe's rehabilitation program, he had to have a full-time job. He went to Whitefish because of an offer from Bee, who is a friend of an uncle of Howe's wife.

"I'm a person here," Howe said. "I'm just Steve Howe."

Yet, even if he does say his on-air work is "pretty good," he is still Steve Howe, the pitcher.

Everyday, Howe, who will turn 28 next month, works out a gym. Every other day, he throws with the local American Legion team.

"They're clocking my fastball at 93 miles per hour," the 1980 National League rookie of the year said. "This is the best my arm has felt in a long time."

Each day, Lence does his part. He has criss-crossed the United States and Canada by telephone, trying to find Howe a job. Lence says he's gotten a few feelers about the left-handed reliever, including a nibble from the Toronto Blue Jays.

The pitch is simple. Lence calls it, "no play, no pay."

Any team that wants to look at Howe during spring training can have him for a 30-day option. If the club decides not to keep him, it can release him — no questions asked — and just pay Howe's daily expenses during that period.

"It's no-risk," Lence says. "The first team that offers that, that's the one we're going with."

But, will anyone want to take that chance?

Not the Twins said Manager Ray Miller who released Howe following recurring problems with cocaine and alcohol dependency. "You say you want to help a guy straighten himself out for the rest of his life. That's a lie. You want to straighten him out so you can win some games."

Hands to do battle tonight at Rec Center

By The Collegian Staff

Recreational Services will have its annual intramural wrestling competition at 7 tonight in the small gym of the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Team intramural points can be earned in the competition. The three men's divisions include fraternity, residence hall, and independent.

Weight classes in the men's divisions are flyweight (150 pounds and below), lightweight (151-175), middleweight (176-200), and heavyweight (201 and above).

There will be one women's division. The women's weight classes include 135 and below, and 136 and above.

The tournament will be a right-handed competition only, and will be single elimination. T-shirts will be given to weight class and division winners where a minimum of four competitors are entered.

Entries for the tournament are no longer being taken. The entry deadline was Feb. 14. Ninety-three men and 12 women are entered in the tournament.

Intramural coordinator Steve Martini said it is important for participants to get to the meet on time because "matches go really fast." He said matches usually last anywhere from three to 15 seconds.

Martini said the meet should be completed by 8:30 p.m. The all-University matches will be the last events of the evening.

K-State forward Ben Mitchell, right, battles Oklahoma State's 7-foot-4 center Alan Bannister for a rebound during Wednesday's conference game in Ahearn Field House. The Wildcats defeated the Cowboys, 78-73.

Coleman leads 'Cats to win past feisty Oklahoma State

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

You have to wonder what it would take for Norris Coleman to ever be satisfied with himself.

Coleman had his third 30-point performance in the last three games in Wednesday night's 78-73 victory over Oklahoma State in Ahearn Field House. The "Sarge" also added 10 rebounds to this total.

This must have satisfied Coleman, right?

Not quite.

"I look at it like Coach (Jack) Hartman does," Coleman said. "If I have 30 points, I feel as though I could have gotten 40. If I get 10 rebounds, I feel like I could have gotten 20."

"Thirty points and 10 rebounds might be a career for some guys, but I'm getting better and better every game."

As hard as it seems to make a 30-point, 10 rebound performance seem routine, Coleman is certainly trying.

"Norris had another fine game," K-State's Hartman said. "It's almost like you come to expect that out of him. He does a tremendous job every time out."

After Coleman's performance Wednesday, Oklahoma State Coach Paul Hansen seems convinced of the 6-foot-8 forward's talents.

"He (Coleman) plays both ends of the floor. He is a cool customer out there," Hansen said. "I think he's a Paul Hansen type of player."

However, Coleman didn't do all of the offensive work for the Wildcats as Joe Wright hit for 22 points.

"We knew we had to stop two good basketball players in Paul Hansen's newcomer of the year — Norris Coleman — and Joe Wright," Hansen said.

While Coleman and Wright were the ones doing most of the scoring, guard Lynn Smith, making his first start since November, stole much of Hartman's praise.

Smith had only four points, but Hartman saw more than points in what Smith accomplished against the Cowboys.

"Lynn Smith gave us a heck of a game," he said. "He's a hustler, he's a battler. I have a lot of respect for that boy. He gave us what we wanted tonight — enthusiasm, excitement and getting the ball to the right people."

With the win, K-State was able to even the season series with Oklahoma State, which pounded the 'Cats 86-70 in Stillwater. Coleman was able to manage only 12 points and Wright 11 in that loss.

"I had a bad game before with this team (Oklahoma State)," Coleman said. "I felt I let the team down. After that game, (Oklahoma State forward Andre) Ivy said that I was easy to guard — that I didn't move around that much. It kind of made me upset."

"I read it in the newspaper that the coaches put in my locker. They highlighted what Ivy said about me. So I thought I had a little bit to prove."

After two meetings with the Cowboys, Hartman has come away impressed.

"OSU is tough. I like their ball club. They fight hard — they don't go away," Hartman said. "You have to fight hard to beat them. They've got some kids who are shooting the ball awfully well."

Among those Cowboy players shooting well is guard Poshon Patton — especially against K-State. Patton is averaging just 5.5 points per game, but has his two best performances this season against the Wildcats, scoring 17 in Stillwater and 18 Wednesday.

"That little number 10 (Patton) must love the color purple," Hartman said. "He just doesn't miss anything against us."

Also presenting a problem for the Wildcats was 7-foot-4 Oklahoma State center Alan Bannister. Bannister scored 14 points, all on jump shots or hook shots from within eight feet of the basket.

"He's a factor. Anybody that big is going to be a factor in a ball game," Hartman said of Bannister.

Bannister fouled out of the contest with 32 seconds left though, and Hansen thinks the referees haven't been giving his big man a fair shake.

"The refs called some of the most ridiculous fouls," Hansen said. "They won't let the big guy (Bannister) play. The refs are programmed to call walking on the big guy when he gets the ball."

The win moves K-State into a tie with Oklahoma State for sixth place in the Big Eight with a 4-6 record. The Wildcats' overall record improves to 16-10.

Baseball team prepares to travel to Arkansas

By DOUG SCHEIBE
Sports Writer

K-State's baseball team opens its season today against Arkansas in Fayetteville, Ark.

The team's schedule features 21 games against non-conference opponents in addition to the Big Eight Conference schedule.

The non-conference schedule includes meetings with seven teams ranked in the Collegiate Baseball pre-season top 25.

K-State will meet Oral Roberts (No. 6), Wichita State (No. 13), Arkansas (No. 18) and Louisiana State (No. 20) over the course of the season.

Last spring, the 'Cats finished 29-33 overall and 8-14 in the Big Eight. After finishing in the conference basement for the three previous years, first-year Coach Gary Vaught helped the team vault into fourth place last year.

Vaught expects even more success this spring for K-State after a productive recruiting year and a 17-1 fall season record.

"We have a lot more athletic ability on the team this season," Vaught said. "That (more athletic ability) will give us a wider variety of options in various game situations."

One of the new Wildcats is Jeff Turtle, a first team junior college all-American catcher last year. Turtle, a junior at K-State, hit .500 with 33 home runs for Connors State (Okla.) Junior College last year. He was also second in the nation with 127 RBIs.

Second baseman Brent Gibson and shortstop Pat Stivers, also junior college transfers, will be filling the middle of the infield for K-State.

"You never know how players will react and adjust to a new situation," Vaught said. "Hopefully, since most of our new players have been with us for almost a year and have worked with our returning players, that transition will be smooth."

Senior pitcher Tom Smith and junior designated hitter and first baseman Otto Kaifes are the leading returnees from last year's team.

In 1985, Smith set K-State records for innings pitched (114) and complete games (11), and was selected to the all-Big Eight first team.

Kaifes tied the school record for batting average, hitting .424, and led the team with nine home runs, despite missing the latter portion of the season with an injury. Kaifes was named to the all-Big Eight honorable mention team.

As a team during the 1985 season, K-State batted .296 and scored 407 runs to their opponents' .388. K-State stole 138 bases in 162 attempts and hit 52 home runs.

On defense, the 'Cats had a fielding percentage of .954 and turned 44 double plays.

Smith led the pitching staff with a 3.87 ERA. The staff ERA was 5.87. Wildcat pitchers struck out 332 and walked 288 in 474 innings, and allowed 56 home runs.

After Arkansas, K-State will travel to Beaumont, Texas, to meet Lamar in a weekend series Feb. 22 and 23. K-State lost to Arkansas last year 5-1 in Fayetteville, and they did not play Lamar.

K-State's first home game is at 1 p.m. March 1 at Frank Meyers Field against Friends University.

Carr's shot beats OU; Kansas edges Buffaloes

By The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Brian Carr's final shot against Oklahoma Wednesday night fulfilled a childhood fantasy.

"You always dream of shots like that," Carr said after sinking a 10-foot jumper with four seconds left to give Nebraska a 66-64 upset victory over the tenth-ranked Sooners. "You play in the backyard, you count down from 10 and you never miss."

Carr, who led the Cornhuskers with 18 points, said it was the first game-winning shot of his career.

"I prayed the whole time I would get the shot," said the junior guard from Muncie, Ind. "When it went in, I almost cried I was so happy."

The upset pushes Nebraska's record to 16-8 on the season and 6-5 in conference.

Darryl Kennedy scored 22 points and had 8 rebounds for the Sooners who are now 23-4 and 8-4 in the Big Eight.

KU 79, CU 74

BOULDER, Colo. — Danny Manning scored 25 points — 17 of them in the second half — as third-ranked Kansas defeated Colorado 79-74 in Big Eight college basketball Wednesday night.

Ron Kellogg sank four free throws for Kansas in the final 45 seconds and finished the scoring with a basket in the final four seconds.

Colorado moved from a 12-point deficit early in the first half to take a 72-71 lead on a jumper from freshman Matt Bullard with 59 seconds left.

Kellogg's six points and two free throws from Calvin Thompson put away the game for the Jayhawks.

Kansas held a 42-36 halftime advantage.

Michael Lee scored a career-high 22 points to pace the Buffs.

Kansas improved its record to 25-3 on the season and 10-1 in league. Colorado slipped to 8-16 and 0-11 respectively.

Big Eight recognizes Lady Cat

K-State basketball player Carlisa Thomas was named Big Eight Women's Player of the Week Wednesday.

Thomas scored 26 points against Oklahoma Tuesday, Feb. 11, and had 18 points and 10 rebounds against Iowa State Saturday. Although Thomas was held scoreless in the first half of the Oklahoma State game Tuesday night, she managed to chalk up 11 points for the Wildcats.

Thomas leads the team with 57 assists and 64 steals and also leads the team in rebounding with an average of 8.3.

Wildcat Coach Matilda Mossman said she was pleased with Thomas' performances last week.

"Without a doubt, Carlisa is the kind of player that can completely dominate a game," Mossman said. "Last week she played as well as I've seen her play since I've been here. She showed a lot of leadership and played under control."

Kentucky clinches conference title

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Forward Kenny Walker scored 23 points and eighth-ranked Kentucky clinched a tie for its 36th Southeastern Conference title Wednesday night with an 80-69 victory over Florida.

Kentucky raised its record to 23-3 overall and 14-1 in the SEC while Florida fell to 14-10 and 8-7.

Walker gave the Wildcats a 55-39 lead on an inside power basket with 15:27 left in the game. But Florida, with guard Andrew Moten scoring eight points, rallied to within 63-56 with 7:27 to go.

Reserve center Rob Lock then banked in a 10-footer at 7:10 and followed that with two free throws at 6:39 to give Kentucky a 67-56 margin.

Florida could get no closer than seven points the rest of the way. Guard Vernon Maxwell tallied 22 points to pace Florida.

Wake Forest falls to Georgia Tech

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Duane Ferrell scored 14 points and Mark Price hit 12, including the first eight of the second half, to lead No. 5 Georgia Tech to a 59-49 victory over Wake Forest in Atlantic Coast Conference basketball Wednesday night.

Georgia Tech, 20-4 and 8-3, held a 28-23 halftime lead before Price, held to two points in the first half, erupted from outside to give the Yellow Jackets a 36-27 edge with 14:48 left.

Wake Forest, which never led, pulled within 49-43 on a Rod Watson jumper with 2:02 remaining but Georgia Tech hit eight of 12 free-throw attempts down the stretch to keep control.

Watson led all scorers with 22 points.

Aspirin may be contributor to development of sickness

By PENNIE BRENEMAN
Collegian Reporter

Flu is a common ailment this time of year and many victims' symptoms are treated with aspirin. But that treatment has been shown in some studies to be life-threatening.

Last year, the Public Health Service conducted a pilot study to determine the relationship between the treatment of chicken pox or the flu with aspirin and the development of Reye syndrome. Evidence suggests a link between the two.

Reye syndrome is an acute condition that in the past has been known to strike children and young adults who have been treated with aspirin during an episode of the flu or chicken pox.

"It is characterized by vomiting, restlessness, muscle weakness, violent headaches and unusual behavior," said Dr. Robert C. Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center. "These symptoms often occur in children who appear to be recovering from an often mild viral illness."

Patients diagnosed with Reye syndrome were mainly children who had been treated with aspirin while recovering from chicken pox or other flu-like illnesses.

The majority of Reye cases observed in the study occurred in patients between 10 and 18 years old. Before this study, it was thought the disease was found primarily in children under 16 years old.

Gayle Connet, unit manager of pediatrics at Memorial Hospital, recalls a case of the disease in an adult woman and warns that it is not just children who should be aware of Reye syndrome.

Reye syndrome is rare, but is considered life-threatening when it does occur and requires immediate diagnosis and admission to a hospital.

"The most serious symptom of the disease is swelling of the brain," Tout said. "Symptoms are treatable if the patient is brought to the hospital immediately upon discovery of unusual behavior.

"Children may become restless or uncontrollable. They may suffer from double vision, or altered brain functions," he said.

If any of these signs occur along with any of the symptoms, the patient should be examined immediately, he said.

It is not certain that aspirin causes Reye syndrome; however, the Food and Drug Administration, along with the American Academy of Pediatrics, discourages using aspirin products in such situations.

Studies show a link between aspirin and Reye syndrome and medical experts consulted by the U.S. Public Health Service agree this relationship cannot be ignored.

The Department of Health and Human Services, along with area nurses and physicians, urges parents and teen-agers to be aware of the suspected association between Reye syndrome and aspirin.

The FDA warns that the best action to take against Reye syndrome is prevention.

Bill to limit campaign contributions

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Sen. Wint Winter on Wednesday exhorted his colleagues in the Legislature to help keep individual citizens interested and active in the democratic process by limiting the amount of money political action committees can contribute to state campaigns.

Winter, R-Lawrence, urged members of the Senate Elections Committee to support his bill to limit the amount of money candidates can receive from PACs. Under the bill, only half of a candidate's total campaign fund could come from political action committees. The measure is co-sponsored by Sen. Eric Yost, R-Wichita.

The committee could debate and take action on the bill next week, said Sen. E. Francis Gordon, R-Highland, the panel's chairman.

During the 1984 campaign, 281 Kansas PACs contributed $447,993 to the campaigns of candidates for 40 Senate seats and $658,639 to candidates for 125 House seats.

Winter said nearly half the members of the Senate and 70 percent of the House received more than half their contributions from PACs.

Winter said he did not think there was a problem with PAC contributions now, but he said he was worried about what would happen in the future. The costs of running a campaign have increased in past years, Winter said.

"The seeds of the problem are beginning to sprout," Winter said.

But Karen McClain, a lobbyist for the Kansas Realtors, criticized the bill, saying it would restrict the right of citizens to form committees for political action. The group's PAC spent more than $91,000 on races in Kansas in 1984, the most of any political action committee.

"Modern political action committees are simply groups of citizens who organize to raise money to help elect or defeat candidates running for public office," McClain said. "Any further restrictions on PAC contributions are restrictions on political participation."

McClain also said the bill would hurt participation in politics because of limits on how much an individual can contribute to campaigns. Such contributions are limited to $750 in Legislative races and to $3,000 in races for state officers' positions. An individual can contribute those amounts in both primary and general elections.

But Winter said the bill would encourage individual participation.

AIDS committees to work separately for goal

By GARY BORN
Collegian Reporter

In an effort to move ahead with an agreeable Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome policy for the University, the University AIDS Committee decided Wednesday to split into two groups and work separately toward a common goal.

"It's time to get task-oriented and throw ourselves into the problems at hand and get specific about the policy that we want to recommend to the University," said Earl Nolting, assistant vice president and dean of students.

The groups will be divided into two categories, those of policy recommendations and educational recommendations. Each of the separate committees will work on its topic for two weeks and then meet again together and try to formulate a policy, Nolting said.

Some of the issues the policy committee will address will be questions concerning confidentiality, medical care, legal considerations, rumor control and employment guidelines for students, staff and faculty, he said.

The education committee will be dealing with issues relating to the issue of how AIDS is going to affect the campus, and also working on a plan to educate the public.

"It is not so much educating on the policies but more on how AIDS will affect the campus if we have a student with AIDS on campus, trying to eliminate a possible sense of hysteria when that student comes on campus," said Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center.

Some of the ideas the educational committee will be looking into are the possibility of locating some type of audio-visual message which can be used as a supplement with speeches and lectures on AIDS, Burke said.

"When herpes was the big scare, Lafene purchased a film and I went out and gave a lot of presentations on it and I have already possibly located a film. I know there are others out there," Burke said.

The AIDS committee is currently receiving information from the American College Health Association, the American Medical Association, as well as other agencies, and it is possible the University could make copies of pamphlets and brochures. The information could then be distributed on campus, Nolting said.

One issue, brought up by John Lambert, director of campus safety, was where the funding for some of the programs and materials was going to come from.

At this point, the committee does not have any funding, but the committee agreed that funding will be necessary, he said.

Missouri lottery tickets legal in Kansas

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Attorney General Robert T. Stephan said Wednesday he believes it's legal for Kansas residents to bring into the state lottery tickets purchased in another state.

However, Stephan said in a consumer advice column that "no part of the lottery transaction may take place in Kansas" and that Kansans who win in another state's lottery must travel to that state to collect their prizes.

The attorney general said his remarks were prompted by a flood of calls received by his office every day since the Missouri lottery commenced.

"An individual legally cannot establish a business in Kansas for the purpose of collecting customers' money and traveling to Missouri to purchase lottery tickets in their behalf," Stephan said. "I also believe Kansas law prohibits a business from purchasing Missouri lottery tickets to give away in Kansas as a promotion."

Stephan also noted it would be considered illegal under Kansas law for one person to travel to Missouri, Colorado or any other state with a lottery to buy a ticket for a friend and bring it back into the Sunflower State for the other person.

"This also would be a technical violation of the law and you could be prosecuted," he said.

However, Stephan said he does not consider the lottery tickets to be "illegal gambling devices" when they are purchased legally in the issuing state.

"I would point out that there are specific postal regulations which define the manner in which the mail can be used to promote or carry on state lotteries."

"Generally, these regulations prohibit any interstate use of the mail between lottery and non-lottery states to promote or otherwise carry on the lottery. Kansans are prohibited from purchasing Missouri lottery tickets through the mail."

Students move books from Farrell Library; Nichols Hall new site

By BECKY MARTIN
Collegian Reporter

Empty shelves and missing books might create panic for patrons researching in the stack levels of Farrell Library. But students and faculty need not be alarmed. There's just a bit of reorganizing going on.

A few years ago, library administrators realized Farrell had only five to six years of growth space left. They had to find a place to put newly acquired volumes, said John Johnson, documents librarian in charge of the move to Nichols Hall.

Nichols was the best choice, he said, because it is on campus and all of the books can be stored in one area. Seventeen students started relocating books from Farrell to Nichols the first week of November, Johnson said. Despite a few setbacks from bad weather, the crew has been in full swing since the week of spring enrollment.

Johnson speculates the move will be completed by early April.

"I'm hoping it will be an April Fool's Day gift," he said.

It is estimated 200,000 books are being moved to Nichols, Johnson said. The majority of the books are government documents, monographs and bound journals which appear on the serials list in Farrell. There are also a few books from the special collections department being moved.

Johnson said the reason these books were chosen to be moved to Nichols is that the older serials, especially the science journals, are used less frequently. The serials list is also the easiest to maintain.

The move is expected to be completed and the serials list updated by the end of the semester, he said. For the rest of the semester, if patrons find something missing from the shelves in Farrell, they can go to the circulation desk and fill out a request form, Johnson said. Every afternoon the circulation department sends someone to Nichols to pick up requested books. The patron can get the book he needs the next day. If the request is filled out before 2 p.m., the book can often be received the same day.

"To us here at Farrell, this is just the best of a bad situation," Johnson said.

Regents agreement for vet programs allows cooperation

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

TOPEKA — The Kansas Board of Regents voted unanimously Thursday to approve a new agreement between K-State and the University of Nebraska-Lincoln permitting joint efforts in veterinary medical education to continue.

"I believe this agreement is a necessary step forward, especially in such tight fiscal times," President Duane Acker said of the agreement between K-State and the Board of Regents of the University of Nebraska.

The agreement, which would take effect in July 1987, permits 30 Nebraska students to enroll in the K-State College of Veterinary Medicine each year. However, the number of Nebraska students allowed to enroll in the college could vary depending on the size and quality of the Kansas applicant pool.

The Nebraska regents will vote on the accord Saturday.

Junction City regent John Montgomery, who presides over regent discussions relating to policy and procedures, said the agreement has "been a long time in coming" and that the University and board are "certainly glad to see it come about."

Provisions of the contract and steps taken in December 1985 should take care of concern by University officials about the prospect of weaknesses in future enrollment.

The regents voted in December to permit the freshman class admitted in 1986 to include up to 20 percent more at-large students. Class size was previously set at 100 students, plus or minus five.

Acker has indicated that the new agreement and the one-year increase in the number of at-large students is necessary to offset the decline in both in-state and out-of-state applicants.

"We just want to be sure that we maintain the quality of the applicant pool," said James R. Coffman, dean of the veterinary medicine college.

Under stipulations of the agreement, Nebraska students must undergo a review by Nebraska and K-State officials before applications are forwarded to a five-member Nebraska Admissions Committee. The admissions committee com-

Budget cuts may affect ag experiment station, cooperative extension

By JILL HUMMELS
Staff Writer

TOPEKA — President Reagan's budget proposal brought about by the Gramm-Rudman legislation could have a chilling effect on K-State's Agricultural Experiment Station and Division of Cooperative Extension, Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, told a Board of Regents committee Thursday.

Woods appeared before the Special Committee on Agriculture and Economic Development to present an assessment of the impact of federal funding reductions on the two programs. The funding cuts are the president's response to Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction legislation, which requires budget balancing moves on the president's part in order to avoid across-the-board cuts in federal outlays.

Through Reagan's budget proposal, the experiment station would experience a budget reduction of $700,000 for fiscal year 1987, while extension would suffer a cut of more than $3 million.

"This program can't last with a reduction of over $3 million," Woods said of the extension program.

Although federal funding represents only 22 percent of extension's $26 million budget, about 77 percent of federal extension dollars are funneled into salaries.

The budget decrease represents an average salary reduction of $2,088 for county extension agents plus the loss of an additional 40 specialist positions in the program, Woods said. Extension employs 720 people, nearly 500 of whom are K-State faculty.

Funding for certain aspects of extension would be reduced by 47 percent, but several programs would be forced to rely on state and county funding without federal aid.

County funding of the extension program currently provides 38 percent of the budget — the largest portion borne by any agency. But Woods said some counties could not afford

Hall. The Department of Nuclear Engineering was formed in 1958 and the nuclear reactor has been in operation since October 1962.

Nuclear reactor facility aids research

By KAREN MEIS
Staff Writer

It does everything from determining mineral deficiencies in cattle feed to assisting the Kansas Bureau of Investigation in forensics work.

The TRIGA Mark II Nuclear Reactor Facility in Ward Hall is part of the Department of Nuclear Engineering. Not only is it used as an instructional tool within the department, it also serves as a research instrument for the campus and nearby colleges and universities.

Richard Faw, professor of nuclear engineering, said the facility is an important part of the nuclear engineering department.

"Our curriculum is the first accredited nuclear engineering undergraduate program in the country," he said. "The availability of the reactor is an important component of our educational program."

The department, established in 1958, is one of the oldest in the country, Faw said. The nuclear reactor has been in operation since October 1962. The facility is composed of the TRIGA Mark II pulsing nuclear reactor, the Tate Neutron Activation Analysis Laboratory and other supporting laboratories.

Faw said a major portion of the reactor's use involves work with various departments on campus. Neutron activation analysis, a nondestructive method of chemical analysis capable of detecting trace quantities of elements, is often performed.

Most campus research work is related to geological areas, Faw said, and involves the testing of rare materials and geological specimens. Dating of anthropological specimens from various sites is also performed, as are agricultural studies of plant and animal metabolism.

Faw said a long-term project of the nuclear-reactor facility is the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station's analysis of the protein content of wheat.

"We are available as a service and will provide assistance in planning experiments," he said. "We do this on an informal basis on campus and can tell quickly whether or not we'll be able to help."

The facility also performs research for noncampus sources, such as the University of Kansas Medical Center, and collaborates with other universities.

Faw said some universities, such as those in Nebraska and Oklahoma, do not have access to a nuclear-reactor facility and send students to the University to conduct laboratory experiments. Other universities with a similar facility include KU and the University of Missouri, Columbia.

Three nuclear engineering students are employed to operate the reactor, Faw said, and assist in its operations and research analysis. Nuclear reactor operators are state civil service employees and must be licensed. The faculty of the nuclear engineering department is in charge of the facility's management.

Jeff Daniels, senior in nuclear engineering, is training to become a nuclear reactor operator. He said his areas of training include administrative procedures, community relations, handling emergencies, and operating the system and becoming aware of its functions.

The Reactor Safeguards Committee, the members of which are appointed by President Duane Acker, monitors operations of the nuclear reactor. Faculty members from

Aquino meets diplomats; discusses election results

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Some traditional allies of President Ferdinand Marcos appeared to distance themselves from his government Thursday, as European countries considered boycotting his inauguration and several ambassadors met with Corason Aquino.

Aquino, Marcos' opponent in the disputed Feb. 7 election, met ambassadors from 14 European countries and Japan. She told them she was determined to assume the presidency of the Philippines at the "earliest possible time."

None of the ambassadors specifically endorsed Aquino's claim that she won the election but was cheated out of victory. She had asked them not to recognize Marcos' government.

The election has been widely criticized here and abroad as fraudulent.

Ambassador Wiegner Hellemans of The Netherlands, acting as spokesman for nine European Common Market nations' envoys, was asked about reported plans for ambassadors from the trade bloc not to attend the Marcos inauguration. "That is under consideration in the capitals" because of the fraud allegations, he said.

Asked if any of the countries were considering withdrawing recognition of Marcos' government, he said there had been "no word on that."

In Strasbourg, France, the European Parliament voted unanimously Thursday to blame Marcos for most of the reported abuses in the special election, called by Marcos in an effort to prove his popularity.

Japanese Ambassador Kiyoshi Sumiya, after meeting with Aquino, told Japanese reporters she had asked him not to attend the inauguration. He said he told Aquino he would relay the message to Tokyo.

Sumiya said his country has no intention of intervening in Philippine affairs but that he hoped "a bloody struggle" would be avoided, according to Japanese reporters.

House passes gambling resolution

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A resolution the Kansas House approved Thursday, which would give voters a chance to decide whether Kansas should allow pari-mutuel gambling on horse and dog races, may not be debated anytime soon in the Senate, according to key officials in the upper chamber.

Senate President Robert Talkington and Sen. Edward Reilly, R-Leavenworth and chairman of the committee that will consider the proposal, made the remarks after the House adopted the resolution on a vote of 90-35.

The measure received tentative approval after about 45 minutes of debate and, in an unusual move, the House suspended its rules and voted for final adoption of the proposal.

House Speaker Mike Hayden said he agreed to push the proposal through to a final vote Thursday because several lawmakers told him they would be absent Friday, when the final action originally had been scheduled.

The resolution, which would change the Kansas Constitution by liberalizing a prohibition against gambling on anything other than bingo, escaped without much opposition or any successful amendments.

"We're elated," Jonathan Small, chief lobbyist for Kansans for Pari-Mutuel, said after the vote. "Everybody's excited and pretty optimistic that we can get the resolution in a healthy form through the Senate."

However, Talkington, R-Iola, said he has no immediate plans to rush the pari-mutuel measure through the upper chamber and Reilly, chairman of the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee, said his panel is booked up hearing other proposals for at least another 10 days.

But neither of the senators said they believe there would be a serious effort to hold up action on pari-mutuel until the House approves a resolution that would allow a vote on the establishment of a state-owned lottery.

"I'm not waiting for anything," Reilly said. "The Senate has passed both issues before and I don't see any urgency in light of that."

"But there is some strong sentiment within the Senate that we should consider both issues at once because we have done it that way before."

The House version of the pari-mutuel resolution was introduced at the end of the 1985 session, after lawmakers there killed a similar proposal which the Senate passed last year 29-11.

Both houses of the Kansas Legislature must give two-thirds approval to proposed constitutional amendments, such as the pari-mutuel or lottery measures, before they can be submitted to voters. The pari-mutuel measure cleared the House Thursday with six votes more than the 84 necessary for a two-thirds majority.

The Rev. Richard Taylor, director of Kansans For Life at Its Best, admitted to being somewhat discouraged after the vote but said, "I'd rather be defeated working for less human suffering than to be a winner working to put more dollars in the pockets of gambling promoters."

Taylor said he hopes to stop pari-mutuel in the Senate while holding the lottery in the House. However, Taylor said if he had to make a choice between the two measures, he would rather see pari-mutuel go to the voters.

"With pari-mutuel you have to go to the track to lose your paycheck or look up the illegal bookie," Taylor said.

During the House debate, Rep. Bob Ott, R-Salina, who promoted the resolution on the floor, said pari-mutuel would help Kansas preserve or improve its standing as the fifth-leading producer of quarter horses in the nation and as the "greyhound capitol of the world."

Soviets send up new space station

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union sent up a space station named Peace on Thursday to serve as a permanently manned base for the next generation in space. It has docking ports for six spacecraft and private cabins for cosmonauts.

It was launched without a crew and will not be manned until tests are completed, the official Tass news agency said, without revealing how long the test program would take.

The new station — named Mir, the Russian word for peace — joins the Salyut-7 space lab in orbit. The last team to work aboard the Salyut-7, which was launched in 1982, returned to Earth in November when one of the three cosmonauts fell ill.

Tass said both the Mir and the Salyut-7 were functioning normally. The Mir was launched from the Baikonur Cosmodrome in Kazakhstan at 12:29 a.m., according to a television report that included a few seconds of film on the blastoff. Little detail of the new craft could be seen.

Konstantin Feoktistov, a former cosmonaut who now is a professor of space technology, told a Soviet television reporter the Mir is "significantly more automated" and has more advanced computers than the Salyut-7 complex.

No details were provided about the new station's size or weight. Tass said it is larger than the Salyut-7, with separate cabins for cosmonauts and special labs for research in medicine, biology, astrophysics and other fields.

Up to six spacecraft at a time can dock at the Mir to deliver cosmonauts and supplies, Tass said, and it also is equipped to accommodate "modules" for work on special projects.

China launches second satellite

PEKING — China's second telecommunications and broadcasting satellite, launched on Feb. 1, was accurately placed into permanent orbit over the equator Thursday, official news reports said.

Instruments aboard the satellite were working normally, the reports said.

China launched its first communications satellite into orbit over the Pacific in April 1984. The latest launch is the 18th since China's first blast-off in 1970.

The satellite was propelled into space by a three-stage Long March 3 carrier rocket, which along with the two-stage Long March 2 is now being offered to foreign nations to launch commercial satellites.

The state-owned Swedish Space Corp. is the first agency to enter negotiations with China on a possible launch, Swedish Embassy officials in Peking said Thursday.

Wichita State to exchange students

WICHITA — Officials from Wichita State University and Dankook University in Seoul, South Korea plan to sign Saturday an exchange agreement that has been three years in the making.

WSU President Warren Armstrong will fly to South Korea on Saturday to sign the pact with the Asian school.

The agreement provides for exchanges of faculty and students between the two schools in the next few years, Armstrong said Wednesday. Eventually, there also could be exchanges of administrators, scientific, technological and research information, sports teams and cultural artifacts.

Dankook University, which has an enrollment of about 30,000 students on its campuses in Seoul and Chunan, is financing the trip, he said.

Sit-in at high school halts classes

RUSSELL — A peaceful sit-in halted classes at Russell High School for three hours Thursday as pupils protested cutbacks in the school's programs.

Principal Carl Brooks said about 80 percent of the school's 330 pupils participated in the morning sit-in — with many of them playing cards, talking and reading as they sat on the floor in the east wing of the building.

Brooks said the demonstration ended after a committee of about 20 pupils met with the school superintendent and the school board president to discuss cutbacks planned for the next school year.

"The students who were on the committee asked very pointed questions and got good answers. They also got an agreement to hold a public meeting where the community can ask questions," Brooks said.

The school board voted Monday night to cut a number of staff positions in the district — including five teaching positions at the high school — and eliminate one high school program, vocational agriculture. Brooks said teaching positions in art, vocal music, industrial arts, business and vocational agriculture were being eliminated.

The cutback in vocational agriculture "is undoubtedly the most sensitive because we are reducing not only a teacher but also a program," he said.

Birth defect victims living longer

ATLANTA — Americans with birth defects are living longer than they did a decade ago, but birth defects remain a leading cause of early death in the United States, health researchers said Thursday.

Researchers at the national Centers for Disease Control reported that their statistical measurement of premature death — years of "potential life" lost — fell 16 percent between 1970-72 and 1980-82, the latest period for which complete figures were available.

In 1970-72, birth defects robbed Americans of 869,000 years of life that they would have had if everyone had lived to be 65. Ten years later, the total was 733,000 years. The federal health agency studied three-year periods to minimize the effects of year-by-year fluctuations.

"Much of this decline may be attributed to improvements in the care of infants born with congenital anomalies (birth defects), resulting in an increased survival rate," the Atlanta-based CDC said in its weekly report.

CDC researchers calculated the number of years lost by drawing upon cause-of-death findings made by coroners and other local officials across the country. If a person died at 40 from some birth defect, for example, that would add 25 years to the total of "life-years" lost.

Overall, birth defects are the leading cause of infant death and are the fifth-leading cause of premature death among all Americans under 65. Accidents are the leading cause of premature death, accounting for 20 percent of all life-years lost.

The leading cause of birth-defect-related premature death was malformations of the cardiovascular system — the heart and blood vessels — accounting for 45 percent of life-years lost in 1980-82, the CDC said.

While premature deaths from birth defects have declined, the incidence of birth defects itself has not, the CDC said.

Economy growth below estimates

WASHINGTON — The economy grew at a sluggish 1.2 percent rate in the final three months of last year, far below previous estimates, the government reported Thursday.

But many analysts predicted better days ahead as plunging oil prices help revive economic growth.

The Commerce Department said it sharply lowered its estimate for growth in the gross national product from October through December to reflect further deterioration in the country's trade deficit.

The 1.2 percent growth rate in the GNP after adjusting for inflation was the weakest performance since a 1.1 percent rate in the April-June quarter last year. The economy expanded at a 3 percent rate in the third quarter.

It marked the second time the Commerce Department has slashed fourth quarter growth by more than a full percentage point. The government started out estimating the economy was expanding at a 3.2 percent rate at the end of the year. That figure was reduced last month to 2.4 percent.

British leader wants grandchildren

LONDON — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said Thursday that she longs for grandchildren to baby-sit and considers her 35-year marriage a "great love story."

"As well as a great love story, it's a great friendship story, and a great common-interest story. It's everything," she said in an interview with London's Daily Express newspaper.

Thatcher, 60, said her husband Denis, 70 — frequently lampooned by the British media as a golf-mad, henpecked tippler — will find "refuge" from the official 10 Downing St. residence later this year in their new home in the south London district of Dulwich. He is a retired oil executive.

Thatcher, whose 32-year-old twins, Mark and Carol, are both single, was quoted as saying she felt deprived because she has no grandchildren.

"I'd be a very good grandmother and a great baby-sitter, and I'd love to have the grandchildren here if their parents wanted to go away."

Pop star travels to West Germany

BERLIN — Pop star Madonna and her husband, actor Sean Penn, arrived in Berlin on Thursday surrounded by 15 bodyguards who held off photographers and fans.

The couple traveled to Berlin from Hong Kong for the West German debut of "At Close Range," in which Penn stars. The film will be shown this week at the Berlin Film Festival.

Bodyguards formed a tight circle around the couple, but Penn took no chances. Pulling his long coat up over his head, he rushed through the Tegel airport lobby and into a waiting car with Madonna at his side.

Penn, is known for his aversion to photographers, and has been in several fights with them.

A clarification is needed in Thursday's story "Jardine residents want cats, dogs." Tracy Schemper, freshman in business administration, circulated the petition to less than 240 of the 500 apartments at Jardine Terrace.

Due to a reporter's error in Thursday's story, "Johnson wins race drawing more than 55 percent of vote," the number of votes which Steve Cashman, junior in marketing, received was incorrectly stated. Cashman received 854 votes.

Due to a reporter's error, the person doing the research for the American Heart Association was misidentified in Thursday's story "Heart studies to draw funds." Brian Spooner, professor of biology, is conducting the research.

Senate bill may give regents control over community colleges

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

TOPEKA — A Senate bill that would transfer supervisory authority for community colleges from the state Board of Education to the Kansas Board of Regents would improve post-secondary education and make better use of tax dollars, state Sen. Wint Winter Jr. of Lawrence said Thursday.

The bill, submitted by the Republican senator and referred to as Senate Bill 402, would make no substantive changes in the authority of the community college boards and trustees, Winter said during testimony to the regents.

Adding review of community colleges to the regents' agenda would change the board from strictly a governing board into "a governing/coordinating board," said Stanley Koplik, executive director of the regents.

"It would call for governance over the existing institutions and coordination of the state's 19 community colleges," Koplik said.

Each of the institutions would share facilities, instructors and begin coordinating research under the transfer provided for by the bill. If passed, the legislation would become effective July 1.

Passage of the bill is essential considering the decline in state revenues and the growing competition for general funds, Winter said.

"What we have in post-secondary education is a very fragmented situation, with the private institutions, community colleges and universities competing," he said.

Five regents voted to favor the bill, and the remaining four abstained. The vote indicated the regents' willingness to accept responsibility for the community colleges in Kansas if the Legislature decides to grant that authority.

"The board's authority would be to review new programs and theoretically coordinate any of the college's programs and coordinate and make suggestions," Winter said. Winter expressed confidence that the legislative leadership — including Gov. John Carlin — and community college administrators are interested in the transfer. Carlin is concerned about the new demands the bill would place on the regents' staff, Winter said.

Erie regent Richard Reinhardt said he sympathized with Carlin's concern about the increased work load.

"I agree with the philosophical gist of the proposal, but I'm afraid that my mail carrier will have to get a truck," he said.

Junction City regent John Montgomery, who presides over discussion of policy and procedure matters, said the board has hesitated to approach the issue because it didn't want to make it appear the board was making a power play.

Regents Norman Brandeberry, Russell, and Patricia Caruthers, Kansas City, said they believe if the community colleges are brought under regent control, duplication of programs would necessitate closing of some institutions.

"I still think if you do program revisions at 19 community colleges there will be doors closed," Caruthers said.

But Winter said under his bill no mechanism for control would be available to the regents to close a community college. The Board of Education would retain that authority, he said.

Provisions of Winter's bill would make actions of the community college boards of trustees subject to the rules and regulations of the regents. The regents would also be able to review contracts with educational institutions or agencies located outside of the state.

The proposed legislation directs the regents to adopt regulations and prescribe criteria for establishing rules for approval of programs receiving state aid.

Brandeberry said he abstained because the board would be "accepting all the responsibility, but not the authority."

Regent chairwoman Sandra McMullen of Hutchinson, Dick Doddridge of Kansas City and Caruthers all abstained.

Change in fee listing concerns senators

By JUDY GOLDBERG
Collegian Reporter

A change in the way the University catalog lists fees is concerning many student senators, said Catherine Saylor, non-degree graduate.

The 1986-1987 catalog will not list the Union Annex II Bonds, or the Recreational Building Bonds used to fund the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, because they have been terminated by the purchase of a refunding bond, said George Miller, vice president for administration and finance.

The refunding bond was purchased during the fall and it retired the outstanding student fee debt, which included the Union Annex II Bonds and the Recreational Building Bonds. Among other benefits, it saved the University more than $1 million, Miller said.

Students had been paying $10.25 a semester for the Union Annex II Bonds and $12 a semester for the Recreational Building Bonds. The combined amount is the same they will pay for the refunding bond, according to a draft copy of the new catalog.

Saylor said she and other senators believe students should know about the original intent of the fees.

"We want it known that past senators committed students to pay money for the Rec Center and the Union Annex," she said. "It is deceptive to tell a student simply 'you're paying $22.25 for the refunding bond.'"

She said the listed fees would give students something specific for their money.

"They don't see the refunding bond; it's not a service that they are aware of so students are left asking, 'Why are you taking $22 from me?'" she said.

Students will be more apt to appreciate the Rec Complex and the Union if they realize this, she said.

"I want them to know the original justification for taking the money, so they are aware that they paid for these services and they have a right to use them," Saylor said.

"I'm afraid, for example, if they aren't aware that the original reason for taking $12 a semester was to finance the Rec Center, they will be less likely to take advantage of the services it offers," she said.

Miller said it would be false to tell the students they are paying for the Union Annex II and Recreation Building Bonds, because the bonds have been replaced.

"Legally the $22.25 is for the refunding bond and not for those other bonds," he said.

Miller said putting an asterisk by the refunding bond and explaining it elsewhere in the catalog, and making the schedule of fees the official document, may be a possible solution.

"I think that it could be footnoted somewhere," he said.

He said if this were done it would explain the bond refunded various outstanding student debts and created new accounts for the Rec Complex and the Union.

Bloodmobile donations feel effect of influenza

By The Collegian Staff

The spring semester Bloodmobile drive is winding down, and today is the last day blood can be donated.

Blood can be donated from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. today in the Union K, S and U rooms.

This time the Bloodmobile drive has experienced a little less turnout than in the past, said Troy Millsap, junior in secondary education and Bloodmobile student co-chairperson.

Millsap said he places a large portion of the blame for the low turnout on the influenza virus.

"Unfortunately we've had to turn away some people who were sick. We have also had others pass out on us after giving blood — it's had its effect," Millsap said.

The Bloodmobile's original goal this semester was set at 1,400 pints, although it's unlikely that number will be reached, Millsap said. Currently 960 pints have been donated.

"We are hoping for a good turnout tomorrow due to the large number of open time slots for donations, but we'll just have to wait and see," nuclear engineering and other departments who are familiar with radiation safety practices comprise the committee.

Dean Eckhoff, head of the nuclear engineering department, said the committee reviews all changes or experiments with any remote connection to the reactor.

"We go over all records and have a semiannual inspection," Eckhoff. "We're the supporting cast of the experimenter."

Faw said the nuclear reactor has been well-accepted on campus and has 3,000 visitors a year.

"Safety is one of our priority concerns, and we've never been cited for violations of anything," he said. "I'm quite happy with the operation."

Senate hears nominations for 1986-87 chair position

By The Collegian Staff

The 1986-87 Student Senate heard nominations for the chairman position at its first meeting Thursday in the Union Big Eight room. Sally Traeger, junior in marketing, was the only nominee.

Senate will hear further nominations and vote for the chairmanship at its next meeting. It will also hear nominations and vote for senate vice chairman and Faculty Senate representative.

In its final business, the 1985-86 senate passed a resolution commending Jack Hartman, head basketball coach. The resolution was sponsored by Bruce Ney, senior in agricultural journalism, and Mark Jones, senior in management and senate chairman.

Senate also passed a bill commending Jones and Steve Brown, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and former student body president, for their contributions to student government and the students.

prises four individuals appointed from Nebraska and one person from K-State's veterinary college.

Under the terms of the contract, Nebraska is obligated by the agreement to construct the Center for Advanced Studies in Food Animal Medicine by May 1990 in Clay Center, Neb., at no cost to K-State. The facility will provide clinical training for all students enrolled in the veterinary medicine college. The center will include housing facilities for at least 20 students.

If approved by the Nebraska regents, the agreement will run for an indefinite period, with reviews at least once every four years.

Either institution can terminate the agreement, but each Nebraska student enrolled in the veterinary college will be permitted to complete his or her course work as long as academic and fee obligations are met.

The agreement also indicates that the two universities will develop other cooperative programs in continuing education, cooperative extension and service.

The University honors contracts with five states and Puerto Rico concerning admission of students into the professional program. The contracts assure a certain number of positions to out-of-state students, who are allowed to pay in-state tuition.

Elections become commercial item

Save your pennies and buy, steal or rent a VCR; the biennial election ordeal is about to begin. Longer than the baseball season, more confusing than tax law, 1986 election "news" is soon to become more prominent than late night movies.

Eventually, we vote. We are expected to be educated citizens and loyal political party members. Sometimes we listen to televised campaign events, and sooner or later we find out the results of whatever election is most recent. The result is, we are apathetic.

My personal apathy about campaigns wars with naive hopefulness. All the time convinced that nothing good is going to get done by governmental officials, I vote anyway hoping that maybe, just maybe, they'll surprise me and do something right for a change — like Student Senate did when it recently allocated the $700,000.

Congressional and presidential elections have had such poor voter turnouts in the recent history it's a wonder we still bother.

Much of the national apathy toward elections seems to have appeared with the advent of television and consequently, the political commercial. Campaigns are covered by every mass communication medium in America and often the coverage is overbearing.

The real root of the problem lies in the appearance and dominance of campaigns. Viewpoints of political figures and governmental procedures appear so alarmingly complex that individuals who were not born into a politically adept atmosphere began to believe they should have started learning about the process in grade school and so as adults believe they have no chance to catch up.

JONIE TRUED
Collegian Columnist

The media generally have not been helpful in unraveling the mysteries of politics for the average American and have instead bombarded the public with campaign news in an effort to force individuals to realize what's going on.

My experience with campaign publicity has left me with the impression that the political scene is much like a soap opera. If one watches constantly for two weeks, it's pretty easy to figure out and come to the conclusion that very few characters are not driven by greed.

Another area of politics Americans have grown apathetic about is how much campaigns cost. The average cost of winning a contested House seat is estimated to be around $500,000. Senate campaigns are often more than $10 million. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., set the current record at $16 million for his 1984 campaign.

Small donors, usually made up of average citizens, made up more than 50 percent of total contributions in 1974. Of course, only about $75 million was spent that year. In 10 years, total contributions for congressional elections have reached $375 million. Small donor contributions have increased only to about $90 million.

That means that corporations, wealthy donors, political action committees and bank loans made up the other $285 million spent on congressional elections in 1984.

The House has recently started looking into some possible limitations concerning how campaigns are funded and, as an incentive to small donors, approved full tax-credits for political donations to House or Senate campaigns.

This is not enough.

Elections, for any level of government should be limited not in regard to funding alone, but also should not be allowed to drag on for such a long period of time. Perhaps campaigns should be limited to the number of weeks merchants take to thrust Christmas in our faces. As it stands most Americans are more involved and definitely more informed about yuletide savings than they are about political choices.

Because of the overwhelming nature of election publicity the political process has become so commonplace it appears unimportant. The aura of politics has become like an unmade bed. It's there. We never consider analyzing it and we are more likely to close the door to the room rather than make the bed.

The political apathy we suffer stems from overindulgence. Government and media must realize that in order for the electoral process to remain effective both money and time for the season must be limited.

The average American with one dollar and one vote will not regain confidence in his or her ability to influence public elections if they continue to perceive that dollars, endurance and media prominence equal votes.

Organization opposes degrading of women

A group of K-State students this semester has joined a nationwide effort to oppose pornography and other forms of degradation of women.

The Committee Opposed to Violence Against Women has stated that its goal is to educate the campus on the effects of pornography on attitudes of and behavior to women.

A student organization focusing on educating the campus about human degradation is an idea whose time has come. Groups seeking to end degrading literature and porno flicks should center exclusively on educating audiences on the effects of the publications.

But as groups state their goals to educate, they too often digress into picketing and staging marches and walks which are often ineffectual. Business owners generally do not allow picket lines and protesters to drive them out of lucrative enterprises.

Likewise, the organizations tend to lobby for government intervention in an area entirely dictated by personal choice.

These are actions of which Americans should consider all impacts. The fight to scourge our society of porno flicks and questionable literature by governmental control through a constitutional amendment is not a fight we should want to win.

Currently, a report by the Meese Commission on Pornography is said to contain recommendations that would negatively affect the First Amendment. Restrictions recommended in this report would not only affect the sex publication industry but would equally restrict expression, literature and arts. Events such as book burning and banning would have a greater chance of recurring, and Americans would soon realize how unreasonable it is to create restricted freedoms.

Narrowly construed, the Constitution's First Amendment guaranteed political and religious expression and reporting surrounding those topics. But the First Amendment guarantees much more.

By restraining our freedoms to only those considered good for us, we have given up the choices for which this country was founded and promised to defend. To make an intelligent decision on whether we, as individuals, are going to support human degradation in the form of porno flicks, we must be educated to its effects and rely on personal conscience. But to maintain our right to freedom of expression we must allow all types of expression to exist to ensure the choices remain ours.

Generosity aids cause of proposed coliseum

Because of the generosity of a University supporter, the prospect of the construction a quality coliseum without further cutbacks is improving.

Fred Bramlage, the donor for whom the proposed coliseum is named, has kicked in an additional $640,000 beyond his original gift of $1.75 million.

The coliseum architect, Bill Livingston of Gossen Livingston Associates of Wichita, met with University officials Tuesday and they agreed on a construction cost of $15.9 million. Bramlage's contribution along with other KSU Foundation assets will provide financing for the project.

President Duane Acker must review a recommendation by the Coliseum Program Committee that planning should continue. If Acker approves the redesigned plan, he will request approval from the Kansas Board of Regents to remove the $14.5 million budget cap so planning may proceed.

The quality and multipurpose functions of the coliseum are still in question because of the elimination of administrative offices, coaches offices and the concession/restroom facility at the north end of the coliseum.

Despite the shortcomings of the project, it is important to recognize Bramlage's dedication to the University. Thank you, Mr. Bramlage.

Administrators show concern for students

The recent announcement that fees paid by students will be itemized on next semester's fee cards is proof that student opinion does have some effect on University administration.

At the beginning of the fall 1985 semester, special fees were lumped together in one sum rather than being listed separately on fee cards students received during registration. University Controller John Moore said there was not enough space to print the fees on the front of the cards, and because fees change often, eliminating the itemization was a cost-saving measure.

After students questioned the move, Student Senate passed a resolution which made breakdown sheets available at spring registration. But concerned students weren't satisfied with the less-permanent itemization.

A compromise has now been made to satisfy students' curiosity as to where their money is going. The special fees total will be listed on the front of the card with an asterisk referring students to the back of the card for the itemization.

The decision shows a responsible attitude on the part of University administrators, and it is encouraging to know students care enough about where and how their money is spent to notice the difference.

Letters

Privacy in voting

Editor,

I would like to commend the Student Governing Association's Elections Committee for a job well done with this year's elections. But I would like to bring attention to a dangerous precedent set at Wednesday's runoff election.

Voters were told to circle their choice and that they were not to fold their ballot before putting it in the box. The ballots were marked on an open table and there were no provisions made so that a voter could conceal his or her choice. By not folding the ballot any number of people in the area could see your ballot.

In a university environment there is a large amount of peer pressure. The set up at this year's runoff election allowed peer pressure to play a part. This cannot be beneficial to a democratic system.

These type of complications were recognized when Australia introduced the first secret ballot elections in 1858. The United States followed suit 30 years later. I realize that SGA can't provide closed voting booths, but being able to fold your ballot would aid the democratic process. Even if the Elections Committee has to spend more time counting votes, we must remember that democracy is only as strong as its weakest link. Just ask the Philippines.

Cisneros a leader

Editor,

Re: Bryan Riley's Feb. 20 letter concerning Mayor Cisneros' convocation.

I did not attend Mayor Cisneros' convocation to take notes in order to write a letter to the editor, and apparently Bryan Riley did not either. After reading his opinion in the Collegian, I was appalled by his obvious tunnel vision. Cisneros was not calling for increased aid. Cisneros was here to talk about cities, and not to spite agriculture.

As I recall, Cisneros said cities need both a defense and an offense; a defense because as a nation we must be responsive to the needs of 70 percent of our population that lives in the cities, and an offense because cities need to take charge of their destinies, to ask the big questions and to plan for the future. Cities cannot wallow in past and present states of economic depression, but should look to the future to turn disadvantage into opportunity.

I do not believe that Cisneros was asking for a handout, but was demonstrating the type of leadership that has made him one of the most popular political figures today — the type of leadership this nation desperately needs!

Engineer replies

Editor,

Re: Jerry Strunk's editorial, "Engineer abuse," in Feb. 17 Collegian.

Why don't you grow up? It is now the time in your life to realize that if you don't understand or are unfamiliar with procedures, ask someone. I have been in the College of Engineering for five years, and I haven't run across an administrator who wasn't willing to help or find someone who could.

If Strunk's eyes see only dehumanizing attitudes from the engineering administrators, then maybe he hasn't made an effort to be anything but a number. Since Strunk doesn't take the time to learn about his instructors, then maybe he is the dehumanizing person. An instructor may have up to 100 students in class; he is not going to remember every one of them. The instructor will, however, remember the one student who takes time and discusses any problems he or she may have.

As for the College of Engineering being an impersonalized atmosphere, this has to be one of the most absurd remarks I have ever read. Take a look in the halls between classes; you'll see students talking to students, and yes, believe it or not, administrators talking with students.

My experiences in the college as a whole, and also in the Department of Industrial Engineering, have led me to believe that the College of Engineering is one of the most personalized colleges on campus. The industrial engineering instructors will try to learn the names of each student they have in class.

The administrators of the college will help you any time you have a question, especially when it concerns the policies regarding being dropped from classes within the first two weeks. By the way, if you do not attend class by the third day, or do not have an adequate grade in a prerequisite, you will be dropped from that class.

Engineering is a profession not only pertaining to developing and expanding new ideas, but also a profession in communication. I would recommend that Strunk practice his communication skills if he wants to become a successful engineer.

Insulting story

Editor,

Re: The story, "Police question man for locker room visit," in the Feb. 18 Collegian.

I cannot believe an institution like K-State could afford to publish any information in its school newspaper without proper verification and editing of the information.

We, the accused students of Nigeria, think this is the biggest insult you can institute against anyone.

I don't know if this is an act of sabotage toward a particular group of students at Kansas State or an intentional act to discredit Nigerian students.

We feel in this context, that both the editor, the news reporter and the K-State Police Department should render an apology with immediate effect and automatic alacrity.

The apology should be published in the Collegian on the front page before other necessary actions are undertaken to refute this deliberate, wanton and malicious act.

We would appreciate your immediate cooperation in this regard.

Spokesmen disfavor ag reorganization

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — State Agriculture Secretary Harland Priddle and a host of farm organization spokesmen paraded before the Senate Agriculture Committee Thursday, urging rejection of Gov. John Carlin's executive order to reorganize the state Board of Agriculture.

They argued unanimously that the present system of having representatives of farm organizations elect the state board, which in turn picks the agriculture secretary, has worked well for 114 years, keeps politics out of Kansas agricultural policy and programs and is the envy of other states.

They said they know Carlin is sincere in his belief that reducing the board to an advisory body and having the secretary appointed by the governor would improve the system, but said his arguments for the changes defy the reality of how well the system now operates.

"I feel very strongly about this," said former state Sen. Arden Booth, who farms west of Lawrence. "Since I reserve the right to myself to be wrong, I suppose I must accord that right to others. But in my opinion, in this instance the governor is dead wrong."

Priddle, Board of Agriculture President Jack Beauchamp of Ottawa, State Fair Executive Secretary Robert A. Gottschalk of Hutchinson and lobbyists for the Kansas Farm Bureau, Kansas Livestock Association, Kansas Association of Wheat Growers, the Committee of Kansas Farm Organization and others lined up solidly opposed to the change.

They answered arguments from proponents, including representatives of the governor's office and four farm groups, who told the committee Monday the changes Carlin proposes are critical to bringing leadership and accountability to agricultural policymaking in Kansas.

Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa, said the committee would discuss and probably vote Monday on a resolution sponsored by 22 senators which would reject Carlin's executive order. It takes just 21 votes to adopt the resolution, killing the order.

If neither house of the Legislature adopts a resolution of disapproval this session, the order would take effect July 1.

Priddle faulted Carlin's reorganization order because, he said, "It does not provide you alternatives, nor does it provide you specific advantages to be gained by dismantling a system which has proven to be effective, creditable and responsive in the past as well as continuing to be effective in the future."

Priddle said turnover in agriculture secretaries which would occur as administrations change "is not conducive to continuity or long term planning." He said changes in

U.S. secretaries of agriculture is proof of that.

The present secretary also challenged Carlin's claim that the present board and department are not accountable to the people. "We are totally accountable to the executive branch, as well as the legislative branch, and the private citizens of Kansas through the laws we enforce and the dollars we spend," he said.

Beauchamp said the board never wants to dictate agricultural policy for Kansas, preferring to allow "grassroots people to speak for themselves" and to be a conduit for handling policy developed by farm groups, the governor and the Legislature.

"Although our agency has not acted as a development source for legislative input, we have assisted in very possible way to encourage dialogue and urged organizations and commodity groups to have their voice heard at the action level in Kansas and in Washington, D.C.," Beauchamp added.

Gottschalk said the state fair board strongly opposes Carlin's proposal to put it under administration of the state Agriculture Department.

Paul Fleener, lobbyist for the Farm Bureau, said the state's largest farm organization has studied the issue several times over the years and "our members have always found the present system to be meritorious."

"Everyone agrees the situation (in agriculture) is dire," Fleener said.

Legislators reconsider state lottery measure

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — House Speaker Mike Hayden said Thursday a state lottery resolution could be brought to a vote again in the House as early as the first week in March.

"I would like to see it come up again soon," Hayden said after the House voted 89-35 Thursday to reconsider its rejection of the lottery measure one day earlier.

"But it will have to be the week after next at least," said Hayden, who added that the House has scheduled debate next week on other prominent issues such as medical malpractice legislation.

Following the decision to revive the proposal to let voters decide whether to establish a state-owned lottery, the House voted 92-33 to put the measure back on the debate calendar.

The resolution needed 84 votes, or two-thirds support, to be reconsidered in the 125-member House — the same number the constitutional amendment needed Wednesday before it would be placed on the November ballot.

Several urban lawmakers, who voted against the lottery when the House killed the proposal 79-46 on Wednesday, supported the successful move to reconsider the vote. Hayden has said he believes some of the key legislators who voted to revive the measure may eventually join pro-lottery forces.

The move to reconsider was significant because the measure already has passed in the 40-member Senate, which voted 28-11 for the resolution last April. If the House had not voted to reconsider the action, an entirely new resolution would have had to clear both houses of the Legislature this session in order to be placed before the voters in November.

The action Wednesday was the first time in Kansas history the issue had reached the House floor for a vote. The resolution would change the Kansas Constitution by adding a new exception to a prohibition against gambling. Bingo games are the only exception now in that section of the constitution.

Meanwhile, Gov. John Carlin's press secretary said Thursday he believes public pressure on House members to vote for the lottery had increased after the action Wednesday.

Swenson said he thinks the lottery resolution was in "good shape" after being rescued from the legislative scrap heap and returned to the debate calendar.

Grenada welcomes Reagan as hero

By The Associated Press

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada — President Reagan on Thursday retraced the steps of American invasion forces that ousted a radical Marxist government from the island 27 months ago and vowed the United States also "must help those struggling for freedom in Nicaragua."

Reagan flew here to honor the 19 servicemen killed in three days of fighting that forced Cuban troops from Grenada and led to democratic elections.

In a speech, Reagan likened events in Nicaragua to those before the invasion of Grenada and declared he won't be satisfied "until all the people of the Americas have joined us in the warm justice."

"When to speak :

law, and the goons are not running the jails, they are in the jails," he said.

While making no overt threats against Nicaragua, Reagan's statements could hardly be construed as comforting to the leftist government 1,500 miles to the west.

Administration officials have said they have no plans to invade Nicaragua, but are making a concentrated effort to gain congressional support for $100 million in aid for rebel groups trying to overthrow the Sandinista regime in Managua.

When asked by reporters before his speech if he had any plans to use military force in Nicaragua, the president said, "No, I think it's an entirely different situation. We have here. We hear the same excuses made for the communists, while the people of Nicaragua see their freedom slowly but surely eaten away."

On Oct. 25, 1983, a 6,000-member U.S. force invaded Grenada and removed a military junta that had seized power six days earlier. Reagan described it as a rescue mission for about 600 American students at St. George's University Medical School campus.

In his speech, Reagan portrayed Cuba as an international menace and said President Fidel Castro's "tyranny still weighs heavy on the shoulders of his people and threatens the peace and freedom of the

Spokesmen disfavor ag reorganization

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — State Agriculture Secretary Harland Priddle and a host of farm organization spokesmen paraded before the Senate Agriculture Committee Thursday, urging rejection of Gov. John Carlin's executive order to reorganize the state Board of Agriculture.

They argued unanimously that the present system of having representatives of farm organizations elect the state board, which in turn picks the agriculture secretary, has worked well for 114 years, keeps politics out of Kansas agricultural policy and programs and is the envy of other states.

They said they know Carlin is sincere in his belief that reducing the board to an advisory body and having the secretary appointed by the governor would improve the system, but said his arguments for the changes defy the reality of how well the system now operates. "I feel very strongly about this," said former state Sen. Arden Booth, who farms west of Lawrence. "Since I reserve the right to myself to be wrong, I suppose I must accord that right to others. But in my opinion, in this instance the governor is dead wrong."

Priddle, Board of Agriculture President Jack Beauchamp of Ottawa, State Fair Executive Secretary Robert A. Gottschalk of Hutchinson and lobbyists for the Kansas Farm Bureau, Kansas Livestock Association, Kansas Association of Wheat Growers, the Committee of Kansas Farm Organization and others lined up solidly opposed to the change.

They answered arguments from proponents, including representatives of the governor's office and four farm groups, who told the committee Monday the changes Carlin proposes are critical to bringing leadership and accountability to agricultural policymaking in Kansas.

Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa, said the committee would discuss and probably vote Monday on a resolution sponsored by 22 senators which would reject Carlin's executive order. It takes just 21 votes to adopt the resolution, killing the order.

If neither house of the Legislature adopts a resolution of disapproval this session, the order would take effect July 1.

Priddle faulted Carlin's reorganization order because, he said, "It does not provide you alternatives, nor does it provide you specific advantages to be gained by dismantling a system which has proven to be effective, creditable and responsive in the past as well as continuing to be effective in the future."

Priddle said turnover in agriculture secretaries which would occur as administrations change "is not conducive to continuity or long term planning." He said changes in

U.S. secretaries of agriculture is proof of that.

The present secretary also challenged Carlin's claim that the present board and department are not accountable to the people. "We are totally accountable to the executive branch, as well as the legislative branch, and the private citizens of Kansas through the laws we enforce and the dollars we spend," he said.

Beauchamp said the board never wants to dictate agricultural policy for Kansas, preferring to allow "grassroots people to speak for themselves" and to be a conduit for handling policy developed by farm groups, the governor and the Legislature.

"Although our agency has not acted as a development source for legislative input, we have assisted in very possible way to encourage dialogue and urged organizations and commodity groups to have their voice heard at the action level in Kansas and in Washington, D.C.," Beauchamp added.

Gottschalk said the state fair board strongly opposes Carlin's proposal to put it under administration of the state Agriculture Department.

Paul Fleener, lobbyist for the Farm Bureau, said the state's largest farm organization has studied the issue several times over the years and "our members have always found the present system to be meritorious."

"Everyone agrees the situation (in agriculture) is dire," Fleener said.

Legislators reconsider state lottery measure

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — House Speaker Mike Hayden said Thursday a state lottery resolution could be brought to a vote again in the House as early as the first week in March.

"I would like to see it come up again soon," Hayden said after the House voted 89-35 Thursday to reconsider its rejection of the lottery measure one day earlier.

"But it will have to be the week after next at least," said Hayden, who added that the House has scheduled debate next week on other prominent issues such as medical malpractice legislation.

Following the decision to revive the proposal to let voters decide whether to establish a state-owned lottery, the House voted 92-33 to put the measure back on the debate calendar.

The resolution needed 84 votes, or two-thirds support, to be reconsidered in the 125-member House — the same number the constitutional amendment needed Wednesday before it would be placed on the November ballot.

Several urban lawmakers, who voted against the lottery when the House killed the proposal 79-46 on Wednesday, supported the successful move to reconsider the vote. Hayden has said he believes some of the key legislators who voted to revive the measure may eventually join pro-lottery forces.

The move to reconsider was significant because the measure already has passed in the 40-member Senate, which voted 28-11 for the resolution last April. If the House had not voted to reconsider the action, an entirely new resolution would have had to clear both houses of the Legislature this session in order to be placed before the voters in November.

The action Wednesday was the first time in Kansas history the issue had reached the House floor for a vote. The resolution would change the Kansas Constitution by adding a new exception to a prohibition against gambling. Bingo games are the only exception now in that section of the constitution.

Meanwhile, Gov. John Carlin's press secretary said Thursday he believes public pressure on House members to vote for the lottery had increased after the action Wednesday.

Swenson said he thinks the lottery resolution was in "good shape" after being rescued from the legislative scrap heap and returned to the debate calendar.

Grenada welcomes Reagan as hero

By The Associated Press

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada — President Reagan on Thursday retraced the steps of American invasion forces that ousted a radical Marxist government from the island 27 months ago and vowed the United States also "must help those struggling for freedom in Nicaragua."

Reagan flew here to honor the 19 servicemen killed in three days of fighting that forced Cuban troops from Grenada and led to democratic elections.

In a speech, Reagan likened events in Nicaragua to those before the invasion of Grenada and declared he won't be satisfied "until all the people of the Americas have joined us in the warm justice."

"When to speak a law, and the goons are not running the jails, they are in the jails," he said.

While making no overt threats against Nicaragua, Reagan's statements could hardly be construed as comforting to the leftist government 1,500 miles to the west.

Administration officials have said they have no plans to invade Nicaragua, but are making a concentrated effort to gain congressional support for $100 million in aid for rebel groups trying to overthrow the Sandinista regime in Managua.

When asked by reporters before his speech if he had any plans to use military force in Nicaragua, the president said, "No, I think it's an entirely different situation. We have here. We hear the same excuses made for the communists, while the people of Nicaragua see their freedom slowly but surely eaten away."

On Oct. 25, 1983, a 6,000-member U.S. force invaded Grenada and removed a military junta that had seized power six days earlier. Reagan described it as a rescue mission for about 600 American students at St. George's University Medical School campus.

In his speech, Reagan portrayed Cuba as an international menace and said President Fidel Castro's "tyranny still weighs heavy on the shoulders of his people and threatens the peace and freedom of the

Contestants to rock like best for MS

By MARIBETH GOTTSCHALK Staff Writer

The chance is coming for K-State students to see Madonna, Pat Benatar, the Blues Brothers, Van Halen, and the Go-Gos perform live — all in one evening, and at one location.

At 8 p.m. Tuesday, the K-State chapter of Students Against Multiple Sclerosis is sponsoring the "Rock Alike Event," a lip-sync contest at Mannequins. Proceeds will go toward the research of Multiple Sclerosis, the neurological disease which every week strikes more than 200 young adults between the ages of 18 and 24.

February has been declared "Bust MS" month, and SAMS has launched several fund-raising activities to reach their goal of $15,000, said Caroline Tsen, junior in pre-medicine and special events coordinator for SAMS.

"This (Rock Alike) makes students, whether they contribute or not, aware that MS is a terrible disease," Tsen said.

The contestants' pictures will be displayed in the Union today, Monday and Tuesday, accompanied by a collection jar. The contestant with the most money will receive points toward the performance in the lip-sync segment.

Groups represented and the celebrities they're impersonating are Moore Hall, Motley Crue; Alpha Chi Omega, Pat Benatar; Alpha Delta Pi, Pat Benatar; Chi Omega, Madonna; Delta Delta Gamma, Van Halen; Kappa Kappa Gamma, the Go-Gos; Sigma Chi, The Blues Brothers; Sigma Phi Epsilon, Lynrd Skynyrd; and Order of Omega, The Blues Brothers.

During the contest there will be a raffle held for a "Night out on the Little Apple." This will include passes to Manhattan Commonwealth theaters, dinner at Ric's Cafe, limousine service and one dozen long-stemmed red roses. There will also be an auction of items such as limousine service and tanning sessions.

On March 3 both residence halls and Greek houses are encouraged to participate in "Miss-A-Meal." The event asks living groups to donate to MS the money it would cost for a meal.

Creative Dramatics

Sharing life's 'deadly emotions'

The truth is, we're all actors.

That's what Norman "Doc" Fedder says. Fedder, a professor of speech, teaches Creative Dramatics.

Drama is, in a sense, rehearsing for life, Fedder said. Expressing and relating are necessary on stage and in all life situations.

The course is divided into five drama activities, beginning with theater games and stories and leading into social and personal problem-solving. Students in Creative Dramatics learn how to relate to people, take leadership positions, and gain self-confidence.

"I've learned how to get up in front of people and not feel uncomfortable," said Todd Woerpel, junior in leisure studies. "I'll have to deal with people and be a leader in some situations so this is helping overcome fears of being in front of people."

Kevin Kriss, senior in pre-law, agrees acting will help him outside of class.

"Acting is a matter of opening up and letting go, so that will always help in other situations," he said.

Some students may start the class as introverts — shy about performing — but learn to express themselves by portraying characters.

Sometimes the person who contributes the least at first gets the most out of acting, Fedder said.

Fedder brings out the actor in every student by stressing creativity. By introducing each group of five or so students for a skit with a "microphone" made of an old sock pulled over a tennis ball and wrapped with athletic tape, an imaginary scene is set.

"Let's hear it for group No. 2!" announces Fedder as the students take the stage and become "Dr. Snow and the Flakes." This rendition of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," complete with a moral, is the first of the skits the students plan, but do not rehearse.

Each skit involves everyone — especially in laughter. Fedder said he stresses laughter because it makes people feel at home.

"We have a close relationship in here in a way you don't get in most classes," Fedder said. "It is a real atmosphere of sharing because everyone here gets a chance to stretch their 'selves.'"

Mary Blanton, junior in business administration, said going to class is like going to a club meeting because the group members have become friends.

"I was a little scared (to act) at first but now we are friends and we don't care. You learn to just let it all go," she said.

"There is a lot of laughter, but later in the year we get a lot of tears and it gets really intense," Fedder said.

These tears come when students act out personal and social dramas.

"The issues we deal with are very live, very real," Fedder said.

An atmosphere of sharing among the students allows them to deal with what Fedder calls the "deadly emotions" — anger, fear, jealousy. Students help each other to learn a sense of self, sometimes without trying to do so.

"By that time we get to be a real family. Ultimately you realize problems aren't as bad as you think because other people have the same problems. People come out of these situations with a greater liking of themselves," Fedder said.

The culminating activity for the class is a dramatization of "The Wizard of Oz," followed by a party. Unlike all the other improvised themes, this performance is rehearsed and performed in costumes designed by each student.

Creative drama allows creativity not offered in many university courses and many students are taking advantage of the opportunity. Only two theater majors are in this 600-level course.

Karen Zimmerman, junior in business administration, said the class gives her a chance to get away from the studying and homework in other classes and be creative.

Everyone has imagination and talent but it has to be brought out, Fedder said. Although most of the class is amateur, it is easy to explain why they act like professionals.

"They just let it all hang out and don't worry about others."

Legislators reconsider state lottery measure

TOPEKA — House Speaker Mike Hayden said Thursday a state lottery resolution could be brought to a vote again in the House as early as the first week in March.

"I would like to see it come up again soon," Hayden said after the House voted 89-35 Thursday to reconsider its rejection of the lottery measure one day earlier.

"But it will have to be the week after next at least," said Hayden, who added that the House has scheduled debate next week on other prominent issues such as medical malpractice legislation.

Following the decision to revive the proposal to let voters decide whether to establish a state-owned lottery, the House voted 92-33 to put the measure back on the debate calendar.

The resolution needed 84 votes, or two-thirds support, to be reconsidered in the 125-member House — the same number the constitutional amendment needed Wednesday before it would be placed on the November ballot.

Grenada welcomes Reagan as hero

By The Associated Press

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada — President Reagan on Thursday retraced the steps of American invasion forces that ousted a radical Marxist government from the island 27 months ago and vowed the United States also "must help those struggling for freedom in Nicaragua."

Reagan flew here to honor the 19 servicemen killed in three days of fighting that forced Cuban troops from Grenada and led to democratic elections.

In a speech, Reagan likened events in Nicaragua to those before the invasion of Grenada and declared he won't be satisfied "until all the people of the Americas have joined us in the warm justice."

"When I to speak at law, and the goons are not running the jails, they are in the jails," he said.

While making no overt threats against Nicaragua, Reagan's statements could hardly be construed as comforting to the leftist government 1,500 miles to the west.

Administration officials have said they have no plans to invade Nicaragua, but are making a concentrated effort to gain congressional support for $100 million in aid for rebel groups trying to overthrow the Sandinista regime in Managua.

When asked by reporters before his speech if he had any plans to use military force in Nicaragua, the president said, "No, I think it's an entirely different situation. We have here. We hear the same excuses made for the communists, while the people of Nicaragua see their freedom slowly but surely eaten away."

On Oct. 25, 1983, a 6,000-member U.S. force invaded Grenada and removed a military junta that had seized power six days earlier. Reagan described it as a rescue mission for about 600 American students at St. George's University Medical School campus.

In his speech, Reagan portrayed Cuba as an international menace and said President Fidel Castro's "tyranny still weighs heavily on the shoulders of his people and threatens the peace and freedom of the Film captures complications of infidelity

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

The plot for Bud Yorkin's "Twice in a Lifetime" is simple: A married man has an affair. That's it. But Yorkin deals with the situation so honestly that the characters come alive.

The story takes place in Seattle. Harry Mackenzie (Gene Hackman) is a steelworker who lives for Seattle Seahawks' football. On his 50th birthday the family gets together for a celebration. Afterward he heads off to his favorite bar to drink with his buddies from work and his best friend Nick (Brian Dennehy). Harry's wife, Kate (Ellen Burstyn), doesn't go. She wants Harry to enjoy himself and she doesn't enjoy drinking. But there's a new barmaid at the bar this evening, Audrey (Ann-Margret), and Audrey doesn't mind it when Harry flirts with her.

Yorkin doesn't glamorize Harry and Audrey's affair; he shows the complications that result and he reveals how an entire family can be hurt. In situations like this there are no neat and tidy solutions. At times Yorkin struggles too hard for this honesty, though, and in those situations the movie is flat. At other times the movie looks like it belongs on a TV screen instead of a movie screen. But the moments when the honesty is genuine override the movie's weaknesses.

Gene Hackman certainly looks like a Harry Mackenzie, but there is a problem with his characterization. It's not so much a problem with his acting as it is with the screenplay. Harry is supposed to be a common blue-collar worker, but his affair practically transforms him into a philosopher. He becomes a better man through having an affair.

Part of this problem is caused because the movie lacks perspective. Yorkin tries to deal with an entire family and how they are affected, instead of concentrating on just the husband or wife.

Ellen Burstyn, as Harry's wife, whimpers through her early

TOPEKA — State Agriculture Secretary Harland Priddle and a host of farm organization spokesmen paraded before the Senate Agriculture Committee Thursday, urging rejection of Gov. John Carlin's executive order to reorganize the state Board of Agriculture.

They argued unanimously that the present system of having representatives of farm organizations elect the state board, which in turn picks the agriculture secretary, has worked well for 114 years, keeps politics out of Kansas agricultural policy and programs and is the envy of other states.

They said they know Carlin is sincere in his belief that reducing the board to an advisory body and having the secretary appointed by the governor would improve the system, but said his arguments for the changes defy the reality of how well the system now operates.

"I feel very strongly about this," said former state Sen. Arden Booth, who farms west of Lawrence. "Since I reserve the right to myself to be wrong, I suppose I must accord that right to others. But in my opinion, in this instance the governor is dead wrong."

Priddle, Board of Agriculture President Jack Beauchamp of Ottawa, State Fair Executive Secretary Robert A. Gottschalk of Hutchinson and lobbyists for the Kansas Farm Bureau, Kansas Livestock Association, Kansas Association of Wheat Growers, the Committee of Kansas Farm Organization and others lined up solidly opposed to the change.

They answered arguments from proponents, including representatives of the governor's office and four farm groups, who told the committee Monday the changes Carlin proposes are critical to bringing leadership and accountability to

Priddle faulted Carlin's reorganization order because, he said, "It does not provide you alternatives, nor does it provide you specific advantages to be gained by dismantling a system which has proven to be effective, creditable and responsive in the past as well as continuing to be effective in the future."

Priddle said turnover in agriculture secretaries which would occur as administrations change "is not conducive to continuity or long term planning." He said changes in

U.S. secretaries of agriculture is proof of that.

The present secretary also challenged Carlin's claim that the present board and department are not accountable to the people. "We are totally accountable to the executive branch, as well as the legislative branch, and the private citizens of Kansas through the laws we enforce and the dollars we spend," he said.

Beauchamp said the board never wants to dictate agricultural policy for Kansas, preferring to allow "grassroots people to speak for themselves" and to be a conduit for handling policy developed by farm groups, the governor and the Legislature.

Paul Fleener, lobbyist for the Farm Bureau, said the state's largest farm organization has studied the issue several times over the years and "our members have always found the present system to be meritorious."

"Everyone agrees the situation (in agriculture) is dire," Fleener said.

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada — President Reagan on Thursday retraced the steps of American invasion forces that ousted a radical Marxist government from the island 27 months ago and vowed the United States also "must help those struggling for freedom in Nicaragua."

Reagan flew here to honor the 19 servicemen killed in three days of fighting that forced Cuban troops from Grenada and led to democratic elections.

In a speech, Reagan likened events in Nicaragua to those before the invasion of Grenada and declared he won't be satisfied "until all the people of the Americas have joined us in the warm justice."

"When I to speak at law, and the goons are not running the jails, they are in the jails," he said.

While making no overt threats against Nicaragua, Reagan's statements could hardly be construed as comforting to the leftist government 1,500 miles to the west.

Administration officials have said they have no plans to invade Nicaragua, but are making a concentrated effort to gain congressional support for $100 million in aid for rebel groups trying to overthrow the Sandinista regime in Managua.

When asked by reporters before his speech if he had any plans to use military force in Nicaragua, the president said, "No, I think it's an entirely different situation. We have here. We hear the same excuses made for the communists, while the people of Nicaragua see their freedom slowly but surely eaten away."

On Oct. 25, 1983, a 6,000-member U.S. force invaded Grenada and removed a military junta that had seized power six days earlier. Reagan described it as a rescue mission for about 600 American students at St. George's University Medical School campus.

In his speech, Reagan portrayed Cuba as an international menace and said President Fidel Castro's "tyranny still weighs heavy on the shoulders of his people and threatens the peace and freedom of the scenes, but later on she positively starts to glow, as if she might've been better off getting rid of her husband long ago. Kate had repressed her own personality in favor of her husband's. Once she gets out from behind him she rediscovers life.

The strongest performance in the film is delivered by Amy Madigan as Harry's oldest daughter, Sunny. (Madigan has received an Academy Award nomination for Best Supporting Actress.) While her mother pleads for her father's return, Sunny becomes angry. Her parents act very civil about everything, but then Sunny steps in. She insists that her mother should get mad, that she should hunt down the old tomcat and kick his tail home.

The most remarkable thing about "Twice in a Lifetime" is the way Yorkin catches the rhythms of everyday speech. The film is full of those awkward pauses and hesitations that occur in conversations. And Yorkin renders those moments authentically.

Spokesmen disfavor ag reorganization

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — State Agriculture Secretary Harland Priddle and a host of farm organization spokesmen paraded before the Senate Agriculture Committee Thursday, urging rejection of Gov. John Carlin's executive order to reorganize the state Board of Agriculture.

They argued unanimously that the present system of having representatives of farm organizations elect the state board, which in turn picks the agriculture secretary, has worked well for 114 years, keeps politics out of Kansas agricultural policy and programs and is the envy of other states.

They said they know Carlin is sincere in his belief that reducing the board to an advisory body and having the secretary appointed by the governor would improve the system, but said his arguments for the changes defy the reality of how well the system now operates.

"I feel very strongly about this," said former state Sen. Arden Booth, who farms west of Lawrence. "Since I reserve the right to myself to be wrong, I suppose I must accord that right to others. But in my opinion, in this instance the governor is dead wrong."

Priddle, Board of Agriculture President Jack Beauchamp of Ottawa, State Fair Executive Secretary Robert A. Gottschalk of Hutchinson and lobbyists for the Kansas Farm Bureau, Kansas Livestock Association, Kansas Association of Wheat Growers, the Committee of Kansas Farm Organization and others lined up solidly opposed to the change.

They answered arguments from proponents, including representatives of the governor's office and four farm groups, who told the committee Monday the changes Carlin proposes are critical to bringing leadership and accountability to agricultural policymaking in Kansas.

Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa, said the committee would discuss and probably vote Monday on a resolution sponsored by 22 senators which would reject Carlin's executive order. It takes just 21 votes to adopt the resolution, killing the order.

If neither house of the Legislature adopts a resolution of disapproval this session, the order would take effect July 1.

Priddle faulted Carlin's reorganization order because, he said, "It does not provide you alternatives, nor does it provide you specific advantages to be gained by dismantling a system which has proven to be effective, creditable and responsive in the past as well as continuing to be effective in the future."

Priddle said turnover in agriculture secretaries which would occur as administrations change "is not conducive to continuity or long term planning." He said changes in

U.S. secretaries of agriculture is proof of that.

The present secretary also challenged Carlin's claim that the present board and department are not accountable to the people. "We are totally accountable to the executive branch, as well as the legislative branch, and the private citizens of Kansas through the laws we enforce and the dollars we spend," he said.

Beauchamp said the board never wants to dictate agricultural policy for Kansas, preferring to allow "grassroots people to speak for themselves" and to be a conduit for handling policy developed by farm groups, the governor and the Legislature.

"Although our agency has not acted as a development source for legislative input, we have assisted in very possible way to encourage dialogue and urged organizations and commodity groups to have their voice heard at the action level in Kansas and in Washington, D.C.," Beauchamp added.

Gottschalk said the state fair board strongly opposes Carlin's proposal to put it under administration of the state Agriculture Department.

Paul Fleener, lobbyist for the Farm Bureau, said the state's largest farm organization has studied the issue several times over the years and "our members have always found the present system to be meritorious."

"Everyone agrees the situation (in agriculture) is dire," Fleener said.

Legislators reconsider state lottery measure

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — House Speaker Mike Hayden said Thursday a state lottery resolution could be brought to a vote again in the House as early as the first week in March.

"I would like to see it come up again soon," Hayden said after the House voted 89-35 Thursday to reconsider its rejection of the lottery measure one day earlier.

"But it will have to be the week after next at least," said Hayden, who added that the House has scheduled debate next week on other prominent issues such as medical malpractice legislation.

Following the decision to revive the proposal to let voters decide whether to establish a state-owned lottery, the House voted 92-33 to put the measure back on the debate calendar.

The resolution needed 84 votes, or two-thirds support, to be reconsidered in the 125-member House — the same number the constitutional amendment needed Wednesday before it would be placed on the November ballot.

Several urban lawmakers, who voted against the lottery when the House killed the proposal 79-46 on Wednesday, supported the successful move to reconsider the vote. Hayden has said he believes some of the key legislators who voted to revive the measure may eventually join pro-lottery forces.

The move to reconsider was significant because the measure already has passed in the 40-member Senate, which voted 28-11 for the resolution last April. If the House had not voted to reconsider the action, an entirely new resolution would have had to clear both houses of the Legislature this session in order to be placed before the voters in November.

The action Wednesday was the first time in Kansas history the issue had reached the House floor for a vote. The resolution would change the Kansas Constitution by adding a new exception to a prohibition against gambling. Bingo games are the only exception now in that section of the constitution.

Meanwhile, Gov. John Carlin's press secretary said Thursday he believes public pressure on House members to vote for the lottery had increased after the action Wednesday.

Swenson said he thinks the lottery resolution was in "good shape" after being rescued from the legislative scrap heap and returned to the debate calendar.

Woods stressed that the president's budget figures must still pass congressional review and were not yet written in stone.

"This (presentation) is only the best interpretation of the impact of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings," Woods said.

Sandra McMullen, chairwoman of the regents and member of the special committee, said she believes the time may be ripe for program introspection.

"This is a forced opportunity to look and make certain that we have our priorities right so that we are sure we are meeting the needs of the state," McMullen said. "We can take this worst-case scenario and make it an opportunity."

Woods also requested the committee recommend to the regents a supplemental budget for extension and the experiment station of $417,789 to offset the shortfall in federal funding for fiscal year 1986.

Governmental funds were diminished by 0.6 percent in December 1985 when Congress reduced continuing resolution appropriations. An additional cut of 4.3 percent, to take effect March 1, is the result of Gramm-Rudman's impact on this year's fiscal budget.

Portions of the Gramm-Rudman act must also pass a review by the U.S. Supreme Court. The budget cuts for fiscal '86 would not be rescinded if the act were found to violate the Constitution, he said.

"We are in a state of change," Erie regent Richard Reinhardt told the committee. "People hear about extension and they think it's education for farmers. I don't think we too horns loud enough. We serve all of Kansas."

The three-member committee voted to recommend the supplemental budget request for the two programs. Their recommendation will go before the regents today. If the request is approved by the regents, the board must forward the request to the Kansas Legislature for its consideration.

Astronaut to manage shuttle program

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Richard Truly, the hard-nosed shuttle pilot who created the Naval Space Command, brings an astronaut's views to the heart of NASA's Challenger investigation at a time when some of those who fly the missions are worrying about shuttle launch procedures.

Truly, named Thursday as head of NASA's shuttle program and boss of its investigation into the explosion of the shuttle Challenger, demonstrated deftness at avoiding questions about astronaut unrest. But he didn't deny the turmoil, either.

"I've lived in that astronauts' office long enough that I'm afraid you'd better ask them," he told reporters at a news conference announcing the management shift in which Jesse Moore, head of the shuttle program, will take charge of the Johnson Space Center in Houston.

Sixteen years ago, Richard Truly was America's youngest astronaut, a 27-year old Navy officer with high hopes of an early space trip. He was to be disappointed, was passed over several times and didn't get into space until 1981 when he was pilot of the Columbia in the second space shuttle flight.

Two years later he commanded the shuttle Challenger in its first night launch and 24 hours after landing was asked to head up the new Naval Space Command. That's where he was last Friday when Navy Secretary John Lehman called Truly, who is a rear admiral, with the offer to lead NASA's space program.

"I readily accepted the opportunity to come back," Truly told reporters, acknowledging he is returning to NASA "at this particularly difficult time" of turbulence, stress and questioning.

But he said later that it took him "only a few seconds" to decide he was ready to take on the job. "I'm delighted to accept the challenge," he said.

That challenge will center first on leading NASA's investigation into the Challenger accident, which claimed the lives of the seven shuttle crew members aboard and stopped America's shuttle program in its tracks.

"What we need to do is have the opportunity to get to the bottom of this and find out what happened...and fix those problems," he said. "Times are turbulent, but we're going to go on with it."

He promised a thorough review of not only mechanical issues but NASA procedures for launching a shuttle, a subject that has come under intense scrutiny from the presidential commission investigating the accident.

Whatever caused the accident will be found and corrected, Truly promised. "If nobody else does it, I will. I wouldn't be sitting here, taking this job, if I didn't believe that."

Ironically, it was Truly's 1983 Challenger flight in which the rubber seals in the nozzle of one of the rocket boosters burned partially away. The investigation into the Challenger explosion Jan. 28 also is focusing on a possible breakthrough in the booster seals as a likely cause of the accident.

Asked whether he had ever been told about the details of the problem with the seals on his flight, Truly said he had not.

"Even today I have never gotten a terribly detailed debriefing of that particular nuzzle problem," he said.

While the astronauts have been told not to discuss the shuttle investigation, their concerns about launch procedures have been the subject of much distress, according to a NASA source who asked not to be identified by name.

This source said that astronaut Robert L. Crippen expressed those concerns to the presidential commission after it was revealed that the Jan. 28 launch go-ahead was given despite strong opposition from top engineers at Morton Thiokol, the manufacturer of the rocket booster.

According to sources, Crippen and John Young, chief of the astronaut corps, had insisted that astronauts be prominent in NASA's investigation of the accident and had pushed for Truly's appointment.

Sally Ride, the country's first woman in space, already is a member of the presidential commission, as is former astronaut Neil Armstrong, the first man to walk on the moon. Crippen has been described as a major player in the NASA investigation at the Kennedy Space Center.

Astronauts played a similar role after the launch paid test fire that killed the three Apollo 1 astronauts in 1967, with astronaut Frank Borman as a member of the NASA review board.

But Truly's appointment gives the astronaut corps a representative at the top of the shuttle management hierarchy and in charge of the overall Challenger accident investigation within the space agency.

Author speaks about minorities' socialization

By MICHAEL D. BROWN
Collegian Reporter

The United States is a polycultural society with monocultural institutions and ideals, said Maurice Martinez, of Hunter College in Manhattan, N.Y., and author of several books about minority education.

Martinez spoke during a roundtable discussion Thursday in Belmont 106.

In an open discussion, "Education and Ethnic Minorities," Martinez spoke about how people from diverse backgrounds coexist in a nation of cultural pluralism. The United States is conditioned by a belief that there is a clearly defined image of what it means to be an American, he said.

"This image is expressed in expectations of conformity, in values and norms of 'sameness.' Those who are different are labeled something other than the acceptable American," Martinez said.

The discussion was focused on the education of minorities as defined in political, social and economical terms. One definition of "minority" Martinez used was "a population which occupies some form of subordinate power position in relation to another population in the same society."

Three major distinctions among minorities which Martinez used were autonomous minorities, immigrant minorities and caste-like minorities.

Autonomous minorities, such as Amish, Jews and Mormons, are somewhat less subordinated by the dominant group politically or economically but may experience social discrimination.

Chinese, Cubans, Filipinos, Japanese and Koreans are examples of immigrant minorities, who lack political power, may initially occupy the lowest rung on the social ladder and have moved to the host society more or less voluntarily.

Caste-like minorities, such as American Indians, Black Americans, Mexican Americans and Puerto Ricans, have experienced color discrimination, involuntary incorporation into the host society, relegation to subordinate status and menial jobs.

All of these minorities have experienced some form of discrimination and noninclusion in mainstream American society in varying degrees of intensity, Martinez said.

To instigate the education process, Martinez established programs in New York to aid in the minority learning process. One program places high school graduates in elementary classrooms with the teachers. This allows both students and graduates to benefit educationally and provides high school graduates the opportunity to learn teaching methods.

"Elementary students have shown improved overall scores in areas of learning, and the high school students who stayed with the program obtained unlimited success. This may, in fact, be due to the program," Martinez said.

Another similar program Martinez utilized involved a different set of assistants including unemployed persons, unwed mothers and mothers on welfare, each of whom wanted to work. Martinez provided assistants with background training in the areas in which they would be aiding the teachers and then sent them into the classroom.

"The outcome was fantastic," Martinez said. "Both students and assistants were better for it."

Martinez is striving to bring together the education system to work for everyone.

As a teacher, one should be aware of the unique cultural experiences of minorities, he said. An understanding of the needs of ethnic groups facilitates communication in the classroom. The "culturally different" student should not be regarded as deviant. Successful teaching requires high expectations, compassion and knowledge of how to communicate in a meaningful way, Martinez said.

BSU, fraternity to offer history tribute

By LESLIE ALLEN
Collegian Reporter

As a reminder of black American history, Black Student Union and Omega Psi Phi, a four-member fraternity, will present "A Tribute to Black American History," a combination of dancing, singing, acting and slide show.

The student-directed production will be at 7 p.m. Sunday in Union Forum Hall. There is a $1 admission charge, to be donated to support the United Negro College Fund.

"The purpose of this show is to enlighten individuals and the community about black American history and how important it is to us today," said Nelson Nickerson, junior in architecture and coordinator of the production.

The overall theme for the show is to trace our roots from Africa to America in the 1960s, said Derrick Holt, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and president of Black Student Union.

"The show starts out with dances reflecting the African culture and slides in the background," Nickerson said.

"My dancing shows that I am mourning the death of my child; she's either dead or has been taken, (on a slavery ship) in which case she's dead to me," said Greta Spears, and sophomore in journalism and mass communications.

"The idea is when you know where you come from, then you realize where you are today," Nickerson said. "The prime concern of our ancestors was for each generation to have it better than the one before."

There will also be speakers after the show, Holt said.

The speakers will be speaking on "Black Americans in the past, present and the future," Holt said.

One speaker is Mary McCoy, of Topeka, a civil rights investigator for the state of Kansas. Anthony Pinder, a merchant trader for commodity marketing division of Cargil, will also speak, Holt said.

"Dr. King passed the baton of freedom to us and it's our responsibility to not let our ancestors down," Nickerson said, referring to the production.

The characters that are being portrayed and the actors are Harriyet Tubman — Mariam Johnson, junior in business administration; Scott Joplin — Lee Scott; Billie Holiday —

Education secretary gives passing grades to America's schools

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Education Secretary William J. Bennett gave the states a report card Thursday on test scores, dropout rates and other measures that he cited as proof America's schools are on the rebound.

He said rising college entrance test scores, and slightly lower school dropout rates, show that "the excellence movement has clearly helped our poor and minority populations."

In releasing the Education Department's third annual chart of state education rankings, Bennett was following a tradition that his predecessor, T.H. Bell, started to the dismay of some state school superintendents.

Most of the data on the chart, including scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Test and American College Testing Program exam, has been released previously.

Bennett acknowledged it is "a consternation-causing" exercise.

"When you have this kind of chart, some people are going to come off looking better than others. It's inevitable," he told a news conference.

But he added, "This is big news....It is essential not to keep these findings a secret, to tell the American people how we are doing."

The chart indicated the District of Columbia, Louisiana and Alabama have the worst dropout rates, while Minnesota, Nebraska and North Dakota have the best graduation rates.

The chart showed improvements in college admission scores in 35 states since 1982.

"The news is good — our schools are improving again, our children are learning more," Bennett said.

He said states with higher test scores also tended to have lower dropout rates. "Is excellence a threat to the poor and minorities? The answer is no," he said.

Bennett said Iowa, New Hampshire and Wisconsin had the best SAT or ACT scores. But he also commended the District of Columbia, South Carolina, Utah, Alabama and Kentucky for registering "the greatest test score improvement since 1982."

He lauded New Hampshire, Vermont, Nebraska and Iowa as states with average expenditures but above-average test scores. And he described Illinois, South Dakota, California, Delaware, Maine and Virginia as states with large concentrations of poor students and above-average scores.

Criticism of the chart rolled in, as it has in the past two years.

Howard Carroll, a spokesman for the National Education Association, said, "Everybody wants to know the score, but this is an incomplete scorecard. Tests are not a true evaluator of achievement." The percentage of seniors taking the SAT or ACT varies widely from state to state, he said.

John Weiss, executive director of FairTest, a Boston-based group that is critical of standardized tests, said the chart "violates professional guidelines for proper test use and warps school curricula."

Retailers question high consumer debt

By TOM SCHULTES
Business/Government Editor

With decreasing inflation rates and relatively stable unemployment rates, the retailing industry has been aided by the consumers' willingness to purchase goods — on credit.

But one question some retailers are now asking is how long, and to what extent, will consumers continue to use credit, in light of record-high credit levels paired with record-setting lows for savings accounts.

According to the Jan. 13 edition of Business Week magazine, consumers in 1982 allocated slightly more than 14 percent of their disposable income toward installment debt. But Data Resources, Inc., which compiled the data for the magazine, estimates the percentage for 1986 will be just under 20 percent.

One problem seen nationally by business forecasters is that consumers are nearly overextended on credit purchases, reflected by the record-high installment loan debt, combined with savings accounts dipping to below 3 percent of incomes.

Leonard L. Barry, director of the Center for Retailing Studies at Texas A&M University, College Station, said "I don't see anybody in retailing having an easy time of it. Someone comes up with a good concept like a warehouse club, and lo and behold, you have company — and a lot of it."

Dale Thierolf, manager of the Credit Bureau of Manhattan, 429 Poyntz Ave., said "there probably is less request for applications being made for credit" than in the past, particularly in retail-level consumer credit.

Thierolf said indications of high debt loads can be seen in foreclosures, especially on farm properties, which are experiencing "considerably higher than normal" foreclosure rates.

Bankruptcies, he said, are "higher than they should be, but not too much (higher) percentage-wise than what has become normal in the past couple of years."

"If the credit economy is flowing," Thierolf said, "they continue to spend," but in times of tighter credit, consumers will concentrate on paying past-due debts.

Tom Varnadore, credit supervisor for the Manhattan Sears, Roebuck & Co. store, 205 S. 4th St., said he hadn't seen much change in consumer credit trends recently.

Although the department store chain uses incentives such as fast-food restaurant coupons and free soft drinks to attract credit applicants, Varnadore said the company policy probably doesn't have a large effect on consumers.

Varnadore said the local branch is not directly involved with settling delinquent accounts, but his experiences indicated "no big change" in the numbers of such accounts.

Evelyn Russell, catalog and lay away supervisor of the Manhattan facility for J.C. Penney Co. Inc., 4th and Houston streets, echoed Varnadore's views on local consumer credit usage.

"I can't really see any change at all," she said, noting that some consumers do not use credit under any circumstances. She also noted delinquent accounts for the Manhattan store are handled outside the local credit department.

Judges reduce Texaco's bond payment

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Texaco Inc. need not post a $12 billion bond required under Texas court rules before it can appeal the Pennzoil Co.'s record-setting damage suit against it, a federal appeals court ruled Thursday.

A three-judge panel of the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld an injunction issued by federal District Judge Charles L. Brieant Jr. of White Plains, N.Y., who said last December that the bond requirement effectively denies Texaco its right to appeal.

Brieant required Texaco to post only $1 billion, a requirement the company was able to satisfy by pledging stock in its Canadian subsidiary.

Separately, a Texas judge refused on Thursday to grant Texaco a new trial.

Pennzoil's lawyers argued that Brieant had no authority to intervene in the procedures of the Texas courts, which require parties that lose a judgment to post bond for the full amount before filing an appeal. They also denied that Pennzoil was interested in subjecting Texaco to a ruinous bond requirement.

But Texaco attorney Paul Curran told the appeals court on Feb. 12 that Pennzoil wants to keep the Texas bond requirement in force in order to "blackmail" Texaco, and company officials have said that having to post such a bond could well force Texaco into seeking protection under bankruptcy proceedings.

The ruling in favor of Texaco was expected to give Texaco a strong bargaining position in any negotiations toward an out-of-court settlement of the case.

A Houston jury ruled last year that Texaco illegally interfered in January 1984 in an agreement by Pennzoil to acquire 42 percent of Getty Oil Co. Texaco topped Pennzoil's bid and acquired all of Getty itself, at a price of $10.1 billion.

The jury in Texas, which is Pennzoil's home state, awarded Pennzoil $10.53 billion in damages from Texaco, which is based in suburban White Plains. It was by far the largest damage award ever granted in a U.S. court. With interest included the award already tops $11 billion, and interest is mounting at $3 million a day.

Texaco claimed that Pennzoil never had a binding contract with Getty.

Shortly after the jury's verdict the two companies began negotiating to settle the case out of court. A settlement would have benefits for both sides, as it would free Texaco from having to make such a large payment to Pennzoil, while eliminating the risk to Pennzoil that the jury's verdict will be overturned on appeal.

But Pennzoil reportedly has refused to negotiate while Texaco was challenging the bond requirement in the federal courts.

Texaco has said that it could be forced to accept unfavorable terms if forced to negotiate while facing the requirement of a $12 billion bond. On the other hand, analysts have noted that once freed of the bond requirement, Texaco would be under little time pressure and could benefit by slowing down the proceedings.

Seniors say ROTC offers job security

By ROXIE MCKEE
Collegian Reporter

The Air Force ROTC is "a great place to start," as well as finish, according to ROTC seniors.

While most seniors are concerned with finding a job, ROTC students are more concerned with where they will be stationed.

Steve Locke, senior in business administration, said he is anxiously awaiting graduation, and is excited to "fly jets."

"I've been here five years, and I'm ready to get out," Locke said.

Locke looks forward to undergraduate pilot training. He said there are five bases where he could be stationed, but won't find out which one until after graduation. The undergraduate pilot training program is 50 weeks long.

Locke said he is currently working on his private pilot's license, and will appreciate being around experienced pilots. Being in ROTC has been difficult at times, but not as difficult as it was for ROTC students during the Vietnam era, Locke said.

"Sometimes I feel uncomfortable, but it's not like it was in the Vietnam years," Locke said.

During the war, ROTC students were afraid to wear their uniforms on campus for fear of being harassed or spit upon, he said.

"ROTC is like an extra class in your schedule," Locke said.

During the freshman and sophomore years, ROTC students are required to take a one-hour class each semester on introduction and history of the ROTC. During the junior and senior years, they are required to take three hours each semester on personnel management, national policy, politics and military law.

Jane Krieger, senior in journalism and mass communications, said her sister prompted her to join ROTC.

"I always thought ROTC people were kind of weird, but my sister became a member of ROTC, and later got me influenced," she said.

After attending an ROTC picnic, Krieger decided to join.

"My dad was in the Air Force 24 years, and my parents were real supportive of my decision," she said.

Krieger remembers the summer she went through field training.

"We had to run two miles every morning. It got me in shape," Krieger said.

She also took her first jet ride and experienced survival training.

"After the first week, it's a lot of fun," Krieger said. "And it's nice to know I have a job when I graduate. I was seeing a lot of people who were active in clubs and good students who weren't getting jobs. Job security is nice."

Krieger said she hopes when she gets stationed she can work as a community-relations officer, where she would act as a liaison between the base and the media.

"Each base has its own newspaper which is anywhere from eight to 14 pages long," Krieger said.

Krieger said she wants to travel when she graduates.

She said there are "hot flights" available on Air Force flights, and officers can fly free whenever there is room.

Sybrina Skulborstad, senior in electrical engineering, is a completed-status cadet in ROTC, which means she has finished her ROTC requirements, but is still finishing her degree as a fifth-year senior.

Skulborstad hopes to be stationed in Texas, her first choice on her "dream sheet."

"Dream sheets are where you list your first three choices of where you want to get stationed, what you want to do and who you want to serve under," Skulborstad said.

The Air Force assigns ROTCs where they need them most. She said she should find out where she will be stationed around the end of March.

"I look forward to the adventure of it all, and the chance to serve my country," Skulborstad said.

Wrist wrestlers display strength in intramural tournament

By ROXIE MCKEE
Collegian Reporter

Despite poor weather conditions, there was a good turnout for Thursday night's intramural wrist wrestling competition in the small gym at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

About 100 men and women competed in the tournament, and the meet ended with the All-University matches.

Strange body positions and facial expressions displayed the intensity of the competition.

Wrist wrestling is often confused with arm wrestling, which is a different type of sport. Wrist wrestling is more of a thumb-to-thumb grip, where arm wrestling is a palm hold.

Megan Garner, sophomore in theater and member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, said she entered the meet for fun, as well as points.

"I used to be pretty strong. I used to wrestle with some guys at school," she said.

Kim Angell, senior in physical education, was nervous at the start of the competition, but said she started to calm down the more she sat and watched.

"I like to try and get them down right at the start," Angell said.

Angell ended up winning in the finals of the 135 pound and under weight division, and said her arm will probably be sore in the morning.

"My whole body was shaking after that one (final match)," Angell said.

Sheryl Bergeson won the title in the 136 pound and under classification of the women's division.

Pairings in All-University men's final matches in each of the weight divisions are decided by a flip of a coin. Since there is an odd number of divisions (residence hall, fraternity and independent), the odd man gets the bye. The person getting a bye is at an advantage over the other two competitors since he has to wrestle one less match to win the title.

In the flyweight division, Dale Lonker, a member of Beta Theta Pi, was All-University champion for the second straight year.

Other men's All-University champions included Kenny Frederickson, lightweight; David Young, heavyweight; and Scott Crosier, middleweight.

Sean Sturrock, sophomore in marketing, strains against an opponent during the intramural wrist-wrestling tournament Thursday. Sturrock placed second in the lightweight division.

More than 100 students participated in the tournament sponsored by Recreational Services at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Coleman, Manning to meet again in rematch between Wildcats, KU

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

Norris Coleman meets Danny Manning, Part II.

In the first game between K-State and Kansas, Manning, the 6-foot-11 sophomore phenom, got the better of Coleman. Manning outscored Coleman 19-8 — the "Sarge's" second lowest point total of the season.

This time, when the Wildcats and No. 3 Jayhawks meet Saturday, Coleman will be looking to even the score.

"The critics say he (Manning) held me down to eight points," Coleman said. "The way I look at it, you don't hold a guy down when a guy's got 18 shots. I'm not going to hot dog around and prove to people I can score on him."

"If the shots are there, I'm going to take my time and try to make them go down."

And how many points does Coleman, who has had over 30 in each of the Wildcats' three Big Eight games, think he might need to score for K-State to beat KU?

"Whatever it takes — 30, 40 — I'm going to try to win," he said.

K-State Coach Jack Hartman knows that it will take more than Coleman to hand a defeat to the 24-3 Jayhawks.

"They have a fine team," Hartman said of KU. "They don't have many weaknesses."

We'll just have to play with great awareness and play very smart, play hard."

K-State had one of its worst shooting games of the season in the earlier meeting of the teams — a 64-50 loss at Ahearn Field House.

"I hope we'll have a better shooting game (this time against KU)," Hartman said. "I thought we had a good game plan and we played well. The final score was not indicative of how close the game was."

Make no mistake about it though, Hartman, retiring this spring after his 16th season with the Wildcats, is impressed by this Jayhawk team.

"I think it's as good as any of the KU teams that I've played against in the past," he said.

KU has had a balanced scoring attack all season long. Manning leads the Jayhawks averaging over 16 points a game, but three other KU starters average in double figures as well.

The starter that doesn't — guard Cedric Hunter — isn't exactly an offensive liability either. The ever-improving Hunter is averaging over nine points per game and leads the Big Eight Conference in assists.

After K-State's 16th win of the season Wednesday against Oklahoma State in Ahearn, the 'Cats are beginning to talk of the possibility of post-season play.

K-State looks to have a good opportunity to make the National Invitation Tournament. The NIT, however, isn't what Coleman is really after.

"We talk about it (the NIT), but I'd like to go to the NCAA's," Coleman said. "Going to the NIT — that's all right, but that's a second-hand tournament for second-best. We're looking for the NCAA. Even if we don't have the number of wins, there's always the Big Eight tournament."

"The NIT is in my sights, but my sights are beyond that."

GAME NOTES: Game time is 3:10 Saturday afternoon...The game will be televised by Raycom Sports...If K-State can advance to post-season play, Hartman may be able to pick up his 300th win as Wildcat coach. His record now stands 295-165 at K-State.

Lady Cats shoot for spot in upper half of standings

By DARAN NEUSCHAFER
Sports Writer

Believe it or not, the K-State women's basketball team has a mathematical shot at finishing second in the Big Eight conference.

To do so, the Lady Cats would have to win their three remaining games and hope that the conference leaders continue to beat up on each other.

"We still have a shot at finishing in a tie for second in the league, but I don't want to put any added pressure on the girls right now because they are playing really well right now," Lady Cat coach Matilda Mossman said.

K-State has a tough task in front of them if they are to make a run at finishing in the upper division of the conference standings. A fourth place or higher finish in the standings would give the Lady Cats a home-court advantage in the post-season tournament's first round.

Tomorrow the Lady Cats travel to Lawrence to take on the Lady Jayhawks of Kansas. A win over KU would allow K-State to catch the Lady Jayhawks in the standings. Kansas is currently 6-5 in the conference and K-State stands at 5-6.

The Lady Jayhawks appeared early in the season to be the team to beat in the conference, but some very inconsistent play has left KU in a three-way tie for third place.

"They (KU) have been pretty inconsistent from game to game," Mossman said. "After winning their first two conference games, their pattern has been win-loss-win-loss."

GAME NOTES: K-State's Thomas has been named the Big Eight Player of the Week for the 44 points and 17 rebounds in she scored in two games last week...Saturday's game will be broadcast live beginning at 11:45 a.m. by WIBW (580 AM).

'Cats win baseball opener over No. 18 Razorbacks

By DOUG SCHEIBE
Sports Writer

After leading most of the game, K-State used Jeff Turtle's game-winning RBI in the ninth inning to beat 18th-ranked Arkansas 8-7 in Fayetteville, Ark., Thursday.

The season-opening victory came against one of seven nationally-ranked teams the 'Cats will play this season. Arkansas' season record dropped to 3-1.

"The difference between this year's ballclub and last year's team is that last year we would have been happy to be playing a team like Arkansas, and this year we battled them and won," K-State Coach Gary Vaught said.

"We showed a lot of character and pride," Vaught said. "This was a great win for us. We lost 13 (games) last year by one run."

Turtle, a junior catcher, led K-State with three hits, including two doubles, and two walks in five plate appearances. First baseman Otto Kaifes and designated hitter Mike Hamacher each added sixth inning home runs. Kaifes, Hamacher and third baseman Jim Donohue had two RBIs each.

K-State used the home runs to open a 5-1 lead while senior pitcher Tom Smith held the Razorbacks in check. Smith allowed one run in the first and two in the sixth while giving up just one hit.

K-State built its lead back to 7-3 with two more runs in the top of the eighth. Then, with two outs in the bottom of the inning, a K-State error kept an Arkansas rally alive. Arkansas followed with four runs to tie the game.

"Tom (Smith) threw well. He got hit on the ankle and he started to miss the (strike) zone a little then — that's when we went and got him," Vaught said.

Rocky Ferguson relieved Smith in the eighth and ended up with the win. Ferguson and Smith combined to hold Razorback All-American Jeff King to one hit in five at bats.

Turtle's game winner drove in Guy Greco, who walked and was sacrificed to second by Mike Hinkle.

"We fought back against adversity and beat a good team — even with the (two) errors we had."

"We can't celebrate too much, though," Vaught said, "because we have to get down the road and play a good Lamar team on Saturday and Sunday."

The 'Cats travel to Beaumont, Texas, to play Lamar for two games this weekend.

Conference coaches praise KU star

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE — If you were organizing a basketball team and could pick one player from the Big Eight Conference, who would it be?

"How could you not take Danny Manning?" K-State Coach Jack Hartman said of the towering sophomore of No. 3 Kansas.

"Manning is the one I would pick," says Moe Iba of Nebraska.

"Manning, of course," says Norm Stewart of Missouri.

Opposing coaches say Manning is great. Others, such as Tom Heinsohn and long-time Olympic Coach Henry Iba say he can be very great.

Now, if somebody could just get Manning to say it — and believe it. In ways that are both obvious and subtle, the quiet, soft-spoken man-child is a basketball paradox.

Some call him a 6-foot-1 guard in a 6-11 body. In a game this year against Missouri, Manning twice stole the ball and, with defenders huffing in his wake, drove nearly the entire length of the court for a layup.

How many 6-11 guys have ever been seen doing that?

Like a crack guard, he's adept at stealing the ball, flicking out long, reed-like arms as quick as a serpent's tongue. He leads the Jayhawks, in fact, with 22 thefts.

His overall ball-handling skills would put a lot of guards in the shade. As a passer, he is sometimes brilliant.

And, befitting one who stoops while walking through doors, he's among the league leaders in rebounding.

And, not to neglect the all-important perimeter, he possesses a feathery touch on 15-footers.

He drills jump shots. He soars above the rim for slam dunks. He steals the ball and drives the floor. He dishes off the artistic, creative passes that set up teammates for easy baskets.

"He's a peek into the future," says Tom Heinsohn, a former Boston Celtic star turned television commentator. "He's the first of the 7-foot guards."

Perhaps the greatest compliment Manning has received came from Henry Iba, the retired Oklahoma State coach who for many years was in charge of the U.S. Olympic teams.

"I can't ever know how good a player is unless I see him on a game-to-game basis," Iba, 81, said after Manning scored 21 points in a lopsided victory over Oklahoma State. "But Danny Manning has the best touch on the ball of any player I've ever seen."

One might expect a swollen head to rest atop the lithe, pencil-thin frame. Yet, because he is so deferential to his teammates and so quick to give up the ball, his scoring average is not what one would expect of such a talent. In conference games, he averages a shade fewer than 20 points a game. One of the biggest challenges

Jayhawk Coach Larry Brown ever faced has been to coax greater aggressiveness out of the talented 19-year-old, who is not assertive by nature.

"Danny has got to be more aggressive," Brown said at the beginning of the season.

Nevertheless, now that the Jayhawks have clinched the Big Eight title and moved into position as the number one seed in the Midwest Regional of the NCAA Tournament, Manning seems to be achieving the stardom people have always predicted for him.

Tar Heels fall to Maryland

By The Associated Press

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Len Bias scored on a jump hook with 1:51 left in overtime, and Keith Gatlin hit two free throws with seven seconds to go as Maryland upset top-ranked North Carolina 77-72 in Atlantic Coast Conference basketball Wednesday night.

Maryland climbed to 15-11, 4-7 in the ACC. North Carolina dropped to 25-2. In falling to 9-2 in the ACC, the Tar Heels relinquished first place in the league to second-ranked Duke.

Lecture series topics to focus on society

By The Collegian Staff

Four speakers will be featured in this year's Lou Douglas Lectures on Public Affairs. This year's theme, "U.S. 1986: Myth and Reality," will focus on the performance of the United States as a society and as a world citizen.

George Reiter, professor of physics at the University of Houston and a member of the Union of Concerned Scientists, will kick off the series at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 25 in Union Forum Hall. The formal evening lecture, "Star Wars: The Last Straw," will be preceded by an afternoon teach-in with Reiter and K-State faculty.

Frances Fox Piven, professor of political science at the City University of New York Graduate Center, and co-founder of the voter registration organization Human Serve, will speak March 4 on the topic "Women, Politics and Public Policy." Piven's appearance is part of the observance of Women's History Week sponsored by the Women's Studies Program.

John Stockwell, former CIA agent, is scheduled to speak April 1 on "The Secret Wars of the CIA." Stockwell exposed U.S. covert activities in Angola's civil war in his book "In Search of Enemies."

Catholic activist Mitch Snyder will speak April 21 on "Homelessness in America." He has been a defender of the Washington, D.C., shelter for the homeless run by the Community for Creative Non-Violence.

The lectures honor the memory of Lou Douglas, former professor of political science and University for Man supporter.

Survey cites decaying school buildings

From Staff and Wire Reports

While "Manhattan has done an incredible job" in the maintenance of its schools, many rural schools in Kansas are deteriorating, said Dave Honeyman, assistant professor of education finance.

Honeyman did a survey on the deterioration of Kansas schools with 1,000 or fewer students. He found that most buildings weren't "unsafe" yet, but were deteriorating fast with no money for repairs.

Some of the more common problems many of the schools reported were leaky roofs, doors not closing all the way, windows not tight enough and tiles falling from the ceiling, he said.

While these problems are not unsafe for the children in the schools, they do create a bad atmosphere for learning, Honeyman said.

"It's hard enough to teach children in a beautiful new facility, let alone trying to teach children where water drips down across the chalkboard and makes puddles on the floor," he said. "It is kind of embarrassing when tiles are falling down in front of you while you are teaching."

Though none of the schools are unsafe for people to be in, some are fast approaching a potentially dangerous situation.

"It's not that the buildings are going to fall down — that hasn't happened yet. The longer you wait, the worse the problem becomes," Honeyman said.

Many of the schools having the most problems getting money are the schools in western Kansas. Scott City and Ness City schools have had major problems with their roofs, he said. Concordia also has had a flooded gymnasium that makes teaching physical education almost impossible. Costs for repairs of the gymnasium were estimated at $20,000 to $25,000.

The filing of a lawsuit by some parents concerning the safety of a school in Marquette indicates there are widespread problems, he said.

Honeyman said the scope of the repairs needed now and in the future because of neglected maintenance is so overwhelming that local districts need help from the state. He said he believes some sort of state-operated school repair loan fund could be established.

About two-thirds of the school districts in Kansas are located in rural areas and have fewer than 1,000 students, Honeyman said. In a recent survey of the 600 buildings in those districts, Honeyman found the age of the structures ranged from turn-of-the-century to the mid to late 1960s. The average age was about 37 years.

Honeyman said the structures are in need of at least $140 million in maintenance and repairs. But school officials are in a quandry because of tough economic times, he said.

Property taxes already are seen as burdensome and bond issues are hard to pass, Honeyman said. All capital outlay funding has to be generated locally through one of those two sources, he said.

Although these repairs and maintenance are necessary, the schools are having a hard time getting the money needed to improve the schools' condition.

Honeyman suggests establishing a loan fund that schools can borrow from to make needed repairs. The loans would be paid back on an equalized scale. The richer the school, the higher the interest assessed. It would be based on the ability to pay, he said.

Superintendents and school boards are also to blame for the deterioration of schools, Honeyman said. The lack of long-range planning for the schools has added to the problem.

Honeyman's survey also found that many of the schools have safety violations which could cause problems in the future if not taken care of soon. Of the schools which were 37 years old or older, 21 percent were inadequate for handicapped students, which, Honeyman said, was almost against the law.

A voluntary survey conducted by the State Department of Education about six months ago found 412 structures, or 24 percent of the school buildings in the sampling, were constructed prior to 1930. In several counties, buildings first occupied in the late 1800s still are in use.

Marcos faces seige as rebellion flares, may leave country

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — An embattled President Ferdinand E. Marcos declared a state of emergency Monday in an effort to quell a revolt led by two top military leaders and went on television to scoff at reports he was preparing to flee the country.

But ousted Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile, one of the two rebellious military officials, declared he was forming a provisional government led by opposition presidential candidate Corazon Aquino.

Aquino, broadcasting over the Roman Catholic station Radio Veritas, claimed triumph over Marcos and asked for massive demonstrations around Enrile and Lt. Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, deputy chief of the armed forces, "to consolidate that victory."

"I call upon people to be considerate, even with the last remnants of the Marcos military," she said.

A military helicopter made a pass at the presidential palace and fired a grenade at the building, according to soldiers on the grounds. They said a tank fired at the helicopter. Associated Press Reporter Miguel C. Suarez said he heard several explosions and M-16 rifle fire from the palace grounds.

One soldier said he had been hit by shrapnel and Col. Vicente Tigas of the presidential security command told journalists to leave the palace grounds. "We cannot guarantee your safety," he said.

Marcos, in the broadcast over government television station Channel 4, declared, "I intend to stay on as president." But the broadcast went off the air abruptly, cutting off the Marcos statement in the middle of a sentence.

A rebel force led by Col. Mariano Santiago took over the station after a clash in which at least four people were wounded. The station remained off the air and a soldier used the muzzle of his gun to tear down pictures of Marcos.

Enrile and Ramos announced Saturday they had broken with Marcos and demanded his resignation. They said Marcos had cheated Mrs. Aquino out of victory in the Feb. 7 presidential election and that she should be allowed to take over as president.

Regents request funds for ag-related services

By JILL HUMMELS
Staff Writer

TOPEKA — With a unanimous vote, the Kansas Board of Regents decided Friday to request supplemental funding from the Legislature for the Agricultural Experiment Station and the Division of Cooperative Extension.

See related story, Page 5

Acting on the recommendation of the Special Committee On Agriculture and Economic Development, the regents will seek $417,789 for the current fiscal year for the two University-operated programs.

Both programs came up short on funds when expected federal funding increases never evolved. Extension and the Agricultural Experiment Station were further hampered when Congress reduced appropriations by 6 percent in December 1985.

The proposed Gramm-Rudman act will also bring financial burden to the programs on March 1, when federal appropriations will be reduced an additional 4.3 percent, said Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, speaking before the committee on Thursday.

The cuts mean a loss of $178,717 in funds for the Agricultural Experiment Station and a decrease of $239,072 for extension, he said.

The budgetary impact of Gramm-Rudman may require the programs to seek more than $660,000 in additional state general use funds for the 1987 fiscal year. The money may be needed to offset further losses in federal funding. However, the regents decided to follow the counsel of the committee and delay modifying the budget for that year until June when Gramm-Rudman will be more clearly defined.

Presently, the deficit-reduction act will be under Supreme Court review for constitutionality. A ruling on the measure is expected in June.

Gramm-Rudman calls for concerted efforts in U.S. deficit reduction. If Congress and the president fail to meet the reduction goals outlined in the act, automatic across-the-board cuts will take effect.

Regents approve coliseum budget hike

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

TOPEKA — The Kansas Board of Regents on Friday unanimously approved a budget increase for construction of the proposed 13,500-seat Fred Bramlage Coliseum, authorizing architects to continue planning for the multi-purpose facility.

A last-minute contribution Wednesday of $640,000 from Fred Bramlage, a Junction City businessman and K-State alumnus, solved financial problems which have plagued the project for months. The additional funds will be used to cover a portion of the $1.4 million budget overrun.

University President Duane Acker recommended design changes and an increase in the construction budget from $14.5 million to $15.9 million be approved, as did regents architect Warren Corman. The total cost of the project — including fees and finishing touches — is $17.5 million.

"I feel real good about it today, especially since the president raised more money. If we didn't have the money I'd have to recommend we abandon the project," Corman said. "I'm convinced the quality is there. We have taken some things out (of the plans) that relate to aesthetics, but not quality."

Bramlage had previously contributed $1.75 million to the project. His new gift brings that total to $2.4 million.

Coliseum architect Bill Livingston, a partner in Gossen Livingston Associates of Wichita, said the budget increase is necessary.

"As we did our review, and worked in detailed estimates, the cost rose. It is a simple matter of it costing more than expected," he said.

The project has been under review since August 1985, when bids on the then planned 16,000-seat coliseum were all at least $3.4 million over budget. Each of the bids were rejected by the University and Livingston agreed in September to redesign the facility.

Since that time 2,500 seats, administrative office space and the north pod of restrooms, lounge and concessions have been eliminated from the base bid in an attempt to bring the project within budget.

However, the $500,000 office structure and the $345,000 north pod will be designed and bid as add alternates.

No changes were made to the support areas such as the locker rooms, training facilities, press hospitality and storage areas.

Livingston said final plans would be complete in September and construction might begin in December, if new bids are within budget. The coliseum, scheduled for completion in October 1988, replaces 35-year-old Ahearn Field House.

Noting the project has "been a challenge," George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, said the regents' vote of confidence will permit Livingston to begin work on detailed project plans.

"I don't believe we will run into any additional expenses," Miller

Program honors black Americans

By LESLIE ALLEN
Collegian Reporter

About 150 people gathered Sunday to give tribute to the black Americans who struggled and sacrificed for the personal and social freedom of blacks in America.

"The purpose of this occasion is to help the black individuals of the black society learn of the importance of our heritage," said Nelson Nickerson, junior in architecture and coordinator of the program.

"A Tribute to Black American History," performed Sunday in Union Forum Hall, was presented by Omega Psi Phi and Black Student Union.

The production began with African dances and African commentary that symbolized the trip from Africa. Later, a narrator spoke of several people who worked toward freedom, including Richard Allen, an Episcopal clergyman who helped to form an organization called "Free African Society to improve the Negro social conditions in 1783," Nelson said.

In the early 1800s, there were people such as Harriet Tubman, played by Marian Johnson, junior in business administration, and Fredrick Douglass, played by Simion Terry, senior in chemical engineering, who were activists trying to make this nation free during the civil war.

The Reconstruction Period — after the civil war — was a time of accomplishment for blacks such as Daniel H. Williams, who was given credit for doing the first successful heart surgery, and Madame C.J. Walker, who was the first to make a million dollars through her own profits by designing a hair straightening device.

The audience was introduced to people such as Rosa Parks, who in 1955 was arrested for refusing give up her seat to a white man and go to the back of the bus.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., played by Derrick Watson, sophomore in construction science, used non-violence to obtain civil rights for blacks in the 1960s.

After listening to a few words about King, the audience watched a documentary of the movement lead by him.

"Discrimination itself is not dead," said Mary McCoy, a civil rights investigator for the state of Kansas, during her speech after the production.

"We still face discrimination today, but in a far more sophisticated form," McCoy said.

She then described a situation, "that wasn't Birmingham in the 1960s, it was Kansas in 1984," she said. A man who was the only black working at the company was given all of the dirty jobs, was not given merit raises in accordance to his co-workers, was the victim of jokes about watermelon and had a dead raccoon tied to the bumper of his car, McCoy said.

"It is unusual for incidents of discrimination to be so blatant, because now it's a lot more subtle," she said.

"It's beautiful to come together like this for a moment, and enjoy and realize all of the achievements that we have accomplished as a race, but simultaneously, it's dangerous to become so complacent," said Anthony Pinder, another speaker and a commodity market tradesman from a division of Cargill in Kansas City, Mo.

Firm takes anti-apartheid stance

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — In an unusual anti-apartheid move, General Motors Corp. said Sunday it would give legal aid to any non-white employee charged with swimming at whites-only beaches.

Bob White, manager of GM's plant in the southern city of Port Elizabeth, said "legal and financial assistance" would be provided to any of its 1,800 black and mixed-race employees prosecuted for using segregated beaches.

GM pays taxes to maintain beaches, "yet 60 percent of our employees can't use them," White, who was born in Chicago, said in a telephone interview.

"I am trying to take some action, hopefully get the local authorities to get rid of some of the apartheid regulations they apply in Port Elizabeth," he said.

The Eastern Province Herald quoted Chris Meyer, an archconservative lawmaker, as saying GM's move "is bedeviling race relations. What will happen if people like me, and there are lots of them, decide to boycott General Motors cars?"

White said GM officials in Detroit did not know initially about his move but later told him they support it. GM, whose only South African plant is in Port Elizabeth, employs 3,000 people, including 1,200 whites.

Iran, Iraq announce combat claims

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iran claimed it killed 500 Iraqi soldiers in battles Sunday along the Faw peninsula, and Iraq said it downed an Iranian F-4 aircraft that tried to cross into its territory.

Independent confirmation of the combatants' claims was not possible.

As the two enemies kept up their two-week struggle for control of Faw peninsula at the southern extreme of Iraq, along their common border, Tehran radio broadcast a military communique saying Iran seized an 18-mile area along the Shatt al-Arab waterway and Khor Abdallah channel.

Iran said its anti-aircraft fire downed six Iraqi jets Saturday, bringing to 56 the total it claims to have destroyed since Iran began its latest offensive in the 5 1/2-year-old war on Feb. 9.

Railroad shifts staff to Nebraska

OMAHA, Neb. — Burlington Northern Railroad has shifted more than 100 employees to Nebraska this month from its operations in other states.

The Minnesota-based company moved 25 employees from Montana to the railroad's locomotive shop in Alliance and 78 workers went from Minnesota to a car repair shop in Lincoln, said Brian Sweeney, a Burlington spokesman in Overland Park, Kan.

Thirteen more jobs will open at the Havelock shop in Lincoln after Burlington Northern finishes closing a similar shop in Livingston, Mont., Sweeney said.

Burlington, which owns the nation's largest rail system and runs through Kansas and Missouri, now employs about 5,800 people in Nebraska with a $188 million annual payroll, a company spokesman in Denver said.

Sweeney said the railroad reduced its work force in Montana and Minnesota because there is less need for service shops in those states. He said the workers were sent to Nebraska because of the state's central location.

In Montana, the changes by Burlington Northern have sparked sharp disagreement over how to tax railroad companies. Some Montana lawmakers said a 1985 law that raised property taxes for railroads led Burlington Northern to close its locomotive shop in Livingston.

Louisiana light show moving away

NEW ORLEANS — Popeyes Famous Fried Chicken king Al Copeland, whose lavish home Christmas light show was extinguished this year by the Louisiana Supreme Court, is welcome to take it across the Mississippi River to Gretna, a state legislator says.

Rep. Joseph F. Toomy, a Democrat from that New Orleans suburb, has written Copeland inviting him to do just that. Gretna Mayor Ronnie Harris said he supports Toomy's efforts.

The state's highest court pulled the plug on the sound and light display shortly before Christmas. For 10 years, it attracted crowds and motorists to Copeland's home in the swank New Orleans suburb of Metairie.

Neighbor Burton Klein sued Copeland, arguing that the traffic and noise disrupted the neighborhood and residents' privacy.

Gretna is observing its 150th anniversary this year, Toomy said. The display could conclude the city's anniversary celebration "with an especially memorable activity."

Pilots, Eastern reach settlement

MIAMI — Eastern Airlines, facing a shutdown threat from creditors, reached a tentative settlement Sunday night with its pilots hours before a reported midnight deadline to respond to a buyout offer, union officials said.

The agreement came after more than 12 hours of continuous negotiations and three days before a strike deadline set by the pilots' union, said Bill Sabo, a spokesman for the Air Line Pilots Association. Sabo said he had no details of the settlement.

Eastern's board began meeting Sunday evening and was apparently "working toward a midnight deadline" from the prospective buyer, reportedly Houston-based Texas Air Corp., said a pilots' union official who refused to be identified.

Management continued to meet with the Transport Workers Union, which represents Eastern's flight attendants, in an attempt to extract concessions demanded by the company's lenders.

Eastern's board had set an unspecified deadline Sunday to either obtain concessions or accept the buyout offer, said Eastern spokesman Mark Vogel.

"As far as we can determine, the choices offered to all union groups presently are to reach a negotiated settlement or have the airline sold to outsiders," the pilots' union said in a statement early Sunday afternoon.

Eastern, which is $2.5 billion in debt, had faced a Wednesday pilots' strike deadline and a March 1 flight attendants' strike deadline, while its lenders had threatened to put Eastern in default and seize its assets if it did not obtain the labor concessions by Feb. 28.

Wedding ends in mammoth brawl

CHERRY HILL, N.J. — A family feud at a wedding reception erupted into a free-for-all that involved about 200 guests and required about 60 police officers to restore order, authorities said Sunday.

"There were fights all over the place," said Sgt. John Vaughan, one of the first officers to respond to the call Saturday night at the Ashland Fire Hall. "Windows were broken, drapes were pulled, chairs knocked over."

No one was seriously injured, Vaughan said, who said the incident apparently stemmed from an argument between the groom's family and the bride's family.

Michael Rappo, the uncle of the bride, was charged with disorderly conduct and defiant trespassing. "He was the one who threw the first punch at the beginning. He's the one who continued it," Vaughan said.

The bride and groom, Patricia and Richard Remsing, could not be reached for comment. Rappo said they had left for their honeymoon at Niagara Falls.

Vaughan would not say what the families were feuding about, but "they wouldn't let it drop until the pressure cooker popped."

The first two officers on the scene thought the altercation was under control when more fights erupted in the parking lot, Vaughan said. Eleven Cherry Hill police cars responded to their call for backup.

"When I walked in, there were a minimum of 10 fights in different locations," Vaughan said. "The bride and the bridegroom and the best man were being ushered out the front door."

Comedian receives college honor

PALM DESERT, Calif. — The audience may be its own show in the Bob Hope Cultural Center at College of the Desert, says the executive director of the $18 million arts complex being built 120 miles east of Los Angeles.

"Here in the desert, socially, people love to be seen and to watch each other," said Michael Grossman, formerly managing director of the Ahmanson Theater in Los Angeles, "so the audience will be sort of its own event."

Comedian Hope, 82, says having the center named after him "is pretty flattering."

"It's a little upper-crust for me, but it's wonderful," Hope said. The 1,200-seat McCallum Theater, named for one of Palm Springs' founding families, will be the center's main building.

Thatcher receives honorary degree

LONDON — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher received an honorary doctor of laws degree from Buckingham University, which described her as one of the "world's foremost statesmen."

"I am delighted and honored," Thatcher said during the ceremony Saturday at the university 50 miles northwest of London. "It has been my privilege to be associated with the university from its foundation 10 years ago."

A graduate of Oxford's Somerville College, Thatcher has two chemistry degrees and a law diploma.

Professor George Lehmann, dean of Buckingham's school of humanities, said the school was seeking to honor "a public figure who stands among the world's foremost statesmen."

Looking Back

20 Years Ago — 1966

10 Years Ago — 1976

A total of 1,691 votes were cast yesterday in the Student Governing Association primary election. The one-day primary was conducted as a test for a possible one-day general election in the future.

K-State students will be able to use the new City-County "CiCo" Park facilities like any of the other city parks, said Frank Anneberg, Manhattan recreation director. The 100-acre park is being completed "progressively" with one main hall already finished, he said.

Several women had purses stolen in Aggieville drinking establishments over the weekend. Riley County Police Sergeant Rusty Hamilton suggested women take only their money and ID into the bars as a precautionary measure against future thefts.

Motivating student senators to get more input from their constituents is one of the main concerns of Steve Phillips, newly elected Student Senate chairman.

5 Years Ago — 1981

Arson has been determined as the cause of a fire in the Military Science building two days ago. The FBI, KBI and state fire marshal have all been investigating the ground floor blaze. President James A. McCain said the official estimate of the damage was somewhere between $500 and $1,000.

According to Security and Traffic's records there was a 43 percent increase in the crime rate during 1980 over 1979. One hundred eighty-nine more offenses were reported in 1980 and 107 arrests were made. The statistics are compiled from crimes committed on campus. Compiled from the University Archives.

Search committee interviews 8 semifinalists for presidency

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

The 15-member Presidential Search Committee is meeting today to continue a series of meetings and interviews with the eight men who remain under consideration for the University presidency.

The search committee scheduled two interviews for each day during the four-day interview marathon, which began Saturday afternoon at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Kansas City, Mo., and concludes Tuesday.

Committee Chairman Jerome Frieman, associate professor of psychology, said there will be no "courtesy interviews" during this portion of the interview process.

"If we invite people it will be because we sincerely believe they would make a great president," Frieman said.

The interviews are the final opportunity for the committee to review the candidates before selecting the three to five finalists for the $92,000-a-year post.

Although small groups of no more than three committee members have met with each of the candidates, the meetings in Kansas City are the first opportunity for the entire committee to interview the semifinalists.

Frieman said the search process is proceeding rapidly and he expects the committee to have a list of finalists by early March. The regents, who will make the final selection, have instructed the committee to provide a list of finalists to the board on or before April 1.

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Kansas Board of Regents, said Friday that the board would be meeting in closed session on March 21 and 22 at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City to interview finalists for the presidency.

President Duane Acker, 54, will leave the University June 30, bringing his 11-year term to an end. Acker has declined to discuss his plans, but Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., said recently that Acker is being considered for a high-level position in the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

During the first search committee meeting in October, the group voted to maintain strict candidate confidentiality.

The committee was able to maintain confidentiality until January when reports indicating that Gov. John Carlin, a 1962 graduate of K-State, was among a list of 45 candidates still in the running. Later reports, however, said that he had been removed from consideration.

On Feb. 8, the Wichita Eagle-Beacon quoted an unnamed source as saying the field had been narrowed to nine men. Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, two university presidents and the chancellor of a state university system were among the semifinalists.

Ten days later, John Slaughter, chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park and one of the individuals listed in the Eagle-Beacon story, withdrew his name.

Slaughter, a 1956 graduate of K-State and former director of the National Science Foundation in Washington, D.C., made no public statement concerning his withdrawal, but sources said he pulled out because his candidacy had become public knowledge.

The eight remaining candidates are: John Campbell, dean of the College of Agriculture at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana;

Jon Wefald, chancellor of the Minnesota seven-school state university system; Robert Rutford, president of University of Texas at Dallas; Greg O'Brien, provost at the University of South Florida in Tampa; Charles Sidman, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Florida in Gainesville; John La Tourette, provost and vice president for academic affairs at Northern Illinois University in DeKalb; William Mobley, dean of the College of Business Administration at Texas A&M University at College Station; and Rathbone.

The search committee is composed of six alumni, three students, three faculty and one representative from the regents, administration and dean's council.

Alumni members are: Gilbert Johnson, Colorado Springs, Colo., construction contractor; Frank Lowman, Wichita banker; Elizabeth Oswald, Alumni Association president; Jan Ray, Manhattan businesswoman; Nelson Galle, Moundridge businessman and C.Q. Chandler, Wichita banker.

Student representatives are: Steve Brown, 1985-86 student body president and junior in pre-veterinary medicine; Jill Hummels, graduate student in journalism and mass communications; and Tamara Barham, junior in social sciences.

Faculty representatives are: Charles Reagan, Faculty Senate president and professor of philosophy; David Schafer, professor of animal sciences and industry; and Frieman.

Randolph Pohlman, dean of the College of Business Administration, is the dean's representative. Non-voting members are Owen Koeppel, University provost, and Koplik.

Local legislator defends stance on lottery issue

By TOM SCHULTES
Business/Government Editor

After receiving criticism for his vote last week against the lottery issue, Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, took advantage of Saturday's Eggs and Issues breakfast to state his reasons for opposing the legislation.

Knopp said unless changes are made in the Kansas Constitution, which requires two-thirds of the majority to approve the proposal, "I'm going to decide whether or not we should approve it."

"That's the burden I believe is on me," he said, "and not to pass on to voters...to let somebody else make the decision for us."

Knopp said the lottery is "hoped to" raise $100 million for the state, with $35 million going to the state's general revenue account.

The representative said those projections are equivalent to $50 from "every man, woman and child in Kansas," or $3 million from the residents of Riley County alone.

He said after all factoring is done, the result could be "$10 million to $20 million coming out of the economy of Riley County," or taken "out of the pockets of businessmen and businesswomen."

In explaining current House proposals, Knopp said 35 percent of lottery revenue would go to the state, 40 percent to lottery winners and 25 percent would be spent on promotional activities for the lottery.

"The only guaranteed winners," he said, "would be the people promoting it," such as media selling advertising time or space.

In detailing allocations of the proposed $35 million the state would receive, Knopp said 40 percent would go to economic development, 40 percent to local governments and 20 percent to specified state projects such as parks, prison construction and the historical society.

"Knowing the needs (across) the state," he said, "how much of that will come back to Riley County?"

"It's not worth the risk...it's not a sound economic policy," Knopp said, "And I don't want you to vote for it."

Rep. Ivan Sand, R-Riley, said, "Joe (Knopp) and I work together...but we can go in opposite directions if we have to."

Sand said although he would personally vote against the lottery on an election ballot, he favors the people's right to vote on the issue to see if voters would actually approve the legalization of gambling in the state.

"I voted for that lottery thing," Sand said, "but I think it's dumb to raise money that way." He noted the issue would not go back to the Senate unless the representatives make major changes in the proposal.

Sen. Merrill Werts, R-Junction City, said recent statements saying he feels government has no responsibility in setting moral codes are incorrect.

The senator said amending the constitution to give people the right to vote "regardless of (the proposal's) merit" is a shirking of responsibility by legislators.

"A pure democracy is an almost impossible way to run government," Werts said.

During a question and answer session, Werts explained the difference between a pure democracy in which each constituent votes for every piece of legislation, as opposed to representative democracy in which constituents elect a member of their community to represent them.

Werts said the elected representative has the responsibility to regulate the number of issues presented for voter approval, and with more than 1,000 pieces of legislation proposed each session, it would be impossible for pure democracy to work.

In regard to budget proposals, Werts said they would not affect the University "very much," noting final legislation may result in a 3 percent increase for salaries and a 4 percent increase in funding for operational expenses. He said any future proposals probably wouldn't go "far beyond" those percentages to avoid legislators rejecting all increases due to excessive requests.

Three area legislators give support for Kansas' sales tax rate increase

By TOM SCHULTES
Business/Government Editor

Although a recent poll by the Topeka Capital-Journal indicated respondents had little praise for proposed hikes in sales tax rates, three area legislators voiced support for the action — with modifications.

The legislators spoke at Saturday morning's Eggs and Issues breakfast at the University Ramada Inn.

Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, said he favored a one-cent per dollar increase in sales tax as part of a plan to raise $120 million in needed revenues for state operations. He would also support raising operating funds for the state by a two- or three-cent increase per gallon in fuel taxes if those funds would remain in the general fund and are not turned over to highway department accounts.

Sen. Merrill Werts, R-Junction City, said his perception of the Senate indicated support for implementation of a one-half cent per dollar increase in sales tax effective July 1, followed by another increase, totaling one-cent, effective Jan. 1, 1987. He said this method would raise about $140 million in revenue.

Werts said he would leave any other options "alone for now," but added the state needs "no less than $120 million" in new revenue for the coming fiscal year.

Rep. Ivan Sand, R-Riley, said he supports increases in gasoline and sales tax rates, but added, "I don't want to build any more roads," citing the state's problems in upkeep of existing roads.

Sand said legislators need to act soon on finding new revenues because of proposed cutbacks in funding from federal sources.

"There are horrible things going to happen" on local governmental level, Sand said. "You haven't seen anything yet," if Gramm-Rudman legislation withstands legal challenges.

Another issue reported on concerned hearings involving ceilings on medical malpractice awards.

Knopp, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, said the committee is currently working on legislation which would limit awards to $1 million in medical malpractice lawsuits.

The legislator, an attorney by trade, said the proposal's main opponents are members of the legal profession saying "how terrible it is to be limited to $1 million (in awards)."

Knopp said he is more concerned that failure to set an award ceiling could result in doctors leaving the state, and is less concerned about fees collected by attorneys. He said failure to set a cap on awards could result in a loss of medical services to Kansas residents.

The next Eggs and Issues breakfast is scheduled for March 8, in the lower level of the University Ramada Inn. The series is sponsored by the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce.

Engineering fraternity hosts quiz bowl semifinals tonight

By The Collegian Staff

K-State has its own game show in the form of the Third Annual Engineering Quiz Bowl.

The Quiz Bowl's semifinals will be from 8:30 to 10:30 tonight at Paslay Lecture Hall in Durland Hall.

The field has been narrowed from the original 23 teams to eight teams, said George Darin, senior in nuclear engineering and committee chairman for the event.

"The competition is a double elimination," he said. "The finals will be next Monday night, same time, same place."

"The questions can be from any topic, including history, arts and literature, for example," he said. "It's more like the television show on KTWU, Channel 11, called 'High-Q'."

Diversity of thought a part of government

Now that student government elections are over, it's time for those elected to begin fulfilling their duty toward the students. This is especially true for the new student body president, whose job is to work for the common welfare of students.

The new president, Steven Johnson, sophomore in agricultural economics, has said he feels communication and representing students to the administration are the key aspects of his duties. While communication skills and working with the administration officials is essential to the success of any president, keeping in close contact with students remains the most important task of the student body president.

In order to adequately represent as large a segment of the student population as possible, Johnson needs to surround himself with a cabinet whose views do not always coincide with his own. Diversity should be Johnson's main concern when choosing his cabinet and appointing individuals to committees.

While it certainly is easier to choose those whose ideas are similar to his, incorporating ideas which are in opposition to his own, would also make him more effective.

Johnson also needs to make himself available to students in order to listen to their concerns and act on them. During the election campaign Johnson said he was "thinking of ways to get to people other than the usual channels."

His intention of making himself visible to students is admirable, but it is hoped that the "usual channels" will not be neglected either, such as regular office hours when students may visit and share ideas with him.

The goals Johnson stated during his campaign have the potential to make his term a good one, as long as he follows through with them.

Panels must discover 'Why?' not 'Who?'

As soon as the space shuttle Challenger exploded Jan. 28, experts and analysts began seeking an answer to the question, "Why?"

Two investigative panels — one from NASA and the other assembled by President Reagan — began going over the available data from Challenger bit by bit. A theory about the explosion emerged and was verified with increasing confidence.

The solid rocket boosters that lift the shuttle into orbit did not seal adequately. In short, one or more of the rubber "O-rings" that separate sections of the boosters did not seal.

This revelation has led people to wonder, "Why didn't anyone know about the O-ring problem? Or, if they did, why was Challenger allowed to launch?"

There is justification for these questions. It is a natural reaction to seek the "why" of any disaster. In looking for the why, investigators also tend to look for the "who."

However, it should be apparent that there are a vast number of factors — and individuals — involved in the decision to launch the space shuttle. From ground crews to weathermen, flight controllers to the head of the program, many people have a say in the decision. It is fruitless — and pointless — to try to assign the blame to a certain individual.

No single person launches the space shuttle; no one person receives special recognition from any particular launch. In short, there is no motive for launching the shuttle in the face of incontrovertible evidence that it is dangerous.

The panels investigating the Challenger tragedy have indicated that they will determine the cause of the accident. In the process, names of individuals who had a say in the decision to launch will arise.

The danger is that some individuals may attempt to pervert the panels' review. Care must be taken to see that this does not happen.

Freedom rings on Caribbean island

Amid all the hoopla that surrounded President Reagan's trip to Grenada the singular most important event was virtually overlooked — the leftist demonstration held in Market Square during the president's appearance.

The protest is not significant because of its size, or lack thereof, but simply because it took place and did so in an atmosphere of freedom.

Twenty-eight months ago two events of such political diversity could not have taken place on Grenada. In fact, dissent even among the extreme left was not tolerated.

Remember that Prime Minister Maurice Bishop — the leader of the New Jewel movement who seized power through a Cuban-backed coup — was murdered by revolutionaries because he was not moving quickly enough toward creation of a Marxist-Leninist dictatorship.

In contrast, today Grenada has an elected prime minister who leads a coalition government which received 57 percent of the vote in December 1984, winning 14 of 15 seats in Parliament.

Interestingly, Sir Eric Gairy, whose misrule led to the New Jewel coup, was able to garner 36 percent of the vote and capture one seat in Parliament. Some people never learn.

More indicative of the contrast between Grenada now and then is that the rights of the opposition are protected. The Left was able to campaign and won 7 percent of the vote. ("You can fool some of the people all of the time..." A. Lincoln.) The leftist newspaper, the Indies Times, also publishes without restraint.

If the invasion by the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States — admittedly controlled by U.S. forces — accomplished nothing more than this move to liberal democracy it would be justified.

However, because democracies are fragile, the United States has implemented the judicious policy of aiding the development of Grenada's economy. To imply that Grenada's economic success has been as great as its achievement in democratic reform would be untrue. The unemployment rate is approximately 30 percent.

But substantial progress has been made. According to Feb. 20 article in the Christian Science Monitor, "...the island had the highest economic growth rate in the region."

The bulk of the $72 million in U.S. aid has gone to the development of Grenada's infrastructure: roads, telephone, water and electrical systems, thereby creating the basic services on which an economy can be built.

Grenada's economic planners intend to develop a tourist industry on the island but they do not intend to settle for a single-faceted economy. Johnson & Johnson will be opening a surgical mask factory there in March.

The facts — and the people — overwhelmingly support the Oct. 25, 1983, invasion. However, some people are unwilling to view the invasion positively.

Opponents of the invasion have a view of the world that is based on the assumption that everything the does is wrong. If the United States does something right it is either for the wrong reason, or some irrelevant consideration invalidates the accomplishment.

Beyond the almost textbook way that the Grenada experience demonstrates the techniques that Marxist-Leninists use to seize and hold power, there is a lesson for the United States to learn.

This lesson comes from a comparison of Haiti and Grenada, specifically the options that the United States had in assisting the growth of liberal democracy. In Haiti there was a country run by an authoritarian government highly dependent on the United States. Grenada, on the other hand, was a nation moving towards totalitarianism and independent of U.S. influence.

In Haiti the U.S. was playing a role that it all too often plays, that of supporting a ruler that fails to meet our standards of legitimacy. However, by playing this part the United States was able to exert a positive influence. In the case of Haiti President Jean-Claude "Baby Doc" Duvalier there was a limit to U.S. generosity.

The support of positive change through similar methods in nations such as pre-invasion Grenada is much less effective, and almost certainly destined for failure. The circumstances that made direct intervention in Grenada acceptable and successful are somewhat unique and do not apply to "hot spots" such as Angola and Afghanistan.

In these cases, the United States, while continuing and strengthening its support of the domestic freedom fighters, should seek a negotiated settlement based on the principles of liberal democracy.

Nigerian education

Editor,
Re: The story, "Police question man for locker room visit," in the Feb. 18 Collegian: Granted, proper verification of the culture of the man in question should have been done before such information was published. When addressing a particular culture it is important to understand the implications that could arise from misinterpretations.

I would urge people not to base their concept of Nigeria solely from what is reported in the Collegian. As with any country, the opinion of a single person is not representative of a nation or a culture as a whole. Nigeria exhibits a wide diversity in its population, religion, culture and society.

Nigeria is a multicultural nation which includes over 250 ethnic groups. Although it is rapidly becoming a modern industrial society, Nigeria is proud of its traditional African heritage.

As students of a University with a wide variety of people from different cultures, we have the opportunity to get to know and experience people from different countries.

I would urge you to take advantage of having the world at your doorstep. Take time to look beyond the stereotypes and get to know a country's customs and culture.

Confusing issues

Editor,
Re: Mike Riley's column, "Politics, religion remain indivisible," in the Feb. 18 Collegian:

I fail to understand why Riley refers to the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and South African Bishop Desmond Tutu as "men of religion leading political causes" and as "respected political leaders."

First, the issues which these men have supported, namely civil and human rights, are issues that transcend both politics and religion. They are rights that all people should not be denied, regardless of their religion or the political system which governs them. In this sense these two men are "respected," but not as "political leaders."

Furthermore, these men cannot properly be termed "political leaders," as neither have ever hinted at running for political office. Neither did either express a desire to be appointed to a public office.

My idea of what is political is narrower, and I think a more precise application of the word, than is Riley's. If he set out to prove that politics and religion are inseparable, he succeeded, at least in his own mind by confusing the two.

I feel that only when people stop viewing human and civil rights as political will these rights be observed worldwide.

Coliseum bigwigs

Editor,
I don't know about you, but I'm tired of all the talk about the Fred Bramlage Coliseum. We're stuck with it, and you all know it. After haphazard planning, to no planning at all, this monolith is still being pushed through.

I'm not pushing it. Most of you aren't pushing it either. So who is? It is the bigwigs who hold the power. Why? There's a lot of money involved in this monstrosity, and a lot of people stand to make a profit.

Game attendance is down, the student population is dwindling, many of the campus buildings need to be renovated and most departments on campus could use some equipment. But what are the power pushers shoving $17.5 million at?

It is a scaled-down version of a sports complex we don't need, for a so-so team to dribble on. Also, those who hold the money and power can sponge off more money and power for themselves. Are you going to gain much more than an additional $20 taken out of your tuition?

I think if Fred Bramlage wants to have a concrete edifice built so that his name can be seen by everyone, that's fine with me. But just leave me and my money out of it. I won't complain if he wants to donate $2.4 million to have it built, as long as I don't have to pay for something as useless as this.

In fact, I'll support him if he pays the $7 million students have to pay. I think, though, if students are going to pay for most of it, against our will, that the name of the coliseum ought to be appropriate. I'd say, "Sucker Coliseum" sounds good.

Like I said, the coliseum is going through. I won't make any profit out of it, and neither will you, or you, or you. Somebody will though, and I hope they choke on it.

A little bit of fun

Editor,
You know, letters to the editor these days seem to be ever-so-serious. There is an occasional letter of praise or good cheer, but most seem to offer complaints or arguments. Although it's great to see the involvement of students and faculty through the letter writing, I just want to remind you all that there's some fun stuff going on around here, too.

Hey, the Goodnow 1-B co-rec team won its intramural basketball game Thursday night! Now, to most people, this might not seem like the most important news in the world, but to the team, it was; winning isn't something they are exactly famous for. But they won, and the game itself was a lot of fun.

The two teams clashed at the Rec Complex, playing in front of a loyal crowd of two (myself and Keith Meyer). Although Goodnow had technically won by forfeit, the teams played a 35- to 40-minute game on their own.

Both teams played well and hard, but the most important thing is that everyone — the other team included — seemed to have a very good time. I know I did.

Just thought I'd pass it along.

Gramm-Rudman may lead to cuts in ag extension services

By BECKY OHLDE
Agriculture Editor

Budget cuts in the proposed Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill may result in elimination of the Kansas Cooperative Extension Service, said Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture and director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, during a teleconference from Topeka Friday.

"In spite of what President Reagan has said about the importance of family and volunteerism, the administration in Washington is proposing massive cuts in the Cooperative Extension Service budget," Woods said.

"It's also proposing where those cuts should be made in extension's 1987 federal budget," he said.

Those proposed cuts could lead to the elimination of the 4-H program, extension homemaker's program, expanded food and nutrition programs and extension's community development activities.

President Reagan is asking the U.S. Department of Agriculture to take a disproportionate share of the 1987 budget cut. As a part of that, he has proposed a 50 percent reduction in federal funding for the Cooperative Extension Service.

"This clearly signals an erosion in the partnership of nation, state and county. In fact, the federal government appears to be reneging on the partnership, expecting the state and counties to pick up the federal shares," Woods said.

"The Office of Management and Budget seems to be suggesting how we should handle the remaining federal budget. It has proposed a change in the Smith-Lever Act, the legislation which created the extension service," he said.

The new wording states: "Extension agents may provide other services only after the needs of farm operators have been fully met."

This change would end federal support for all urban and suburban programs, most programs for the elderly and poor, all programs for families, children and communities, and programs for gardeners, rural fire districts, landowners who don't farm, feedlot owners, pesticide applicators, millers, meat processors and others.

As proposed, the president's federal budget cut would eliminate 40 subject matter specialists in the Kansas Extension Service, 13 secretarial and other support staff positions and $2,088 in each county extension agent's salary.

The State Board of Agriculture recognizes 19 counties which would not be able to provide extra funding if the budget is passed.

"We are trying to alert our citizens in a very quick and rapid time frame that will allow them to understand the implications of the budget cuts," Woods said. "Hopefully, if they're concerned about those recommended budget cuts, they will take the appropriate action and let the decision-makers know of their concern."

The board cannot put together a contingency plan for an extension service which would comply with the new budget until the proposal goes through Congress and the board can understand what the proposed cuts will be.

"We have had contact with one congressman and have been in communication with some of their aides to help them understand the potential impact of the budget," Woods said.

"What we're in the process of doing is trying to communicate and have communicated to our Board of Regents so they would understand the implications of these proposed budget cuts," Woods said. "We have met with the governor and explained the seriousness of these recommended cuts to extension."

Woods said he is not sure what state legislators' reactions would be to picking up the federal government's share of extension service funding.

"I can only speculate what the decision of the legislature might be. We do know that many of our people across the state — and I'm speaking of legislators — believe the delivery of research-based information by the Kansas Cooperative Extension Service is an important program that they want to maintain and support," he said.

Students advance in Truman finals

By KIM KINSLOW
Collegian Reporter

Two K-State students have been named Truman Scholarship finalists and are advancing to the final phase of the competition.

The two finalists are Kent Bradley, sophomore in pre-medicine, and Lori Shellenberger, sophomore in pre-law.

Both students will go for their final interviews for the competition on March 6 in Kansas City, Mo. If selected for the scholarship, the recipient could receive up to $28,000 to apply toward the cost of his or her education.

Bradley and Shellenberger said they have devoted many hours to preparing for the competition and the final interview. Bradley estimated they have each spent 200 to 300 hours researching and practicing for the interview since the initial application was filled out in November.

Even with all this preparation Bradley said the interview will be tough.

"I don't think I'll ever really be ready for it," he said.

To be eligible for the scholarship, the applicant must be of sophomore standing. After submitting the lengthy application form a selection committee reviews the application and interviews potential candidates, Shellenberger said.

The selection committee is headed by Nancy Twiss, academic adviser in the College of Arts and Sciences. Other committee members are Bettie Dale, pre-medicine adviser in the College of Arts and Sciences; Eugene Kremer, professor of architecture; William Richter, professor of political science; and Don Nieman, associate professor of history.

After being selected, Bradley and Shellenberger said they had to revise and rewrite their essays several times. Twiss worked with the two candidates before sending their applications and essays to the national selection committee. The two students were then selected for the final interview.

Both students could receive a scholarship. The national committee will award one scholarship to a recipient in each state and 52 at-large scholarships. K-State had double scholarship winners in 1982 and 1983. Bradley said he wrote his essay about Medicare and Shellenberger wrote hers about Nicaragua and U.S. involvement there.

Shellenberger said she thinks her topic might make it a little harder in the interview because it is a controversial subject.

"This will be the toughest interview I've ever had," she said.

Besides researching their essay topics, the finalists have gone through three practice interviews at the University. These practice interviews were set up by Twiss and are designed to be similar to the actual interview.

The practice interviews are with professors at the University and some community people. Bradley said the practice sessions help to prepare for the interview.

"I think we both have a good chance because of all the preparation and support of the faculty," Bradley said.

The candidates must also keep up with current developments about their essay topic before the interview.

Ferraro's son sells cocaine to agent

By The Associated Press

MIDDLEBURY, Vt. — The son of former vice-presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro was a major cocaine supplier on the Middlebury College campus and was known as "The Pharmacist," police said.

John Zaccaro Jr., 22, pleaded innocent Friday in Vermont District Court to possession of a regulated drug with intent to sell.

A list of names found after police arrested the Zaccaro may be used to arrest other students at Middlebury College, police said.

"There's a lot of students who have a lot to worry about," police Sgt. David Wemette said Saturday.

Zaccaro, a Middlebury College senior who had been under investigation for several months, was arrested after he sold one-quarter gram of cocaine to an undercover officer Thursday, police said.

A search of Zaccaro's car and off-campus apartment turned up a list of people believed to be involved in drug transactions with Zaccaro, according to an affidavit filed by police. Six to eight grams of cocaine and about $1,500 the affidavit said was "directly related" to cocaine trafficking were found in the apartment, police said.

The maximum penalty for possession of a regulated drug with intent to sell is five years in jail, a $5,000 fine, or both.

Center trains students to fine tune taste buds

By BECKY LUCAS
Collegian Reporter

Imagine possessing knowledgeable taste buds.

The Sensory Analysis Center's nine panelists "fine tune" their sense of taste and smell to a level of high expertise through an extensive training program.

The Sensory Analysis Center was established in 1983 by Jean Caul, professor emeritus in foods and nutrition. The center, run by the College of Human Ecology, performs sensory studies for food industry corporations.

When the center is looking for panelists, the first concern is that the person is a permanent resident, said Elizabeth Smith, manager of the center.

"We don't use students, or someone we know will be leaving in two years, because once they have been through the extensive program we want them to stay here and work," Smith said.

Smith said they choose the panelists after running the applicants through a battery of tests to determine if they are average to good at recognizing taste factors. The taste factors include the actual taste (sweet, sour, salty and bitter), the aromatics (the smell which gives a perceived flavor identity), and the feeling of the tongue.

The center conducts tests and studies on food aging, product development and comparing flavor substitutes.

The aging studies help a company determine a product's shelf life. The studies require a product be studied over an extended time.

After receiving a product from a company, the panelists taste the product daily and rate the quality of taste notes. Taste notes are qualities which combine to give a food its distinct flavor, Smith said.

"Notes are a piece of the flavor. There's the sweet-sour notes and the aromatic notes, and all together they make the whole (flavor)," she said.

She said when doing a soybean study some of the notes were labeled "beany," "acidic" and "chalky."

Product development studies are performed for companies wanting to emulate the flavor of another company's product. The center "dissects" the tastes, or notes.

Once the center dissects the notes of the product, it reports to the company the flavor make-up of the original product. The company then uses this information in creating a new product.

Identifying the content of flavor substitutes is done when companies are looking to change food or beverage formulas. A company may have been approached by a salesman saying he had a less expensive method of creating the original formula. The center tests the original product and compares it to the substitute.

After the studies are complete, Smith sends the company a profile of the results. The information includes the number of panel members, a reference for each taste note and the statistical data supporting the center's findings.

The center conducted some studies on unusual foods including an aging study on Tofu — a type of bean curd — Guatemalan cornmeal and even the dehydration of okra.

"You know it's not all chocolate and cookies in this business, we have to take the good with the bad," Smith said.

Elizabeth Smith, manager of the Sensory Analysis Center, blends soybeans to be sampled by the panelists who perform taste tests on products.

To ensure the accuracy of the taste tests, Smith said the panelists drink a specially treated water between each test to eliminate and neutralize aftertastes.

The water the panelists drink is triple-distilled, deionized water.

"It is a very clear, pure water. There are no off-taste notes in our water at all," Smith said.

Smith said working in the center has changed the way she eats.

"Working with sensory analysis is really fun. I've always enjoyed eating, and I enjoy it even more now. You know some people put pizza in their mouth and down the hatch it goes," she said. "When I put pizza in my mouth, my mind goes 'ah, the oregano, ah, the tomatoes.' Instead of just tasting one thing I taste all the notes when I eat."

Blood drive suffers, falls 129 pints short

By The Collegian Staff

The spring semester Bloodmobile ended its drive 129 pints short of its 1,400 pint goal, said Troy Millsap, junior in secondary education and Bloodmobile student co-chairman.

The preliminary figures from Friday indicated 1,271 pints were donated during the drive, Millsap said, as compared to the 1,509 pints donated during the fall Bloodmobile drive.

Millsap attributed the low numbers to the widespread cases of influenza this winter. He said after talking with the Bloodmobile doctor he realized the state is being hit hard with the flu.

A positive aspect of the drive was the "really good" student help, Millsap said.

"I'd like to say thank you to everyone who helped us," he said. "That's what makes our Bloodmobile work — the student help."

Millsap, who will again be co-chairman during the fall 1986 drive, said his goals include getting more off-campus participation, especially as volunteer workers.

"We've got a really good competition between the greek houses and residence halls, but we'd like more off-campus participation just to make it a more K-State event," he said.

The Bloodmobile was sponsored by the American Red Cross and Circle K International.

Workshop offers class in unusual dance form; students act like Jell-O

By TRINA KLOTZBACH
Collegian Reporter

Students who attended the Contact Improvisation Workshop Sunday not only learned a new dance form, but may have also found out a little more about themselves.

The workshop, sponsored by the Department of Speech, was taught by Harlan Brownlee, a member of The Susan Warden Dancers of Kansas City, Kan. Brownlee, who has been studying and teaching contact improvisation for a year and a half, has found it has helped him in his performances and his personal life.

"The more I do this work, the more I learn. You really become aware of how you communicate with others," said Brownlee.

The first part of the workshop was devoted to getting rid of any tension or inhibition the participants brought with them. To do this, Brownlee had everyone lie on the floor and concentrate on the relationship of their weight to the floor.

"Let your body kind of ooze onto the floor like Jell-O," Brownlee instructed the group.

The class then progressed from releasing tension to rolling across the floor in slow, relaxed movements. Brownlee urged the group to use little effort in their movement.

"The whole secret of contact improv is relaxing and letting the current take you," he said.

The next part of the workshop stressed making effective eye contact with others. Brownlee had the students walk around the room randomly. When they encountered another person they were to stop and stare into their eyes for a few seconds before moving on.

"By doing this, you are truly acknowledging another person. So many times in a day we walk right by a person, but we really never look at them," he said.

During the remainder of the workshop, actual physical contact with others was utilized. The group split into pairs and each couple created their own unique variation of rolling, falling and sliding across the floor. In some of the exercises one person would support all of the partner's weight, other times the support was shared. Brownlee feels the hardest part of these exercises is allowing another person to support all your weight.

"Most people are uncomfortable doing this at first. Our society stresses being strong and never leaning on anyone else," Brownlee said. "In contact improv you really find out if you're the supportive type or the type who needs a lot of support from others."

The exercises also stress being aware of your own movement and direction, while at the same time being attentive to your partner and his needs. Brownlee stressed that contact improvisation is like any other form of dance in that you really have to work at it to become good.

Professor to deliver speech on 'Star Wars' defense plan

By The Collegian Staff

"Star Wars: The Last Straw" will be the topic of a lecture presented by George Reiter, professor of physics at the University of Houston, as part of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series.

Reiter's speech is the first in the series and will be presented at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in Forum Hall. This year's series topic is "U.S. 1986: Myth and Reality."

Reiter will discuss the star wars Strategic Defense Initiative including world war implications, technical information and scientific research methods, said Talat Rahman, assistant professor of physics.

Reiter received his doctorate in physics from Stanford University in California. He worked in Brookhaven National Lab in New York and attended Chalmers Institute in Gothenberg, Sweden. He was also a visiting professor in Brazil.

A teach-in will be conducted by Reiter from 3 to 5 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Little Theater. Four professors will take part in the discussion which will cover several aspects of the arms race.

Reiter will cover the test-ban treaties of the '60s. Jacob Kipp, professor of history, will discuss the Soviet response to SDI. Al Compaan, professor of physics, will talk about lasers and surveillance technology. Rahman will survey U.S. and Soviet nuclear arsenals. Ed Schiappa, professor of speech, will discuss the rhetoric of nukespeak.

The lecture and panel discussion are open to the public.

Big Eight champion Kansas pounds K-State

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

LAWRENCE — K-State Coach Jack Hartman said he couldn't expect a much better effort from his team than the one it gave in Saturday's 84-69 loss to Kansas at Allen Fieldhouse.

The Wildcats gave the newly-crowned Big Eight Conference champion Jayhawks all they could handle for 25 minutes. But most basketball games aren't won and lost in the first 25 minutes and KU simply rolled over K-State in the final 15.

"I thought my kids did a heck of a job. I'm proud of them, really proud of them," Hartman said. "They busted their tails and tried hard and played pretty well."

As well as K-State played though, it wasn't well enough to get a win or even a close game against the No. 3 Jayhawks. KU, as has been the case with most of the Jayhawks opponents this season, just had too many weapons for the Wildcats to withstand.

Ron Kellogg recaptured his Saturday brilliance of a season ago with 30 points on 13 of 17 shooting and also led KU with nine assists and five rebounds.

Kellogg's 30 didn't compromise KU's normally balanced offensive scheme either. Calvin Thompson had 18 points for the Jayhawks and Danny Manning had 15. Add Greg Dreiling's 10 points and Cedric Hunter's nine to this total and K-State wasn't able to keep up.

"They've (KU) got a great team. They've got all the parts," Hartman said. "You can't help too much on anybody or somebody else is going to hurt you."

At the outset of the game, it appeared the Jayhawks, who led 19-5 with 13:08 left, might eliminate the Wildcats from the picture before halftime. But K-State wasn't going to die that easily.

The Wildcats mounted a furious comeback at the close of the first half which was fueled by an uncanny shooting streak by Joe Wright.

"We got a standing eight count and got back in the fight," Hartman said. "That's what I was really proud of."

Wright scored 19 of his 27 points in the first half and at one point hit seven consecutive shots from the field.

"I was feeling pretty good at the time," Wright said of his streak. "I was just playing within the offense and the shots were going down."

With Wright doing most of the damage, K-State was able to lead by one at halftime, 34-33.

"It was one of the few times we've been behind at half," KU Coach Larry Brown said. "There was some sense of urgency in the locker room, but I told the kids you're not going to win every half."

Brown's talk must have done the job.

KU came out blazing in the second half as the Jayhawks were not to be denied on this afternoon in Allen Fieldhouse.

Before six minutes of the half had passed, KU had taken a 50-49 lead on a 18-foot jump shot from the left side by Kellogg.

After taking the lead, the Jayhawks used their fast break to outscore K-State, 16-4. Almost before the 'Cats seemed to know what had hit them, KU had a 68-53 lead with 7:53 left to play and put the game out of reach.

"That one little spell where Kansas got away from us — that was just about the ball game," Hartman said.

The KU rally nearly overshadowed a stellar second half by K-State's high-scoring forward, Norris Coleman, who was almost anonymous in the first half. Coleman scored 19 of his 21 points in the second half and hit seven of his first eight second-half shots.

"We did a few things (at halftime) to get him (Coleman) in the flow and he kind of took off from there," Hartman said.

Except for Coleman though, KU seemed to have an answer for most everything K-State tried in the second half.

"I'm quite sure they watched film on us all week," Wright said. "They knew what we were going to do. We just went out and did the best we could."

Wright hardly saw the ball in the second half and shot only two of five from the field.

"They (KU) really did a good job of denying the ball to Joe in the second half," Hartman said.

With the victory, KU was able to bask in the glory of its first Big Eight basketball title since 1978.

"We've waited for this for a very

Lady Cats fall to Lady Jayhawks

By DAVID SVOBODA
Editor

LAWRENCE — It was a dogfight from the word "go" — a dogfight K-State women's coach Matilda Mossman knew her team realistically had little chance of winning.

After 40 minutes of contact, three technical fouls and a prolonged shoving match which emptied the Kansas bench, the Lady Jayhawks posted a 81-70 win over the Lady Cats Saturday afternoon.

It wasn't easy for the Lady Jayhawks, however. The Lady Cats, playing without their leading scorer and rebounder, Carlisa Thomas, who was suspended Saturday pending a National Collegiate Athletic Association investigation into her eligibility, gave the host Lady Jayhawks fits in the first 20 minutes before falling to a physical Kansas squad.

K-State raced from the blocks early to gain a 6-0 edge. Kansas' first points did not come until almost three minutes had elapsed in the contest. Amanda Holley, who finished with 13 points, led the early Lady Cat charge, scoring eight of K-State's first 21 points.

When Holley tallied points seven and eight at the 8:45 mark of the first half, the Kansas defense went to work on defending against the senior Lady Cat forward and was successful — shutting Holley down until the final 30 seconds of the half.

During that eight minute period, Kansas raced out to two eight-point leads before taking a 38-32 advantage into the locker room at halftime.

Center Vickie Adkins led the Jayhawks in scoring in the first half, tallying 12 of her team-leading 19 points in the first 20 minutes.

The second half resembled a war, of sorts, with the first battle at just over three minutes remaining in the game.

Although 37 minutes of the game had been contested and three minutes of bad blood might be thought of by a casual observer as insignificant, coaches and players for both teams said the battles late in the contest were just the main events on a card filled with minor skirmishes.

"I know women haven't been enlisted to go to war yet, but our women went there today (Saturday)," Mossman said. "We can't match-up with KU physically, and the officiating allowed them to get physical — and it is even tougher with only seven kids."

One of those "seven kids" was one of the two combatants in the first main event and was the star of the second as well.

With 2:46 left in the game, KU guard Jackie Martin and K-State center Sue Leiding battled for a loose ball near the top of the key on the KU end of the floor, and in the battle Leiding fouled Martin.

Martin continued to swing her elbows after whistles had blown the play dead, and one of her blows caught Leiding across the chest. Leiding took exception to the blow and proceeded to fire the basketball at Martin. The KU bench emptied and Saturday Afternoon's Main Event was underway. Martin was called for a technical foul.

Leiding, whose brother is a starting linebacker at Texas, said her physical play was a result of her desire to show she wasn't intimidated by the KU players — not a result of frustration.

"I really don't think it was frustration," she said. "We just wanted to win, and to win we needed to show them that we weren't going to be intimidated by them."

Leiding was back on stage with 32 seconds remaining in the game and KU in command 79-69. Following a K-State basket, Leiding took the free ball and fired it at the KU player waiting to take the ball out under the basket. The official under the basket took exception to how hard Leiding threw the ball, and she was whistled for a technical foul.

"I wanted her to take the ball out, but she just let it keep bouncing so I threw it at her," Leiding said matter-of-factly.

Her coach, Mossman, was also frank in her assessment of the officiating.

"We get the leftovers. The good ones (officials) call men's college and boys' high school basketball," she said. "If the officials take control of the game early, none of the things that happened would have happened. They had no control over the game."

KU Coach Marian Washington agreed

KC newspaper report exposes Coleman's past

By TIM FITZGERALD
Assistant Sports Editor

K-State forward Norris Coleman may have started the basketball season with no college eligibility.

The Kansas City Star and Times have reported Coleman played two years of post basketball at Schweinfurt, West Germany, prior to going to Fort Campbell, Kentucky, where he also played basketball for the post team. Coleman's participation on both teams may have exhausted all of his eligibility prior to him coming to K-State.

According to the National Collegiate Athletic Association rules which were in effect when K-State was recruiting Coleman, for each year of organized basketball over age 20 a person plays, one year of eligibility is expired.

That rule was repealed at the NCAA convention Jan. 13-15, but Coleman had already participated in 15 games as a Wildcat.

The Times learned Coleman had played in Germany by researching old issues of the European editions of The Stars and Stripes magazine.

The Times reported Coleman's playing in Germany was previously unknown according to K-State Coach Jack Hartman, Coleman's Fort Campbell coach and other coaches who recruited the 6-8 forward.

Coleman told the Times he never mentioned it to any of the coaches because none of them ever asked.

"We got a letter from his coach in service saying he had played one year of organized ball," Hartman told the Times. "We felt Norris had one to three years. But after that rule changed (in January), we thought that was a moot point."

"I think it's a simple case of the NCAA manual is so complicated, you are not sure what you are reading."

Coleman told the Times he had competed in Germany, but information which K-State assistant coach Jimmy Allen supplied him led him to believe his military competition didn't effect his eligibility.

"The way Coach Allen told me it was AAU ball and international competition (which deducted eligibility)," Coleman told the Times. Coleman said from this information, he thought his participation with either battalion or post teams didn't matter.

"I thought for sure I had one to three years," Coleman told the Times.

The NCAA official interpretation No. 500 considers basketball an organized competition if any of the following conditions exist: competition is scheduled and publicized in advance, official score is kept, individual or team standings are maintained, official time or game time is used, admission is charged, teams are formed or team rosters are predetermined, squad members are dressed in uniform, or the team is privately or commercially sponsored.

Bill Cunningham, varsity sports coordinator at Fort Campbell, said he had researched Coleman's eligibility and informed Coleman while Coleman was stationed at Fort Campbell.

"I put it (data sheet) together so I could people the specifics," Cunningham told the Times. "I know if that NCAA rule had held fast, and I called the NCAA headquarters and talked to them about it, he would have had one year of eligibility at a Division I school."

Cunningham told the Times he was never contacted by any K-State officials about Coleman's eligibility, but he did inform schools who asked about the situation. Cunningham said he had spoken with coaches from Austin Peay, Morehead State and Middle Tennessee concerning Coleman.

Coleman told the Times Cunningham didn't inform him of his lack of eligibility until after he had signed with K-State.

The Times said later in the interview Coleman changed his story.

"I didn't know about no rule," he said. "I thought I had four years..."

"All schools say how they weren't interested in signing me. Every time I saw them they had a national letter of intent for me to sign...Louisiana Tech, Iowa, Larry Brown (Kansas) and Denny Crum (Louisville)," Coleman told the Times.

Craig Morris, an assistant at Morehead State, told the Times he didn't know about Coleman's playing in Germany.

"I have talked to everyone who recruited him, and they didn't know he played in Germany," Morris said.

K-State athletic director Larry Travis told the Star even though Coleman played in Germany, Coleman should still be eligible.

"He did play over there (in Germany), but it (the rule) is not in a 12-month period from his birthday," Travis said. "It's the date of competition in a year. He's played parts of two years, that's it."

The Times story pointed out the NCAA does not normally deal with regular season forfeitures unless a court order is involved.

Travis told the Star K-State athletic officials spent Saturday morning looking into Coleman's eligibility.

"I had gotten information from the Army, but not all the information," Travis said. "We had a letter (stating) he played at Fort Campbell. We didn't understand about the time he spent in Germany. But we have that worked out."

"We have talked to the NCAA," Travis said. "We don't need to defend anything."

Tracksters use weekend meet to ready team for conference

By DARIN RUSSELL
Collegian Reporter

K-State's Anne Stadler ran her fastest 1500-meter race of the year and Kelly Abernathy won the shot put with a lifetime best throw of 44 feet 10 inches at the Kansas State Metric Meet Saturday at Ahearn Field House.

Stadler's winning time in the 1500-meters was 4:24.56, just over a second off the national qualifying time of 4:23.50.

"It was a mixed day for us," Coach Steve Miller said. "Anne (Stadler) missed qualifying (for nationals in the 1500 meters) by just a little. Bryan Carroll had a great day (winning both the 1000 and 1500 meter runs)."

Miller said that while some of K-State's top runners did not compete, the meet gave others a chance to compete and stay active in preparation for the Big Eight Conference meet next weekend in Lincoln, Neb.

"Generally, it was a good experience for us," Miller said. "We didn't have a lot of great times, but we stayed busy and that's what we needed going into the Big Eight meet."

"Some of our runners will be doubling up in events in the Big Eight meet," said Miller. "This (not competing in the meet) gave them a little rest."

The field of competitors consisted mainly of junior college athletes, although there were some individuals from Nebraska, Oklahoma State and Oklahoma.

Miller said the meet served as a "free recruiting trip" for junior college athletes and gave them a chance to compete against each other.

"Obviously, the jucos had a good day, going head-to-head with some good competition. Several junior college athletes qualified for nationals and we enjoy giving them the opportunity to do that," said Miller.

Other athletes competing were either unattached or members of a track club.

William Snoddy, former world-record holder for the indoor 300-yard dash, competed for the Atlantic Coast Club from New York. Snoddy placed first in the 300 meters and sixth in the 55-meter dash. Track clubs came from as far away as Los Angeles and Boston.

Miller was concerned Sunday about Melran Leach, who pulled a hamstring in the 55-meter dash.

"He (Leach) pulled it a little in the first heat of the 55-meter dash and again in the finals," said Miller. "I think it's a minor pull. We should know what his situation is by Tuesday or Wednesday."

Others placing first for K-State, besides Stadler, Abernathy and Carroll, were Brad Speer in the high jump, Kim Kilpatrick in the 55-meter hurdles, Anita Isom in the 55-meter dash, Michelle Maxey in the 300-meters, and Rita Graves in the high jump.

K-State's Kim Kilpatrick pulls away from Georgia Gibson, Barton County Community College, during the 55-meter hurdles Saturday in the K-State Metric Meet at Ahearn Field House. Kilpatrick placed first in the event.

Pitching helps 'Cats take 3 of 4 in weekend series against Lamar

By DOUG SCHEIBE
Sports Writer

K-State used consistent pitching to take three of four seven-inning weekend games from Lamar at Beaumont, Texas.

After losing the first game Saturday 8-5, K-State won the second game 3-0 behind a complete game from pitcher Robbie Guinn.

Guinn, 1-0, scattered four hits and struck out five to get the shutout. K-State's offense, which heated up with a four-run rally in the last inning of the first game, backed Guinn with one run in the fifth and two in the sixth. Guinn had six complete games last season.

On Sunday, the 'Cats got wins from senior pitchers Scott Lichlyter and Wally Bramlage.

Lichlyter, 1-0, used relief help from Brad Harvick in the bottom of the seventh to escape with a 3-2 victory.

After allowing only a second inning run, Lichlyter loaded the bases with one out in the bottom of the seventh. Harvick got the first batter he faced to hit a sacrifice fly to left and walked the second. Harvick then retired the side and got the save when he got the last Lamar batter to fly to right.

Mike Hamacher scored what turned out to be the winning run for K-State in the fourth inning. He scored after a single and an error put him on second and a ground ball moved him to third.

In the second game Sunday, K-State jumped out to an early lead with four runs in the first en route to a 6-5 win.

The four-run inning for the 'Cats included three hits, two Lamar errors, an intentional walk, a balk and a wild pitch.

K-State scored two more runs in the fourth on Mike Hinkle's two-run single. Hinkle had two singles in the game.

Duke overwhelms failing Sooners

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — While No. 3 Kansas was clinching the 1985-86 Big Eight Conference championship with a win over K-State, No. 10 Oklahoma stayed on the skids by losing to the second-ranked Duke, 93-84.

In other conference action, Iowa State kept its hopes alive for an NCAA Tournament bid by downing Nebraska 81-73, and Oklahoma State took its turn in beating winless Colorado, downing the Buffaloes, 90-85.

KU's winning of the crown took much of the luster off of what was supposed to be a titanic struggle in Norman, Okla., Monday night between the Jayhawks and Sooners. Oklahoma has four conference losses and is about to drop out of the Top 10 for the first time in many, many weeks.

KU stands an excellent chance to move up to No. 2 in the rankings as a result of two losses in a row by top-ranked North Carolina.

Oklahoma, 23-5, 8-4, fell behind Duke at the outset, but managed to close the gap.

David Henderson scored 28 points for Duke.

Terry Faggins and Andre Ivy set personal-best scoring records in leading Oklahoma State past Colorado. Faggins scored 26 points and Ivy 24. The Cowboys are playing well in the final games of Paul Hansen, who was told he would not be retained as head coach, are 14-11 and 5-7. Colorado got 20 points from Randy Downs.

Now 8-17 overall and 0-12 in the conference, the Buffs are just two losses away from being the first Big Eight team ever to go winless during the regular conference season.

Freshman Elmer Robinson came off the bench and scored 16 points in the second half, a career-high, to boost Iowa State past Nebraska.

The Cyclones trailed at halftime, 38-35. Jeff Grayer's 20 points led Iowa State.

Services assist students with landlords

By SHERI DIRKS
Collegian Reporter

To avoid a breach in tenant/landlord relations, both parties should be aware of their contractual rights and obligations, said Bob Felde, assistant director of housing.

"Most students don't have the time, experience and expertise to follow up when they've been abused," he said. "The students should be aware of their consumer rights."

Two on-campus sources for rental information are the Consumer Relations Board office in the Student Government Services offices on the ground floor of the Union and the Department of Housing in Pittman Hall.

Sample leases, inventory sheets and copies of The Tenant's Handbook of Rights and Responsibilities are among published materials available to assist those considering off-campus housing.

Prospective off-campus residents can obtain listings of available rooms, apartments, mobile homes and houses at the housing department offices.

Dianne Urban, students' attorney, whose office is also in the SGS offices, is available to help students with landlord problems or to offer guidance to prevent such problems.

She said one common problem between students and landlords concerns rent deposits.

"The landlord is required by law within 30 days to return the deposit," Urban said, noting if the landlord fails to return the deposit, or to provide the former tenant with a list of deductions for damages within the required amount of time, the landlord must return the deposit plus damages equal to 1½ times the amount withheld.

For example, Urban said in the case of a $200 deposit withheld, the landlord would owe the tenant $500 — the amount of the deposit plus $300 in damages.

"The purpose is to get the landlord to comply," she said.

Felde and Urban both stressed the importance of using an inventory sheet, so tenants would not be responsible for damages they did not cause.

An off-campus source for assistance in rental disputes is the Manhattan Human Relations Department in the east-side basement of the City Auditorium, 11th Street and Poyntz Avenue.

In addition to handling discrimination complaints, the department provides information regarding landlord and tenant regulations and investigates fair housing complaints.

"We try to explain what the landlord and tenant act said regarding a certain area, and try to give people the information that they need so they can essentially help themselves," said Jose Garibay, senior personnel technician in the department.

He suggests anyone who consults him and has doubts should seek legal council. The majority of people who consult Garibay have questions pertaining to termination of the lease or security deposits.

He said regardless of the type of rental agreement, termination can either be by cause or by mutual consent.

Termination by cause may result from noncompliance by either party with regulations outlined in the lease, or the residence does not comply with building and housing safety codes.

Garibay said if termination is by cause, there must be a written notice from either party explaining the problem. If it is not remedied within 14 days, a second notice must be sent stating termination of the lease will occur 30 days after receipt of the first notice.

"The code office takes notices only in terms of rental property. You notify them of a possible violation and they'll go out and inspect," he said.

If repairs are not made to make the building comply with safety codes, the same time period regulations go into effect.

Another cause for termination occurs when proper procedures are not followed when another person moves in, he said.

"If nothing is in writing, who's to say that an individual not on the lease actually owes anybody any rent or actually has any real responsibility if the other parties illegally (leave a roommate that is not on the lease)," Garibay said.

Termination of a lease can also occur when tenants do not pay rent within a specified time frame, he said.

Garibay said in this case, a three-day notice must be sent to the tenant and if rent is not paid by that time, the tenant must move out on the third day.

Students win awards at U.N. conference

By The Collegian Staff

Two K-State students received awards for their representation of India at a model United Nations last week in Nebraska.

Ann Traylor, senior in history, and Rattan Nath, graduate in physics, received delegate awards at the conference. Nath was given the Most Outstanding Delegate award in the Economic and Social Council. Traylor received honorable mention in the Social Humanitarian Cultural Council.

The conference took place in Nebraska for high school and college students to participate in a mock assembly similar to the United Nations.

In the assembly, students debated current events in different commissions. These commissions then presented resolutions to the General Assembly if an issue was deemed important to the entire assembly.

K-State took a delegation of four from the campus U.N. Council including Monica Daniels, junior in political science, and Brian Sherwood, junior in pre-law.

As representatives of a Third World nation, Traylor said the K-State delegation did research on how India would react to issues.

"You have to turn around and look at things in a different perspective because some of their values are so different," Traylor said.

Nath said he also researched certain issues, although as a native of India he knew about most of the political alliances of the country. Nath said his first love is history and political science before physics so he felt it was a good opportunity to speak about issues with which he is familiar.

Traylor said she became interested in the Indian culture after living as an exchange student for three months in Indonesia.

Professors study women in media

By TERESA TEMME
Collegian Reporter

Women in the foreign media have become the focus of several University studies, said William Richter, head of the Department of Political Science, during the Friday Focus on Women in the Union.

Richter's topic was "Images of Women in Popular Fiction: Some Cross Cultural Observations."

Richter said the interest at the University in these studies was developed by Cornelia Flora, professor in social anthropology and social work, who undertook the first studies here. Flora has written a series of 17 articles based on women in the American and Latin American media.

"It was great to get something going here at K-State, and to have a lot of people interested in this subject," Flora said.

Richter and Flora agreed they had no idea how in-depth and widespread the studies would become when they started.

Jan Flora, associate professor in social anthropology and social work; Linda Richter, associate professor in political science; and Michael Suleiman, professor in political science, have also undertaken studies dealing with women in the foreign media, Richter said.

Richter and his wife, Linda, worked together on studies which focused on women in the media of India.

They found women were encouraged by the Indian media to remain passive, which is true for most foreign media, he said. However, they also found that with increased age, women gained more authority and were able to become more active, Richter said.

In his presentation, Richter expanded on a paper which he presented to the Midwest Political Science Association in 1980. In the paper he compared the studies which have dealt with women in the media.

Richter said he has since updated the paper, but there still are few studies of women in the foreign media.

He said one of the problems with the studies was the contradictory findings. Also the word "only" was used frequently when referring to the positions or jobs women held, but was not used when referring to men. Richter said interpretations often reflected the dispositions of the writers.

"There appears to be a strong bias against any good news for women which ultimately works to the disadvantage of women's studies," he said.

Marcos

where Enrile, Ramos and their supporters were entrenched. Marines loyal to Marcos had dispersed several hundred civilians in a dawn assault Monday at Camp Aguinaldo, across the street from Camp Crame, but they did not move against the massive crowd that some estimated at 60,000 people.

There also were crowds near the palace.

Enrile, in a radio broadcast over Radio Veritas after Marcos appeared on television, urged people to stay in the streets in support of the rebels. "We have to fight for our country now," said Enrile. "We need to organize so we can fight Marcos and get him out."

In Washington, President Reagan met with foreign policy advisors and, in his strongest message yet to Marcos, threatened to cut off U.S. military aid if Marcos used force against his opponents.

Radio Veritas, the Roman Catholic church station, put Enrile and Ramos on the air and they claimed that "tyranny" had been defeated. An announcer at the station, which has been a staunch critic of Marcos, then said Marcos was leaving the country.

Aquino, also in a broadcast on Radio Veritas, said she had been told Marcos had left the country and would stop in Guam.

Marcos then went on Channel 4 to deny those reports. During the broadcast he was surrounded by his wife Imelda, and children and grandchildren.

"Don't believe any of these stories," said Marcos, calling the reports "propaganda lies they are peddling through the airwaves."

"They are completely without basis. They are intended to frighten our people," he said.

He then ordered the armed forces to "use all necessary force" to defend their installations.

He directed troops to use small arms to defend themselves, but said large weapons like tanks and armored personnel carriers should not be employed "as yet."

"I appeal to civilians to get out of the line of fire," Marcos said.

"We are in a state of emergency, and the government gives notice to all public utilities that they can be taken over by the government. This is not martial law, this is an emergency situation."

Before Marcos' Channel 4 statement was cut off, he denied reports he had issued an arrest warrant for Aquino, the leader of the opposition who insists she won the presidential election.

said. "At the present time, the project is in the hands of the architect who will develop more specific designs."

The facility is funded by $7 million from students, $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and $8.5 million from the KSU Foundation, a university fundraising organization.

Acker told the nine-member board that funding sources for the coliseum are secure. University officials have allowed for a large contingency in the event budget projections are overly optimistic, he said.

"With the $640,000 from Mr. Bramlage we have taken care of the budget concerns. In calculating the funding estimate we have used a conservative estimate of slippage. Considering the economy of Kansas and the state of agriculture...we are accounting for a 10 percent slippage instead of the normal 5 percent," Acker said.

Students voted in February 1979 to increase student fees to provide funds for the coliseum. In September 1982, students began paying $9.75 in coliseum fees. This semester full-time undergraduate students will pay $20.75 toward the coliseum.

Filipino opponents take oaths; rebels battle Marcos' rule

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Corazon Aquino took the oath of office Tuesday as president of a provisional government declared by military rebels battling to end the 20-year rule of Ferdinand E. Marcos, who himself was sworn in later in his guarded palace.

Marcos took the oath for a new six-year term at noon from the Supreme Court's chief justice, Ramon Aquino, but his vice presidential running mate, Arthur Tolentino, and the prime minister were not present and there was no explanation. Just before the ceremony, the small, private television station Marcos had used since rebels seized the main station went off the air and an aide said rebels had sabotaged it.

Earlier, Aquino had taken nearly the same oath and addressed thousands of cheering supporters at a country club ringed by troops who had followed the defense minister and the acting armed forces commander into rebellion on Sunday.

"I and Salvador H. Laurel are taking power...in the name of the Filipino people," she said.

Aquino, 53, said Laurel, her vice-presidential running-mate in the Feb. 7 election she says Marcos stole from her in fraud and violence, will be prime minister in her new government.

Marcos, 68, remained with his family inside the Malacanang Palace, surrounded by still-loyal troops taunted by a jeering pro-Aquino crowd. The United States and other Western governments say his election victory over Aquino was achieved by fraud and he should step down.

Ten people were reported wounded when soldiers fired at crowds of Aquino supporters outside the palace and in a clash at the main government television station, which rebels took over in the middle of a Marcos broadcast.

More than 500 people attended the palace ceremony, which was disorganized from the start. People at the rear shouted "Sit down, sit down!" at those in front blocking the view, said Associated Press reporter Miguel Suarez, who was present.

The 68-year-old president spoke slowly in taking the oath and in a short speech, in which he alluded to the rebellion: "I say to you, as I say to everybody else, we will overcome these obstacles. We will advance for the future."

The crowd raised their fists and chanted, "Marcos, Marcos."

Legislation would aid scholarship

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — College students in five-year programs should be able to receive a state scholarship for as long as they are in school, lobbyists told the House Education Committee Monday.

The testimony came in favor of a bill that would increase the number of semesters a student could receive the state money.

Currently, Kansas residents who go to a college in the state can receive up to $1,000 a semester for four full years. The bill would allow students in five-year educational programs to receive money for five full years.

The committee could debate and take action on the bill later this week, said Rep. Don Crumbaker, R-Brewster, the panel's chairman.

Kevin Elmore, senior in computer science and spokesman for the Associated Students of Kansas, testified the extra funding would help students who find themselves in an awkward position because they must go to college for five years to get their degrees.

Elmore's group is a non-partisan lobbying organization representing students in six state Board of Regents universities and Washburn University in Topeka. The group requested the bill be introduced.

"These students are understandably upset, since the decision to take a fifth year came not from them, but from the institution," Elmore said in prepared testimony.

Craig Grant, lobbyist for the Kansas-National Education Association, said the bill would encourage more students to enter five-year programs. As an example, he cited the University of Kansas School of Education.

If students could get state scholarships for five years, Grant said, more might go into education.

"This bill might keep some students from choosing other programs which are four-year rather than five-year programs," Grant said.

But a spokesman for the regents criticized the bill, saying it might deprive some students of aid. The bill contains no provision for an increase in money for state scholarships.

That means some students in four-year programs might not get any aid because the extra money is needed for students in five-year programs, said Clanthia McCurdy, regents associate director of financial aid.

The state currently cannot give aid to all those eligible for scholarships.

Reagan proposes plan for missile elimination

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan called Monday for eliminating U.S. and Soviet medium-range nuclear missiles in both Europe and Asia "by the end of this decade."

But Reagan said the United States is not ready to consider Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's proposal for elimination of all nuclear weapons within 15 years.

In a formal response to Gorbachev's most recent arms control plan, Reagan said his negotiators in Geneva on Monday put forward "a concrete plan calling for the elimination of U.S. Pershing II, ground-launched cruise missiles and Soviet SS-20 missiles, not only in Europe but in Asia as well."

An administration official, speaking on condition he not be identified, said the plan would require destruction of all the missiles at the end of three years, preventing either side from redeploying them to threaten other targets.

The proposal is similar to Reagan's "zero option" plan put forward in 1982, before the United States began deploying its modern, intermediate-range Pershing and cruise missiles in Western Europe. But since then, the United States has installed half of the 572 missiles it plans to deploy in the NATO arsenal.

After Reagan's letter was delivered in Moscow, but before the proposal was made public in Washington, a television commentator, Boris Kalyagin, said a cursory glance at the latest U.S. counter-proposals "reveals that they contain practically nothing of a constructive character but hide an attempt to create a semblance of a positive approach."

Both sides have agreed to try to Enrollment at 3 state universities increases over last spring

Enrollment Figures for Kansas' State Universities

By NANCY CASE
Collegian Reporter

Final 20th day enrollment figures for the 1986 spring semester are in with three state universities showing an increase in total enrollment.

The University of Kansas with an enrollment of 25,932, K-State with 18,185 and Pittsburg State University with 5,189, showed increases in 20th day enrollment figures over spring 1985 figures.

K-State increased 37 students over last spring's figure of 18,148 students, said Don Foster, University registrar, last week.

KU released total enrollment figures showing an increase of 495 students over last year for a total of 25,932, said Marla Gleason, KU media relations assistant. The total enrollment figure includes the medical centers at Wichita and Kansas City, Kan.

"We continue to believe that the increase in students represents a dramatic vote of confidence in our faculty and our academic programs," said KU Chancellor Gene A. Budig.

"KU is defying national enrollment trends. There are many state universities which are experiencing major enrollment drops," he said.

Pittsburg State showed an increase of 57 students to 5,189 in total student enrollment which is the third consecutive semester of enrollment increases, said Donald Wilson, PSU president.

Wilson credits the increase to the work of the faculty and staff in helping to recruit students, as well as serving current students.

"The university's positive enrollment pattern is the result of many contributions by the faculty, classified staff, as well as the individuals and offices directly related to admissions and recruitment," Wilson said.

While three of the state universities showed increases in total enrollment, The Wichita State University, Emporia State University and Fort Hays State University showed declines in enrollment figures.

Bill Wynne, WSU registrar, said Monday, WSU's enrollment figures are down from last year at this time by about 100.

ESU's enrollment fell by 55 students to 5,075, said Bill Schulte, ESU registrar.

Total spring enrollment for Fort Hays State was down 27 students

Communist Party to open meeting

MOSCOW — The 27th Communist Party Congress, the first convened by the Kremlin's new generation, will open Tuesday with a marathon speech by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev setting down the party's foreign and domestic policy.

Gorbachev's speech to 5,000 Soviet party delegates and foreign guests will take up most of the first day's business, according to Kremlin spokesman Leonid Zamyatin.

The last congress convened in 1981 under the leadership of Leonid Brezhnev and lasted nine days. It was primarily a patriotic outpouring for the party faithful.

The report from Gorbachev, 54, will "essentially be a summary of the party's work between the last congress and this one, and also of the Soviet Union's foreign and domestic policy," Zamyatin told a news conference Monday.

Observers expect Gorbachev to focus on his goal of improving the economy through greater discipline and technology. Some criticism of the Brezhnev era for not adequately dealing with economic problems or upholding party morality also is expected at the congress.

Gorbachev took power after the death of Konstantin Chernenko last March. Three old-generation Kremlin chiefs — Chernenko, Yuri Andropov and Brezhnev — have died since the 1981 congress.

The opening of the congress, but not Gorbachev's entire speech, will be nationally televised from the Kremlin's Palace of Congresses. Radio Moscow said a simultaneous translation of Gorbachev's speech will be broadcast in English and several other languages.

Premier Nikolai Ryzhkov will give a speech next week on a new five-year plan and economic goals to the end of the century, Zamyatin said.

Most of the congress meeting will be speeches by Soviet delegates and foreign guests, who began arriving over the weekend. Party gatherings will be held at other sites in the Moscow area, and in Leningrad, Kiev and Minsk.

Britons retrace steps of explorer

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania — It took two years for three Britons to retrace the steps of Henry Morton Stanley, who took eight months to trek through Africa in 1871 to find British missionary David Livingstone.

Government-owned Radio Tanzania said Sunday night that the three, George Tardios, his wife, Christine, and Andrew Graham, had reached the western Tanzania town of Ujiji on Lake Tanganyika. The Tardioses are in their early 40s, and Graham is about 25.

The trip from the eastern coast of Africa covered 813 miles.

On Nov. 10, 1871, the best-known encounter in the annals of African exploration took place in Ujiji. Stanley, a journalist assigned by the New York Herald to find the missing Livingstone, marched into the town, walked up to a frail-looking white man and said: "Dr. Livingstone, I presume?"

Stanley, with a small army of soldiers and porters and a mountain of supplies, accomplished his mission in eight months, but the Tardioses and Graham, with four donkeys, took two years.

Among their difficulties were bouts of malaria and dysentery, the theft of their journals and the killing of one of their donkeys by a passenger train.

Group honors wife of rights leader

LOS ANGELES — Coretta Scott King said she's concerned that today's children appreciate the importance of the civil rights struggle led by her husband, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.

King attended a program in her honor at the A.C. Bilbrew Public Library in Watts on Sunday. The event, part of the observance of Black History Month, was a fund-raiser for the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change in Atlanta.

"The basic freedoms were threatened and many people today don't understand them," King said of the United States in the 1950s and 1960s, when her husband and others led a movement for civil rights for blacks.

Ex-champion hurt in auto accident

LOS ANGELES — Former world heavyweight boxing champion Ken Norton was treated Monday for "moderate injuries" after he lost control of his sports car and crashed on a freeway entrance ramp, authorities said.

Norton, 42, was treated at California Medical Center after the 11:30 p.m. Sunday accident, said nursing supervisor Marlene Delp.

Norton's $50,000 Clenet Excalibur went down an embankment beside a ramp to the Santa Monica Freeway, said California Highway Patrol Officer Manuel Avila. Norton, who has gone into business as an agent for athletes, was declared world heavyweight champion by the World Boxing Council in March 1978, after defeating Jimmy Young. He lost the title in June 1978 after a loss to Larry Holmes.

His last professional fight was in 1981, when he was knocked out by Gerry Cooney in New York.

Government moves to aid elderly

WASHINGTON — Facing complaints that elderly Medicare patients are being dumped from hospital beds before they are well, the government released on Monday a "bill of rights" spelling out how the aged can fight premature hospital discharges.

The statement, including a telephone number where patients can file an emergency appeal, will be given to each of the 9 million Medicare beneficiaries hospitalized each year, the Health and Human Services Department said.

"All patients deserve to have a clear understanding of their rights when they are hospitalized," said HHS Secretary Otis R. Bowen.

"With these messages, the Medicare program will be providing important information to beneficiaries more directly, more effectively and more helpfully than has been done in the past."

Consumer groups have complained in recent months that Medicare beneficiaries sometimes were dumped from their hospital beds prematurely because their pre-set Medicare payments had run out.

The American Association of Retired Persons and the People's Medical Society called on the Reagan administration in November to inform Medicare patients of their legal rights against premature discharge.

Bowen did not mention those complaints directly. However, he did say there is no evidence of a "systematic increase" in premature discharges, and he noted that both consumer groups and medical industry groups were consulted in drafting the rights statement.

Hospital error leads to baby swap

GREENBRAE, Calif. — Linda Boggeri loves her baby, and Ilse Amzallag loves hers, but for about a day each loved the other's child because a hospital did the unthinkable: it gave two mothers the wrong babies.

"This is something that you would see on a soap opera, but not in real life," Boggeri said with a laugh Monday. "I never dreamed that they could have given us the wrong baby."

The two families might still have the wrong babies if Boggeri hadn't taken another look at the infant's ID bracelet before she put it away in a scrap book.

Boggeri said she took the baby who she assumed was hers home Friday to Rohnert Park and lavished it with "lots of love and attention."

On Saturday, she snipped off the baby's name tag, gave the baby a bath and was about to put the tag away with other mementoes when she noticed it said Amzallag, not Boggeri.

"I just thought, 'What!' They put the wrong name tag on my baby!" Boggeri said. "I had my husband call the hospital and they told us the tag was right, the baby was wrong."

"It was quite a shock," said Steve Boggeri. "But I already was a little suspicious."

"I changed the baby on Friday and the legs looked different," he said. "I said something to my wife, but I decided it was a loss of weight."

Officers support use of urine tests

TOPEKA — Law enforcement officers today urged the Senate Judiciary Committee to make it easier for officers to give urine tests to people they suspect of driving under the influence of drugs.

The committee is considering a bill which would allow law enforcement officers to test the urine of a person arrested for DUI without first taking a blood or breath test. Currently, a blood or breath test must be administered before a urine test can be made.

The committee also heard testimony on a bill which would strengthen libraries' ability to demand that delinquent borrowers return materials. Debate and action on the bills could come Wednesday.

The testing bill would save law enforcement officers time and money, said Lt. Bill Jacobs, a spokesman for the Kansas Highway Patrol. Sometimes, when a person is stopped on suspicion of DUI, officers can tell alcohol is not the problem, Jacobs said, and a breath test or blood test is not needed. However, in such cases, a urine test may be, but officers must administer the blood or breath test anyway.

The presence of some drugs cannot be detected by a blood or urine test, Jacobs said.

"We have a right to take a urine test now," Jacobs said. "But to do that, we've got to subject them to a blood or breath test."

Under the library bill, a person who does not return materials within 30 days of receiving an overdue notice could be charged with a Class A misdemeanor, punishable by up to one year in jail and a fine of up to $2,500.

If the materials were worth more than $150, a person could be charged with a Class E felony, punishable by between one and five years in prison and a fine of up to $10,000.

Duane Johnson, state librarian, said the bill would put librarians in a better position to demand the return of overdue materials.

Flood control efforts continue in West

By The Associated Press

Part of Boise, Idaho, was cut off Monday as flood control workers blocked streets with a sandbag canal to drain swollen ponds, and about 10,000 Californians were still unable to return to homes flooded by more than a week of storms.

High water and mudslides caused by weekend rain and melting snow closed some Idaho highways and some roads remained closed in northwestern Nevada, washed by the same nine-day series of storms that inundated northern California.

Oregon, Washington state and Montana also had scattered road closings caused by flooding, mudslides and washouts from rain and melting snow.

A flood-broken natural gas pipeline serving some 50,000 Nevadans was repaired, but reconnecting customers was expected to take two more days. Another pipeline ruptured in Northern California.

In Idaho, the sandbag ditch carrying water from overoaded Cottonwood Creek flood control ponds above Boise to the Boise River was only two to three sandbags deep, but it stretched along miles of streets and cut off the residential eastern tip of the city.

"Cottonwood Creek will effectively cut the city in two," said Ada County Civil Defense spokesman Grant Yee. Residents were able to get back into the main part of the city by using Interstate 84.

The sky cleared over Boise on Monday after heavy weekend rain, but the thawing level in the mountains rose to 9,000 feet, unleashing more water from melting snow, said Chris Hill, deputy meteorologist for the weather service in Boise. Pocatello, Idaho, had a record high Monday of 59, and Colorado Springs, Colo., reached a record 68.

In northern California along the Yuba River north of Sacramento, parts of western Linda remained under 4 feet of water and were closed to evacuees. But most of the Olivehurst-Linda area, inundated Thursday when a levee burst, was dry enough for residents to at least start cleaning up after the worst flooding in 30 years.

Yuba County Undersheriff Dennis

Moore said that "out of the total 24,000 to 26,000 who were evacuated all but 7,000 to 8,000 are back at their properties, but not all can live in their homes. Utility people are working feverishly to restore water, sewage, power, telephone and cable TV."

Three bodies had been found as water receded around the area. "It certainly wouldn't surprise us to find more victims," Moore said.

Those deaths brought the total to 20 across the West from the series of storms that started Feb. 11, including victims of flooding, mudslides, high surf, avalanches and high wind.

In San Joaquin County, 1,300 Thornton residents were still homeless after a levee break on the Mokelumne River, said Nancy Hardaker, a spokeswoman for the state Office of Emergency Services.

Storm-caused damage in northern California, where about 50,000 people were forced to evacuate at various times, was estimated at $319 million, Hardaker said. At least 10,872 homes were damaged and 1,463 were destroyed. At least 742 businesses were damaged and 185 were destroyed, she said.

Interstate 5 remained closed by water between Sacramento and Stockton, and state transportation spokesman Dan Cherry said it may take months to repair the highway through the Feather River Canyon in the Sierra Nevada because chunks of pavement up to 200 feet long had been washed away at 20 places.

A 12-inch pipeline ruptured Sunday under the Sacramento River near Anderson, Calif., cutting natural gas service to 19,050 Shasta County customers around Redding, and it will take a week or more to restore service, Pacific Gas & Electric spokesman Lyle LaFaver said Monday.

In northwestern Nevada, Southwest Gas Corp. repair crews connected a new natural gas pipeline Sunday, but officials said they'd need another two days to finish restoring service and lighting pilot lights for an estimated 50,000 customers over 2,800 square miles. The pipeline was ruptured last week by the surging Truckee River.

Fiber optics improve information transfer

By The Collegian Staff

A revolution is brewing in the telecommunications industry and fiber optic technology developed in the next decade will touch every facet of American life, the executive vice president of United Telecommunications said Monday.

John C. Hancock, the first speaker in a new series of lectures dealing with engineering technology and the changing world, said the development of fiber optics will end reliance on inefficient technology.

"We are on the verge of a revolution in telecommunications that will have the same impact on us as the solid state chip had," Hancock said. "In 10 years fiber optics — economically — will alter the way we think about telecommunications."

Fiber optics involve the use of a flexible bundle of plastic fibers that transmit light signals from lasers, permitting rapid transfer of information. Fiber optic systems are superior to existing cable systems, he said.

Hancock, who was dean of the College of Engineering at Purdue University for 12 years before moving to United in 1984, said the Kansas City-based company is investing large sums of money to develop a fiber optic network.

"A whole host of electronic devices must come into play. The opportunity for research is amazing," he said, "routing, storage problems and data management are ripe for expansion."

The series, which will be referred to as the "Tau Beta Pi Distinguished Lecture Series," is a project of the College of Engineering Executive Committee and Tau Beta Pi, a student engineering honorary society.

Court's decision could affect state economy, gas industry

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The U.S. Supreme Court has thrown out a Kansas Corporation Commission order from February 1983 which tried to pressure interstate pipeline companies into producing more natural gas from wells in the massive Hugoton field.

Brian Moline, chief legal counsel for the state utility regulators, confirmed Monday the high court had vacated the order and sent it back for further action.

"I can confirm that we have heard the U.S. Supreme Court has vacated our order and remanded it back — that is correct," Moline said. "We have not actually seen a written order but we understand they decided in conference Friday. I don't know what we'll do, yet."

It's a decision which could have serious ramifications for Kansas gas producers and customers because it means pipeline companies can let the cheap Hugoton gas sit while they continue to buy expensive Wyoming gas under take-or-pay contracts.

The decision could mean less Kansas gas will be produced, hurting the state economy and severance tax revenues. And individual well owners could suffer because gas may not be produced on an even basis.

The case stems from a state law designed to prevent the inequitable or unfair taking of natural gas in the Hugoton field, which covers much of southwest Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas. About two thirds of the field is located in Kansas and that portion of the field contains more than 4,000 wells.

Kansas, like other states which produce natural gas and oil, has such a law because gas migrates underground from underproduced areas of higher pressure to areas where wells are actively producing gas and lowering the pressure.

Migration makes it theoretically possible to extract from a single well all the recoverable natural gas in a field, exhausting the gas under wells not being produced.

In 1944, the state enacted a law to protect underproduced wells from having their gas sucked out from under them by other, more active wells. To implement the law, the corporation commission sets gas production ceilings that assign to each producer the maximum amount of gas that may be produced from each well per month.

Stephan sues activities association

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Attorney General Robert T. Stephan Monday filed suit alleging the Kansas State High School Activities Association's executive board violated the state Open Meetings Act 25 times during a Feb. 12 hearing and meeting.

The attorney general asked Shawnee County District Court to void sanctions the board imposed on Wichita's Kapaun-Mt Carmel High School as a result of deliberations made during the meetings which allegedly violated state law.

The board stripped the high school of championships and awards won in recent years and banned it from participating in post-season competition sanctioned by the KSHSAA for one year after determining that three student-athletes at the school illegally had their tuition paid by someone other than their parents.

Named as defendants in the attorney general's suit were the association and its nine members:

Don L. Wells, Cheney; Mel Coates, Wellington; Samuel J. Nicoletti, Arma; John Gasper, Wichita; Dean Gilstrap, Arkansas City; Don Hague, Peabody; Gerry Harris, Marion; Earl Loyd, Esbon, and Marvin Stark, Colby.

Wells is the board president, Coates is vice president, and Nicoletti is secretary-treasurer.

Stephan asked the court to assess civil penalties for each of the 25 counts against each of the defendants, to void any binding actions taken by the board on Feb. 12 and to permanently enjoin the association and its board from further violations of the Open Meetings Act.

Randell Forbes, the association's attorney, said he had not seen the Stephan petition, but expressed surprise it was filed. He said he had been in contact with the attorney general's office Monday and explained what went on at the Feb. 12 meeting.

"I don't know why they still feel the law was violated," said Forbes.

"I don't know what the violation is. I don't know if this simply is a continuation of last week's actions, before he (Stephan) knew what the facts were."

Forbes said he has investigated what went on Feb. 12 and is convinced no "substantive or knowing" violations occurred.

"We have a disagreement on the application of the law," said Forbes. "I really don't think there were any substantive violations of the Open Meetings Act. I believe they (the attorney general's office) had some misunderstandings of the facts and were misinformed."

"Binding decisions were not made in closed meetings. It is my very strong feeling that there were no violations of the OMA."

Morality central to nuclear debate

"The Soviet Union and the United States are — just the same. Down with our military. Down (the ultimate implication) with America."

This is William F. Buckley's recent portrayal of the attitude of the Union of Concerned Scientists.

One member of the group, physics professor George Reiter from the University of Houston, is on campus to deliver the first Lou Douglas Lecture this year at 7:30 p.m. today in Forum Hall. He will also participate in an activity new to K-State, a teach-in.

Teach-ins began on Nov. 11, 1981 — Veterans' or Armistice Day when over 150 campuses in 41 states held teach-ins organized in part by the Union of Concerned Scientists. The purpose of the sessions is "...to bring together the faculty and students of a campus and its community for an educational exposition concerning the threat of nuclear war."

The teach-in today, held in the Union Little Theatre from 3 to 5 p.m. has the same goal. At K-State, though, this goal may be hard to reach. All too often, K-State students refuse to take advantage of educational opportunities, except those which reinforce preconceived opinions. Exactly why K-State students so rarely attend forums which may challenge their views is puzzling.

Perhaps students are afraid that a two-hour barrage of challenging information will change their views. Probably the majority of students simply don't care to be educated about the nuclear issue. For those students, the teach-in will be especially valuable. Ed

CATHERINE SAYLER
Collegian Columnist

Schiappa, professor of speech, will talk specifically about the "Rhetoric of NukeSpeak" in an attempt to remove the platitudes from what is otherwise a serious issue.

Al Compaan and Talat Rahman, professors of physics, who circulated among faculty last semester a petition opposing the Strategic Defense Initiative program, will join the teach-in with Schiappa and Jacob Kipp, adjunct professor of history and member of the Soviet Army Studies Office at Fort Leavenworth. All in all, the teach-in is an educational opportunity that should not be missed.

The most frightening aspect of the nuclear issue is the degree to which technology and specialization has allowed us sever what we do from the effects of our actions. A scientist from the University of California's Lawrence Livermore Laboratory responded flippantly to a question about the ethical aspects of working in a weapons laboratory by replying, "My job is to get the thing up in the air; everything else is politics." Germans working in concentration camps echoed a similar sentiment during the Nazi regime.

Every year, hundreds of K-State students graduate and accept jobs which require them to aid in the production of nuclear, chemical and occasionally even genetic weapons. Not all students will refuse to participate in weapons development. Hopefully, though, K-State will prepare those students to respond to ethical questions with more thoughtfulness and concern than the California scientist demonstrated.

Even arch-conservative Buckley applies concern to the issues he considers. He contends that it was not evil to kill 100,000 Japanese with a nuclear weapon in exchange for 1 million Americans who would have lost their lives in a protracted amphibious operation against the islands of Japan. That the 100,000 Japanese killed were innocent citizens, often children, and the one million Americans who would have been killed were aggressors who had each decided to risk death, is a point of contention. At least, though, Buckley approaches issues from an ethical framework.

The scientist who refuses to consider ethics at all is a tragic failure of our educational system. K-State, with forums such as the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, convocations and today a teach-in, is trying to prevent such failures.

As Carl Sagan commented in the 1981 Cornell University teach-in: "If you refuse to think about these issues because they are too difficult and too agonizing, then you are making a contribution toward future holocaust."

U.S. should respect Philippine autonomy

As the political situation in the Philippines continues to deteriorate, Filipinos have taken to the streets to protest the fraudulent Feb. 7 election victory of President Ferdinand Marcos over challenger Corason Aquino.

The revolt is led by former Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and Lt. Gen. Fidel Ramos, deputy chief of the armed forces. The two military leaders' recent decision to break from Marcos and demand his resignation has certainly shaken the government.

Marcos has declared a state of emergency in an attempt to bring protestors under control. However, early Monday the rebels declared Aquino the new Philippine leader and hundreds of thousands of Filipinos flooded the streets in a show of solidarity.

Although the Reagan administration has asked Marcos to step down, rather than use violence to prolong his 20-year rule, Marcos has asked loyal civilians to come to the presidential palace with guns to defend him. "By all means, come over and we'll have a grand fire," he said.

And he kept his promise. Several civilians were met with gunfire from Marcos' troops and others were wounded while trying to escape the violence.

The Philippine Islands may eventually become involved in a bloody civil war. For now, however, the Reagan administration should push for a peaceful resolution to the crisis. The United States must work for the development of a democratic government in the Philippines — regardless of who is president of the republic.

Perhaps the solution will involve Aquino, but she is not an essential ingredient for restoring calm. A successful transfer of power must directly involve the Filipinos. No government has a chance of succeeding in such a turbulent political climate without popular support.

Regents schools need funds for salary hike

Morris Kleiner, a University of Kansas business professor and spokesman for the Kansas State Conference of the American Association of University Professors, said Monday he believes faculty employed at state Board of Regents institutions are underpaid.

In testimony during a Senate Ways and Means Committee hearing, Kleiner said he has statistics that show a professor at a regents institution on average makes $1,700 less than professors at peer institutions.

This type of salary structure should not be allowed to exist in Kansas. The state is currently hampered by declining revenues, but even during lean years, the state has a responsibility to maintain, and if possible upgrade, educational programs.

The regents system, which includes the six state universities and Kansas Technical Institute, is our most important resource. It is essential to the economic development of Kansas that money be set aside from the state treasury to support a faculty salary increase. Perhaps a 7 percent increase is unobtainable, but we must narrow the existing salary gap.

An increase is also needed to attract and retain quality faculty members. Without sufficient compensation a significant portion of the faculty, and many individuals searching for new jobs, will seek greener pastures elsewhere.

The regents have asked the Kansas Legislature for a 7 percent increase in salaries of faculty and other employees, but Gov. John Carlin's "base" budget contains no provision for such an increase. However, his "investment" budget calls for a salary boost of 7 percent.

As part of the investment budget, Carlin wants the state to pay the cost of faculty contributions to their retirement fund. Faculty now pay 5 percent of their salaries into the fund, and the change would cost the state $9.1 million. This is a nice idea, and certainly beneficial, but it will be inadequate in the long run.

The Senate committee should consider passage of a salary increase. The clock is ticking and time is running out for the regents system.

Violence in athletics reflects Orwell's view

George Orwell, who had a body that could be described as nothing but frail, understood that sport often resembles life during wartime.

"Serious sport has nothing to do with fair play. It is bound up with hatred, jealousy...and sadistic pleasure in witnessing violence: in other words it is war minus the shooting," he wrote in 1945.

Orwell's words hold true today. Members of the K-State and University of Kansas women's basketball teams found it impossible on Saturday to complete a game without breaking the rules of fair play. During the final 3 minutes of the contest two shoving matches took place.

This type of behavior is unnecessary at any level of athletics and is unbecoming of players representing this University. It is clear violence neither improves one's performance or fans' impression of the team. K-State athletes should let others fight the wars.

Guests in America

Editor,

Re: Victor Oki Atughonu's letter, "Insulting story," in the Feb. 21 Collegian:

The fact that a male was in the female locker room in the first place is a malicious act, whether it was a Nigerian student or not. You are guests in our country and are expected to adhere to our norms of behavior.

I am sure that the Collegian staff, as well as the KSU Police Department had no intentions of offending Nigerian students. They were merely publishing the facts of the incident.

So before you jump to conclusions, maybe you should question the morals of the situation in the first place.

Shredding furniture

Editor,

Re: The story, "Jardine residents want cats, dogs," in the Feb. 20 Collegian:

I am sure there are some people in Jardine Terrace who would be able to have dogs and cats in their apartment and keep the apartment and furniture in real good shape, but 95 percent of residents would not.

Being the maintenance man in charge of the furniture, I see all the time what a cat (especially) can do to the furniture. Cats often scratch the material on furniture. Every time a person has a dog or cat we have to reupholster all the furniture, and nine times out of 10 they leave before we can charge them.

In one case, the fleas were so bad you could see them flying around. No, I think for the safety of children and the cost of redoing the entire apartment, we should leave it just as it is. Unless they would require all pet owners to put up a $500 damage deposit. Then we would see how many want dogs and cats.

Maintaining 4-H

Editor,

Thousands of Americans are living fuller and more successful lives because of their participation in the 4-H youth program of the Cooperative Extension Service.

The thought that this outstanding educational program for young people and volunteer adults being endangered, or perhaps even eliminated because of the passage of the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law is frightening.

It is organizations such as 4-H, as well as other extension educational programs, that enable people to grow and develop to their greatest potential as citizens of this country. Countless legislators, corporate executives and other national leaders, as well as men and women leading families throughout his country, are living better lives because of the growth and development they experienced through 4-H.

Those of us who have been touched by this outstanding educational program must write our senators and representatives as well as President Reagan and tell them how important this program is to us.

It is the obligation of those of us who have been positively influenced by these programs to keep them alive and well.

Pet laws just fine

Editor,

Re: The story, "Jardine residents want cats, dogs," in the Feb. 20 Collegian:

As a resident of Jardine Terrace Apartments for the past year and a half, I find the proposal for a relaxing of current pet laws — which would allow dogs and cats in Jardine under certain guidelines — is not in the best interest of either the apartment units themselves, or the general welfare of residents.

I find it hard to believe that a majority of Jardine residents would actually like to see the policy expanded to include other animals, as Sue Nelson, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine and Jardine resident, said she believes. Just 111 signatures, out of more than 500 apartments, hardly represents a majority.

May I remind Nelson and Tracy Schemper, freshman in business administration, that cats and dogs living in an enclosed area can be quite destructive. Current conditions in some sections of Jardine are probably in bad enough shape as is, and the last thing that they need is other factors helping to deteriorate the buildings.

Deterioration is not due to lack of care by housing officials. Renovation of apartments is an ongoing process.

As residents of Jardine, both Nelson and Schemper are probably aware that under current conditions noise levels often are unbearable. The addition of larger animals on Jardine's paper-thin floors would not help the situation.

And what about the children who often play outside of Jardine's buildings? Who is willing to guarantee the safety of these children?

Common sense is a much stronger factor than mere sentimentality in this case. Although it might be nice to have a cat or dog to take care of, I feel that now is not the time, and Jardine is definitely not the place.

Marital contracts

Editor,

There are people who say there is no difference between pre-marital sex and extramarital affairs. Adultery is adultery. I disagree.

Marriage, in its most simplistic form, is a legal and binding contract between two people who agree to be mates for life. Until that contract is nullified by a court of law, no excuse can or should be made for any reason by a person who has an extra-marital affair.

If a person cannot accept and learn to live with and by the rules of his or her agreement to fidelity, the person should not have been married.

Pre-marital sex has no contract. Unless there is an expressly stated verbal agreement of fidelity between two unmarried people involved in a sexual relationship, then one cannot expect, nor should one assume, fidelity from their partner.

The difference is in the contract. As long as there are no public laws against pre-marital sex and there is no existing marital contract on behalf of one of the partners, then pre-marital sex cannot be stopped.

If a person is unmarried then he or she is going to have to rely upon religious morals and social conscience to determine the extent of sexual activity.

Agency gives grant to grain organization

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State Food and Feed Grain Institute received $3.2 million from the U.S. Agency for International Development to assist developing countries in improving their handling of grain after harvest.

The agreement for the project was signed last October and will run from Feb. 15, 1986, until February 1991, said Charles Deyoe, head of the Department of Grain Science and Industry and director of the institute.

"The funding was granted to continue a five-year agreement which provides developing countries with technical assistance in grain storage, handling and marketing after harvest," Deyoe said.

The money will be used primarily for salaries for the faculty and staff of the institute, funds for post-harvest research projects and training programs for developing nations held on campus, he said.

Deyoe said any country which has an AID Mission can request and be involved in the technical assistance, but generally the efforts are in Southeast Asia, Africa and Latin America.

In addition to the $3.2 million, the institute was also granted a basic ordering agreement which allows AID Missions to request and pay for institute services not specifically covered under the new cooperative agreement.

"The basic ordering agreement is over a five-year contract," Deyoe said. "We can spend up to a total of $2.4 million over a five-year period."

Roe Borsdorf, institute agricultural economist, said the agreement pays travel and staff costs for the institute faculty who provide assistance and training to the developing countries.

Deyoe said a good share of those faculty bring the expertise they have developed through the program to K-State.

"This (program) supported grad students who have done research on problems in grain storage that have direct application on grain-storage problems here in Kansas," he said.

Poll cites reasons for decline of farmers

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A recent survey of 1,365 farmers by the Kansas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service found that one out of 18 of the farmers surveyed plan to leave farming this year.

The survey showed that 5.6 percent of the farmers say they plan to leave farming for such reasons as retirement, poor health and bad financial conditions. It did not break down the reasons by percentages.

Of those who said they plan to quit, 20 percent operate small farms of one to nine acres.

The largest number of farmers planning to leave farming are in the eastern third of Kansas, where 7.8 percent said they would leave the business. In the western third of the state, 3.1 percent of the farmers said they plan to go out of business, and 4 percent of those surveyed in central Kansas said they plan to leave farming.

Among other findings in the survey:

— The Federal Land Bank is the major lender to the state's farmers with 47 percent of the total debt.

— Slightly more than 51 percent of all farms had real estate loans and 57.4 percent had non-real estate loans.

— Statewide, 57 percent of the total income per farm came from off-farm sources; off-farm sources contributed 26.5 percent of the total in western Kansas and 72.4 percent in eastern Kansas.

— The average amount of interest paid on farm loans amounted to $17,371 a year in western Kansas and $6,041 in eastern Kansas.

— One of every eight Kansas farmers carried debt-to-asset ratios in excess of 70 percent — a level that is generally considered dangerously high; statewide, 69.2 percent of the farmers surveyed reported debt-to-asset ratios of less than 40 percent; 18.3 percent reported ratios of between 40 percent and 69 percent.

Scrambling fails to affect satellite dish owners

By PAT HUND
Collegian Reporter

The scrambling of some premium channels has had little effect on satellite dish owners and should not scare away prospective satellite dish buyers, said Roger Burd, assistant manager of Ghre's of Manhattan, a company which sells satellite dishes.

Burd said only two premium channels, HBO and Cinemax, have scrambled their programming. Local satellite dish owners still have access to more than 110 channels without needing to buy a de-scrambler.

Burd said a de-scrambler costs $395 and the de-scrambling company will charge an additional monthly fee — much like the fee cable companies charge.

The major reason HBO and Cinemax decided to scramble was due to people in apartment complexes and hotels having access to premium channels.

"Premium programmers eventually had to scramble because large groups of people could enjoy satellite programming from one dish and not be charged accordingly," he said.

Premium channels like HBO do not use advertising but most channels do, Burd said.

"Because most programmed channels are advertiser-supported, they do not have the need to scramble," he said. "They will make money regardless."

Burd said many prospective satellite dish buyers were apprehensive when they heard about scrambling channels because they thought they would have to pay for a de-scrambler and a monthly fee to enjoy the same variety of channels.

"The reason people buy a dish is for the variety," he said. "They will still have a lot of variety without having to buy a de-scrambler."

"First-time satellite dish buyers are scared because they don't know the real story," said John Gendre, satellite dish owner in Riley.

Gendre said he does not plan to buy a de-scrambler because he can see the same movies HBO shows on an advertiser-supported channel.

Burd said eight to 10 more channels might decide to scramble their programming but the variety of shows will continue to increase because 20 more channels will be offered to area dish owners in the next 12 months.

Spokesman requests faculty salary boost

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A spokesman for a professors' group Monday urged the Senate budget committee to approve a 7 percent increase in faculty salaries for state Board of Regents institutions.

More money is needed to keep and retain faculty members at the seven institutions, said Morris Kleiner, a University of Kansas business professor. Kleiner also is a spokesman for the Kansas State Conference of the American Association of University Professors.

The Board of Regents has asked the Kansas Legislature for a 7 percent increase in salaries of faculty and other employees, but Gov. John Carlin's base budget contains no increase.

Instead, as part of his so-called investment budget, Carlin wants the state to pick up the cost of faculty members' contributions to their retirement fund.

Italian clothing outlet to open in city

By STEPHANIE HAUGHTON
Collegian Reporter

Currently there are five Benetton stores in the Kansas City area, one each in the Oak Park and Bannister malls, two on the Country Club Plaza and the fifth store in nearby Lawrence.

But due to changes in marketing plans, the next Benetton clothing store scheduled to open will be at 1222 Moro St. in Aggieville, with a tentative opening for the first week of March.

Doug Compton and Deric Stewart, owners of the nation's largest Benetton store in Lawrence, and the proposed Manhattan facility, said they are entering the Manhattan market now because "the timing was right." "Manhattan needs a store like this because people shouldn't have to go to Kansas City to do their shopping," Compton said.

"Manhattan is a perfect site for a store because of its location. Manhattan sits by itself. The store owners don't lose money to stores outside of Manhattan," he said.

Originally, the company only produced knitwear for the 15- to 25-year-old age group.

"We are now trying to reach consumers from junior-high students to senior citizens," Compton said.

Compton describes the clothing as unisex with a strong emphasis on fun wear in a loose type of clothing.

Compton also owns a private club and a tavern in Lawrence.

Stewart is credited with the idea of opening a Benetton retail outlet. He first became aware of the company while on a vacation in Europe, and said the idea had been in the back of his mind since graduating from the University of Kansas in 1984.

Benetton was founded in the mid-1960s by Luciano Benetton, chairman of the company, his two brothers, Gilberto and Carlo, and his sister, Giuliana, who is responsible for the designs.

The company's first retail outlet opened in Belluno, Italy, in 1968. Currently the company's largest market is Italy, accounting for about 45 percent of sales. Its second largest market is West Germany at about 14 percent.

The U.S. market currently represents about 9 percent of its worldwide revenues.

At the end of 1984, the company had 2,644 retail outlets in 53 countries.

Current goals for Benetton's call for 400 retail stores in the United States by the end of this year and 1,000 by 1988.

Compton said their clothing may be more expensive because all the garments are produced in Italy, requiring payment of a 30 percent duty on all items.

Computer class size produces crowded situation

By DAN ALLEN
Collegian Reporter

Many of the 500 students in the Introduction to Personal Computer class are finding that patience and perseverance are just as important as studying computing skills.

Brian Ritenour, junior in marketing, said the class has been plagued by crowded terminals, a lack of printers and an inadequate number of copies of the WORDSTAR program. A WORDSTAR assignment is required for the class.

John Morrell, graduate in computer science and graduate teaching assistant for the class, said 500 students are almost twice the number of students who took the class last semester. This leads to some crowding on computer terminals.

"It wouldn't be as crowded if they staggered their work out, but everyone waits until the last two or three days before an assignment is due to get it done," he said.

Morrell said the crowded terminals have encouraged students to use their own personal computer or a friend's. He said he estimated only 15 to 20 students used an alternative last semester, but now 70 to 80 students are doing it.

Ritenour said the crowded terminals especially hurt the student who has a job. Teachers' aides are available to help students until 10 p.m., he said.

"I'll go in during the day and the terminals are all full. If I go in there after work and run into problems, there is no one there to help me," he said.

Morrell said there are two printers in the basement of Fairchild Hall in room 5. The adjacent room, room 4, has terminals but no printers. If more printers were made available, he said, things would be easier.

Mike Miller, associate director of technical services in computing activities, said his department is primarily responsible for the purchasing of new printers and added the University administration has allocated money to buy more printers.

Miller said they are currently in the process of moving one printer to room 4.

"We'll try to get by with one printer in each room and if that doesn't work, we'll go with two, (in each room)," Miller said.

Morrell said there are 25 computer terminals available to students on campus. Recently, students ran into problems because there were only 16 authorized copies of WORDSTAR to use, he said.

Morrell said the class is not hard if the student shows up and takes decent notes, but there have been some changes made in the structure of the class.

Morrell said last semester it was not uncommon to have students trade discs or to have one person do 15 assignments for other people. To avoid this, he said, each student will actually come in and be tested on the computer.

"Students could still trade discs, but at least now they are responsible for knowing how to do things on the computer," he said.

Area phone company proposes rate increase

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — United Telephone Co. of Kansas on Monday filed a $4.3 million rate increase request with the Kansas Corporation Commission saying the 9 percent jump in revenue was needed to meet the rising cost of providing service.

The company, which has headquarters in Junction City, serves 65,000 customers in about 110 Kansas towns.

It estimated the average cost of basic monthly service for residential customers would increase from the current $6.70 to $10.50 if the three-member commission approves the request in full.

For business customers, average monthly rates would jump from the current $10.68 to $15.79 under the proposed new rates.

Technical hearings have been scheduled for June 18-20 and a public hearing date has not been set, according to Gale Clevenger, spokeswoman for the commission.

"We have been able to hold the line on rates because of cost-saving measures and long-distance subsidies," I.B. Watson, United vice president for administration, said in a news release from the company's Overland Park offices.

Wildcats' lone signee Bonser 'just needs to play'

By PATTI HANNAN
Collegian Reporter

Howard Bonser, Manhattan High School's 6-foot-11 center and K-State's only signed recruit, is looking forward to playing basketball for the Wildcats next year even though Jack Hartman won't be his coach.

"Coach Hartman was one of the main reasons I signed," Bonser said. "I was really looking forward to having him coach me."

Although Bonser was signed by Hartman, his scholarship is still valid, Assistant Athletic Director Lee Moon said.

"I know that whatever coach would come in would honor that commitment," Moon said. "That can't be taken away."

Bonser said he is confident K-State will find a good replacement for Hartman.

"I know he's one of the top coaches around, but with K-State's winning tradition, I think they will get a good coach," Bonser said. "It's a good basketball school."

Bonser signed with the Wildcats in November, during the early national letter of intent signing period, Manhattan basketball Coach Mike Leahy said.

Leahy found Bonser as a freshman on the swim team when Bonser grew from 6-foot to 6-foot-4 and asked him about playing basketball. Bonser was receptive to coming out for the basketball team despite the fact he had never played before.

By the time Bonser was a sophomore he had sprouted to 6-foot-7.

Leahy said he thinks Bonser will become a very good ball player. The thing hampering him at this point is Bonser didn't grow up playing basketball like most boys.

"He just needs to play more. He still has trouble getting physical, which he'll need to learn to play major college ball," Leahy said.

Leahy said Bonser started this season at 220 pounds, but with a major-college weight program Bonser should weigh around 240.

"He should be a good sized young man when he starts to mature and fill-out," Leahy said.

Even though Bonser could have waited until the late signing period, which takes place after the season ends, he said he wanted to take the possible pressure off himself from recruiters.

"I had a good idea where I wanted to go," Bonser said. "It was a lot easier to have it all over with, to not have the phone ring off the hook at night."

Bonser moved to Manhattan from Pennsylvania in April of 1981 when his father was hired as a dentist at Fort Riley.

"I like it here," Bonser said. "I like the people and it's friendly."

Bonser said he wants to live on campus when he starts school next fall and expects college life to be more demanding than high school.

"I expect things to be more rigid," Bonser said. "I will have to budget my time better."

Bonser, who has played basketball for only three years, said Leahy has been a big influence on his improvement.

"Coach Leahy has taught me all I know," Bonser said. "He taught me how to play and he's done a great job."

The Manhattan Indians are 12-5 on the season with two games remaining, including a home game tonight against Lawrence. The Indians' well-balanced attack includes an 11.2 point per game scoring average and 8 rebounds a game from Bonser.

Bonser said he believes the team is beginning to come together as post-season play nears.

"We're hitting our stride. We've got great team effort. We're playing for the team, not ourselves. That's what makes it great," Bonser said.

Bonser has been disappointed with his senior season, but it doesn't bother him since the team is playing well. Bonser has been forced to miss three games this season with shin problems and the flu.

"I haven't gotten on track this year," Bonser said. "Luckily there are other guys on the team to pick up the slack."

Despite his disappointment with his health, Bonser believes he is developing as a basketball player this season.

"Last year I shot about 65 percent (from the free throw line). Now I'm up to about 70 percent," he said. His field goal average has also showed improvement, up from 55 percent to about 65 percent.

Bonser said he has noticed this year other teams have begun using special defenses against him to combat his height.

It was easier to play last year because other teams didn't know him, Bonser said.

"Whenever the ball comes in to me, about three players swarm on me like bees," he said.

"They do a lot of double-teaming on me," he said. "I haven't taken as many shots."

Bonser said that other players on the team have been able to shoot more. He compared the team's playing to a well-oiled machine.

"We have a great team spirit,"

Bonser said. "We try to be one big basketball player."

"Howard has come so far it's amazing," Leahy said. "He's got great natural instincts, a soft touch on the ball, he is very agile and runs the court well. Howard just needs to play."

Manhattan High School center Howard Bonser, right, battles Topeka West's Wolf Blaser for rebound position during a recent game. The 6-foot-11 Bonser is currently the only recruit to sign with the Wildcats.

Hey Sooners, you guys are not that hot

Tim Fitzgerald
Assistant
Sports Editor

I've come to the conclusion that the Oklahoma Sooners ain't so hot.

I don't think I'm the only one to have come to this conclusion, either. The Sooners are turning out to be a bust — a team that was catapulted into the national rankings on the wings of a friendly early season schedule, an alumnus named Wayman Tisdale and some false confidence.

Let's take a look at who Oklahoma played going into the Big Eight conference schedule.

Well, they played Texas at home and they played Illinois in Hawaii. Let's see, who else did the "Boomer" Sooners play?

Ah let's see... California-Santa Barbara, New Orleans, Denver, Chicago State — what the heck is this, a basketball schedule or a list of possible vacation sights?

Good golly, why didn't Oklahoma schedule NAIA powerhouse Grand Canyon College while they were at it. If they're going to see the sights, they might as well see something that is slightly bigger than Oklahoma center David Johnson's rear end.

The Sooners entered the conference schedule with a record of 15-0 and a top-six national ranking. Ah, yes they would have been 16-0, but Les Depew, athletic director at Manhattan High School, held out for a Manhattan date next season to go with playing the Sooners in Norman, Okla., this year.

I will admit the Sooners are a talented bunch. With a bonafide center who could run-and-gun with the rest of the gang — preferably a guy over 6-foot-9 and with a rear end measuring under 50-inches — the Sooners just might be final four material.

But they don't have a bonafide center and now that they've entered conference play, the confidence they built by pounding on various basketball wimps is disappearing.

The Sooners' first loss came in Lawrence against the University of Kansas — the team's confidence was still busting out of their uniforms and they gave the Jayhawks a good game.

Then the Sooners went to Ames, Iowa, and the Cyclones pounded on them.

Then the Sooners went to Columbia, Mo., and Missouri was anything but cordial — beating the hot-shot Sooners with both of the Tigers' big men in dire foul trouble.

Last Wednesday night the Sooners found themselves in Lincoln, Neb., to play the Dave Hoppness-Huskies, and the miniature Cornhuskers beat the Sooners.

Last Saturday the Sooners made the mistake of playing No. 1 ranked Duke — that's OK, Billy Tubbs, Duke was a better team and you had every right to lose.

Monday night the Sooners fell victim to second-ranked Kansas in Norman. Not a pleasant month for Tubbs — ah Billy, just take a Valium, things will be better in the morning.

The Sooners' homecourt winning streak has now crashed down — 48 was enough and KU was too much. Think of it this way — this losing stuff can't go on for ever.

What's this — the mighty Sooners are 8-5 in conference play? But the national pollsters think the Big Eight isn't any good — how could that be? The enjoyable thing about it is the cocky Sooners might have another loss scheduled before they enter the Big Eight Tournament.

Oklahoma hosts North Carolina State in Norman. Not only has your homecourt winning streak come to an end, but N.C. State might just rub your noses in it.

I am actually hoping that the Sooners beat the Wolfpack. That would be nothing but great for the entire conference since Oklahoma has been having problems against Big Eight teams.

I just don't like Oklahoma — they're the "Oakland" Raiders of college basketball.

I refuse to be civil towards a team who takes their pre-game shooting practice through K-State's alma mater and then runs off the court in the midst of the national anthem — this unpatriotic behavior and Oklahoma's school colors make me wonder if there aren't communists running the Sooner athletic department.

Yes indeed, Oklahoma you're not so hot — and you're rude on top of it.

KU ends Oklahoma's winning streak at 48

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Danny Manning found sitting on the bench to be a rewarding experience Monday night, and the Kansas Jayhawks got the biggest payoff.

Manning, who watched much of the first half against No. 10 Oklahoma due to foul trouble, scored 20 of his 25 points after intermission and carried the third-ranked Jayhawks to an 87-80 Big Eight Conference victory.

"I wanted to make something happen," the 6-foot-11 sophomore said. "Being on the bench in the first half, the coaches talked to me and it worked to my benefit."

With the victory, Kansas ended a 48-game homecourt winning streak by the Sooners. The last time Oklahoma lost at home was 1983, against Kansas.

"This was as good a road win as I've ever been involved in," said Kansas Coach Larry Brown. "I never felt comfortable."

"It was nice we were able to hold a lead with Danny on the bench in the first half. He came back fresh in the second half."

Oklahoma overcame a seven-point halftime deficit to tie the score at 53-53, with 12:46 remaining before Manning got hot. He scored 10 of Kansas' next 12 points as the Jayhawks opened a 65-61 lead with 7:47 remaining.

"They have matchup problems with Greg (Dreiling, 7-0 center) and Danny," Brown said. "... We beat a great team tonight."

Dreiling grabbed a career-high 15 rebounds to go with his 16 points.

"We could never seem to get over the hump tonight," said Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs. "We couldn't take command of the game — I can't remember the last time we had control of a game."

The loss was the third in a row for Oklahoma, which dropped to 23-6 overall, 8-5 in the conference. Kansas improved to 27-3 and 12-1.

Kansas opened its widest lead, 69-61, when Dreiling slammed a follow shot at the 6:31 mark.

Darryl Kennedy, who finished with 22 points, scored nine during a 13-8 Oklahoma run that brought the Sooners within three, 77-74, with 1:50 remaining. But the Sooners got no closer as Kansas made eight of nine free throws in the final 1:29.

Oklahoma's inability to shoot from the field and the foul line helped give Kansas a 39-32 halftime lead. The Sooners missed seven shots in a row at one stage as Kansas went from a 15-14 deficit to a 20-14 lead with nine minutes remaining.

For the game, Kansas made 23 of 27 free throws while Oklahoma made eight of 17.

down from ten and you never miss."

The Cornhusker junior won in a split vote over Kansas senior Ron Kellogg, who scored 50 points in two games, including 30 in the 84-69 victory over Kansas State which clinched Kansas' first Big Eight championship in eight years.

Also nominated were David Johnson of Oklahoma, Derrick Chievous of Missouri, Randy Downs of Colorado, Andre Ivy of Oklahoma State, Jeff Grayer of Iowa State and Joe Wright of Kansas State.

Moon won't discuss 'Sarge'; statement will be made later

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

Assistant Athletic Director Lee Moon told the Collegian Monday the athletic department was not ready to make a statement about the questioned eligibility of star basketball player Norris Coleman.

Reports in the Kansas City Star and Times Feb. 22 and 23 said Coleman was ineligible under National Collegiate Athletic Association rules to play in the first half of the 1985-86 season.

The alleged ineligibility was due to Coleman's reported competition on U.S. Army teams in the United States and West Germany in parts of four calendar years after his 20th birthday.

Under a since rescinded rule, each year a player competes for an army team past the age of 20, he loses a year of college eligibility in NCAA Division I.

K-State Coach Jack Hartman told the Times he did not know of Coleman's participation on Army basketball teams in Schweinfurt, West Germany.

Coleman's eligibility in the current semester was not questioned in the report.

Moon indicated he didn't believe the Star and Times stories had all the information it would have required to completely report the Coleman story.

"When everything is made clear, then we'll discuss it," Moon said. "There's been enough said, enough partial information (about the Coleman story) and we'll just let it go at that."

Moon said the athletic department would eventually comment directly about the issue, but wouldn't say when this would be.

Moon did say, however, that once the athletic department thought it had complete information about the Coleman case, "then we'll talk to everybody and answer all the questions."

According to Moon, the NCAA and Big Eight Conference are currently involved with the case, but he would not say in what capacity.

Coleman is currently K-State's leading scorer at 21.9 points per game. He is the Big Eight's leading scorer taking conference games only into consideration at 25.3. He is the second leading rebounder in the conference, averaging 7.9 per game.

Coleman started in Saturday's loss to Kansas at Lawrence and scored 21 points. Coleman is expected to be in the starting lineup in Wednesday night's K-State game against Missouri at Columbia.

K-State given bad information

Coleman fools everyone in guide

By DARAN NEUSCHAFER
Sports Writer

K-State star basketball player, Norris Coleman, gave the wrong information when he filled out a questionnaire for the K-State Sports Information Department.

The questionnaire, filled out by every person participating in Wildcat athletics, is used by the department for general informational purposes such as programs, brochures, news releases, and hometown stories.

Coleman, upon filling out the questionnaire, gave the wrong information concerning his age, high school graduation date, number of years in the armed services, and the current athletic status of one of his brothers.

The information which Coleman submitted was subsequently used by the sports information department in the 1985-86 K-State men's basketball media guide.

According to the media guide, Coleman graduated from Paxson Senior High School in Jacksonville, Fla., in 1981. But his high school transcript lists his graduation class as 1979.

Coleman's birth date is listed as September 1963, in the press guide. However, his high school and military transcripts show that he was actually born in 1961. The Collegian obtained information from his military records by calling the U.S. Army Personnel Administration Center in St. Louis.

Those military records also show that Coleman was in the army for a total of six years. Coleman put on the questionnaire that he had been in the army for only four years.

It was also listed in Coleman's profile that his brother, Autry, was a first-year member of the University of Florida basketball team. But Florida assistant coach Monte Towse, who has been at the school for the past six years, told the Kansas City Times he had never heard of the younger Coleman.

Coleman, told the Times his brother was only enrolled at Florida and was not playing basketball for the Gators.

Duane DaPron, sports information director at K-State, said that his department was unaware of the false information supplied by Coleman.

He also stated that it was not until information was received by K-State from the National Collegiate Athletic Association concerning a new ruling which granted Coleman one more year of eligibility, did his office know of the foul-up.

"We found out about the mistake when we received information pertaining to his (Coleman's) extra year of eligibility," DaPron said. "We corrected that (the information) once we found out, in one of the game notes."

Coleman told the Times he does not remember having to fill out a questionnaire.

"When I came down here, the release came out saying you (K-State) signed a 22-year-old freshman," Coleman said. "How I came out (of high school) in '81. I don't know how they got that."

K-State was not the only school to receive incorrect information the Times reported. While being recruited by coaches at Morehead State, Coleman filled out another information form stating that he was born in 1962.

NU's Carr wins conference player of the week honor

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Brian Carr of Nebraska, who hit the winning shot in the final seconds in a 66-64 upset of Oklahoma, was chosen the Big Eight player of the week.

Carr's winning shot accounted for two of his 18 points in the victory. He also scored a career-high 22 points in an 81-73 loss to Iowa State.

"You always dream of shots like that," Carr said after the game. "You play in the backyard, you count

Cheerleading partners Sandi Westhues, senior in dietetics and institutional management, and Raegan Crow, senior in marketing, announced their engagement and plans for marriage Aug. 1. The couple's marriage will be the second in the Crow family between cheerleading partners.

Couple discovers new reason to 'cheer'

By JERI HEIDRICK

They've been cheering partners for two years, and now Raegan Crow, senior in marketing, and Sandi Westhues, senior in dietetics and institutional management, want to be partners for life.

Crow is somewhat following his brother Kevin's lead. Kevin Crow married Merilee McCaustland, also a cheerleader, last summer. McCaustland and her husband were K-State cheerleading partners for three years.

Crow and Westhues' wedding date is Aug. 1.

The woman who brought the couples together, so to speak, is Bea Pray, former cheerleading sponsor, who is now academic counselor for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Pray said she would like to think of herself as a matchmaker, but she said the credit rightfully belongs to the couples themselves.

"Technically, I would love to take credit for the matches, but I don't think that I should," Pray said. "We just picked the cheerleading partners by their ability to perform together, and by who can push who to get the job done."

Westhues said she and Crow would have gotten together even if they weren't partners. She said the sponsors partnered the cheerleaders and yell leaders according to the closeness of height and ability.

Crow said his parents had an idea the engagement was going to happen. He asked Westhues to marry him before Christmas.

Medical deduction bill unfair, lobbyist claims

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A bill that would bring Kansas income tax deductions for medical expenses into line with the way they are handled on federal returns would be unfair to Kansans with moderate incomes, a labor spokesman told the House tax committee Monday.

"We feel that this bill is just like a number of other bills that have been introduced this session that shift the burden on the middle income wage earners of our state," said Leroy Jones, a lobbyist for the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Jones said about 82 percent of all married Kansas taxpayers with incomes of more than $25,000 use itemized deductions. He told the House Assessment and Taxation Committee that his railroad labor group wants to protect the deductions middle-income taxpayers currently enjoy.

However, Jones was the only opponent to the bill, which is among measures Republicans have introduced in an effort to avoid Gov. John Carlin's proposed 1-cent statewide sales tax increase.

Secretary of Revenue Harley Duncan told the panel the medical deduction proposal would raise an additional $31 million for the state each year.

The measure would change the current state deduction of all medical expenses in excess of $50, and instead would allow only the deduction of medical costs that amount to more than 5 percent of a taxpayer's adjusted gross income.

Duncan said other sections of the measure, which would repeal deductions for payment of gasoline taxes and political contributions, would raise another $3 million to $3.5 million.

On the medical deduction provisions, Duncan said 60 percent of the additional revenue would come from taxpayers with incomes above $35,000.

The committee took no action on the proposal or another portion of the GOP tax package that would impose a 3 percent sales tax on telephone calls from Kansas to points outside the state.

Spokesmen for three long-distance telephone companies and a statewide business group told the committee a move to tax the interstate telephone calls would be counterproductive to the state's economic development efforts and would hurt residential and small business telephone customers.

G.T. Rhodus, a district manager for AT&T, said as the cost of long distance service goes up with the addition of a sales tax, more large businesses will switch to equipment that will bypass local telephone exchanges.

Carlin's proposal for tax increase meets opposition

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Gov. John Carlin's proposal to generate $190 million in new revenue by increasing the state's 3 percent sales tax ran into a roadblock Monday in the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee as Democrats on the panel refused to support the bill.

Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt and committee chairman, said his fellow Republicans were ready to vote in favor of the bill but no action would be taken until members of the minority party agreed to support it.

"We need bipartisan support to pass this bill, both in committee and on the floor and the minority party has indicated to me they're not ready to support it," Kerr said at the end of Monday's meeting. "We do not have support on the committee to pass the bill at this time."

Kerr had scheduled final action on the bill for Monday and warned that if the bill does not pass Tuesday it will be postponed indefinitely.

"I'm playing it straight," Kerr said. "The bill's not going to come out of committee without bipartisan support. If we can't get the bill out of committee, the people on the budget committee need to know so they can plan."

"I'm surprised and I really think there's something else going on here. The Democrats are trying to send a message to somebody. I think it's ironic it's the Democratic side that's holding up the governor's program."

Kerr said he's unsure what the message is, but he's heard it's related to the governor's executive order to reorganize the state Board of Agriculture which has come under fire from Republican senators and appears doomed at their hands.

What is clear is that the delay is a setback for the Democratic governor's legislative program, which is built around the idea of increasing the sales tax to 4 percent — or one penny on the dollar.

There are four Democrats on the tax committee and ranking minority member Sen. LeRoy Hayden, D-Satanta, was not present for Monday's action. Sens. Gerald Karr of Emporia and Nancy Parrish of Topeka both blamed Hayden's absence for the delay. Sen. Bill Mulich of Kansas City is the other Democrat on the panel.

"I'm not sure the Republicans are ready to pass it either," Karr said after the meeting. He refused to reveal how he would vote on the bill but conceded a revenue increase is needed.

"I think we need to have some income tax options," Karr said, referring to a booster tax on upper income brackets enacted in 1983 but which expired after just two years. He conceded the sales tax will be a "central feature" of any tax plan enacted this session.

Parrish said it was unfair to take such a critical vote when a committee member is absent. She said her vote on the bill will be affected by a committee decision Monday not to exempt food from the sales tax.

Currently, the state exempts necessities such as utilities and prescription drugs from the sales tax and she said food is the ultimate necessity and should be included in the list of exemptions.

Nearly 200 Kapaun students and their parents brought suit against the activities association last week and won a temporary restraining order prohibiting the association from carrying out the sanctions until further court proceedings.

A temporary restraining order issued last week by Judge Fred Jackson of Shawnee County District Court enabled Kapaun's wrestlers to compete this past weekend in the Class 5A regional tournament at El Dorado. They also will be able to compete in the state wrestling tournament this coming weekend under Jackson's order.

Stephan had appeared before Jackson when arguments were heard on the temporary restraining order, asking that it be granted. At that time, Stephan indicated he believed the KSHSAA board had violated the Opening Meetings Act.

In his petition filed Monday, the attorney general said the alleged violations occurred when the board several times went into private sessions without following requirements of the act, and allegedly took binding actions involving the sanctions during those closed door sessions on Feb. 12.

Monday was the deadline for Stephan to file his suit under the Open Meetings Act.

reach a separate accord on intermediate-range forces while they continue to search for ways to break their stalemate on the larger questions of long-range missiles and space weapons.

But in a written statement outlining his private response to Gorbachev, Reagan made clear that many obstacles remain to total nuclear disarmament — a goal he has long embraced in general terms.

Gorbachev's Jan. 15 proposal called for elimination of nuclear weapons by the end of the century, with both sides scrapping their medium-range nuclear missiles that are within striking distance of Europe, as a first step.

However, Reagan, who initially had welcomed the plan as a positive step, said Monday that many of its details "are clearly not appropriate for consideration at this time."

"In our view, the total elimination of nuclear weapons will require, at the same time, the correction of the conventional and other force imbalances, full compliance with existing and future treaty obligations, peaceful resolution of interference, and a demonstrated commitment by the Soviet Union to peaceful competition," he said. "Unfortunately, the details of the Soviet 'plan' do not address these equally vital requirements."

White House spokesman Larry Speakes refused to discuss details of the U.S. position, saying the United States believes those should be left to the confidential bargaining at the Geneva arms talks.

The United States still hopes to achieve progress in other arms control areas, Speakes said. But he called the plan on intermediate-range missiles "a fast-track reduction."

Officials report increase in book thefts

By DARREN MCCHESENEY
Collegian Reporter

Stolen textbooks are becoming an increasing problem at the University, said Dan Walters, employee at Varney's University Book Store.

Walters said Varney's receives almost 40 reports a semester for textbook theft and only catches two or three perpetrators a semester. This is because most students have not adequately prepared their books for the possibility of being stolen, Walters said.

A K-State student, who asked to remain unidentified, recently had her books stolen, resulting in approximately a $70 loss. The student was at the Union Bookstore and left her backpack in the shelves outside the bookstore.

"I called the police and they came over and searched the Union," the student said. "They told me what usually happens is they'll (thief) take what they want and leave the backpack."

Jerry Fields, administrative officer at the Union Bookstore, said books get stolen frequently and it is a problem there as well. Fields and Walters both explained some steps to take to guard against textbook theft.

"The first step at the beginning of the semester is to protect yourself. If you are at the Union Bookstore, then use the lockers provided," Fields said.

Walters said it is important to take the preventive steps so books won't be stolen.

"Pick a page, maybe the last two numbers which correspond to your birthdate, and write your name there," Walters said.

Walters and Fields advise students to choose one page for all of their books so it is easier to remember. By doing this the student can give the bookstores some identifying mark for which to look.

"Once a person knows they are going to keep their books then they should also write their name on the inside cover," Walters said. It is better to use a ball point pen because then it indents into the book. A magic marker can simply be scribbled over.

"You can use a magic marker on the edges of the book to write your name," Fields said.

However, it would be best not to use this system if you want to sell the book back, Fields said.

"If your books do get stolen, go to the KSU Police Department and fill out a report, then go to both bookstores and fill out a form describing the identifying marks in your texts," Fields said.

Walters said he has talked to several of the people who have been caught stealing books.

"I ask them why they would do something like this and they say their buddies put them up to it or they didn't realize it was such a serious offense," he said.

Robert Mellgren, lieutenant with the campus police, said the theft would usually fall under the Class A misdemeanor category if it was under $150.

"However, if the whole backpack was stolen, it could be classified as a felony," Mellgren said.

Penalties for the theft could range from fines to imprisonment, he said, depending on the case.

"In cases with a suspect and stolen textbooks, we file a report with the county attorney, who then takes the case to court," Mellgren said.

Rule prohibits grade point requirements in rush programs

By LESLIE ALLEN
Collegian Reporter

The National Panhellenic Council sent out a resolution last week stating that collegiate Panhellenic councils can no longer require a certain grade point average from women who go through rush.

"The NPC agreed that there should be no grade point requirement for rushing, pledging or initiation," said Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser.

The NPC actually made three changes, but K-State's Panhellenic Council already abides by two of them, said Sherri Hager, senior in journalism and mass communications and president of Panhellenic Council.

"One (change) said that we can not use alcohol or men in the participation of rush. The second (change) was that no alumni can be used during the actual rushing process. They may be present in the capacity as a hostess. The third one is that we cannot require a GPA for women going through rush," Hager said.

The resolution states "A college Panhellenic council may designate the dates for membership selection, the number of parties, the hours during which they may be held, and many other items in the mechanics of membership selection; but only the individual groups have the right to set the requirements for membership. Therefore, when a college PH council sets a specific GPA as a qualification for participation in rush, it is infringing on the rights of the individual chapter to decide which rushees (on an individual basis) it will consider for membership."

"It was a unanimous agreement, or voted on by all 26 national member sororities, which means that we have to put it into effect by rush of 1987," Hager said.

Last year the council required a 2.5 GPA for upperclassmen and a 2.7 for freshmen to go through rush. But in August it voted to lower the requirement to 2.3 for upperclassmen and 2.5 for freshmen because at that time the chapters did not want to abolish it altogether, Hager said.

The reason the sororities are not abiding by the change until 1987 is because they have already had 6,000 booklets printed this year with the 2.3 and 2.5 requirement, Hager said.

Chapters will now each have a GPA requirement of its own, and it will be printed in the booklet which goes out to rushees.

"Although PC does not have a grade point requirement to go through rush, each individual chapter does set its own, so that a rushee with anything less than a 2.5 won't have as many options open to her," Robel said.

"It's going to be sad for the girls that don't have as high a GPA, because they won't realize that some chapters just won't take girls with low grades," Hager said.

This policy greatly changed the University of Kansas' number of girls who went through rush, Hager said.

"They abolished their GPA and they had from 600 to 1,000 girls go through rush. We've never had that many inquiries, as far as girls who didn't make the GPA," she said.

"The sorority girls that I've talked to are shocked, because before, you knew that every girl going through rush had good grades. It wasn't something that you had to concern yourself with," she said.

"Now sororities are going to have to take a step back and look at her (the rushee's) academic record and see if that's what we really want for our chapter," Hager said.

By PATRICIA MALONE
Collegian Reporter

A collection of 41 photographs titled "An Open Land: Photographs of the Midwest, 1852-1982" is on display in the Union Gallery through March 21.

The photographs in the exhibit were collected over a period of more than a year by Rhondal McKinney, a lecturer at the University of Illinois in Normal. The photos came from private and public collections in the Midwest and from repositories of the federal government in Washington, D.C.

Most of the photographs are from the Midwest, but there are many photos by anonymous artists.

McKinney said the selection spans 130 years, describing a long, robust tradition of landscape photography in the Midwest.

The photos display the natural beauty of the rolling hills, farming scenes, wheat and corn fields, the prairies and more. Four of the photos were taken in Kansas. Photos include detailed close-up shots and wide-sweeping panoramas.

In conjunction with the exhibit, a presentation, "Looking at the Land" will be given at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in Justin Hall 109.

Earl Iverson, professor at the University of Kansas, will present a slide show and lecture. One of his photos is included in the exhibit. Following the lecture Tom Averill, a professor at Washburn University, will read from his works on the Kansas landscape.

The exhibit and lecture are sponsored by the Department of Art, the Department of English, the College of Arts and Sciences and the Agriculture-Liberal Arts Program. The gallery is open 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays.

Aquino took the oath of office from an associate justice of the Supreme Court, Claudio Teehankee, promising to "fulfill my duties as president of the Philippines."

Before she was sworn in, a proclamation signed by about 60 opposition legislators in the 190-member National Assembly was read. It said: "We proclaim Corazon Aquino and Salvador Laurel the duly elected president and vice president respectively, entitled to the recognition, obedience and allegiance of the Philippine people."

Reading of the proclamation was drowned out by the crowd chanting "Cory, Cory," Aquino's nickname.

The inauguration of Aquino, 53, as president of the rebel-proclaimed government had been scheduled to begin at 8 a.m. (7 p.m. EST Monday), but she appeared three hours later at the Club Filipino. People arriving for the ceremony were searched by the troopers.

The two military chiefs who on Saturday launched the revolt against Marcos left Camp Crame where they had been entrenched since Saturday and flew by helicopter to the club.

Former Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and Lt. Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, who had been deputy armed forces chief, arrived at the hall with a dozen soldiers escorting them. Before leaving the camp, Ramos told reporters, "Some 85 percent of the armed forces of the Philippines is solidly under our control."

A thousand Aquino supporters filled the hall, with about 3,000 others outside. The club is a private establishment patronized by many of Manila's wealthy and was frequently used by Aquino for political meetings in her campaign.

Marcos, 68, who said Monday his family was "cowering" in terror inside the Malacanang Palace, has clung to power although the United States and other Western governments say his election victory over Aquino was achieved by fraud and he should step down.

ried from the start," Crow said. "It (the engagement) wasn't all of a sudden, but more or less my parents knew it was coming. If Sandi would have had to ask me, she would have thought about it, too."

Westhues said the couple's dating at all was sheer coincidence. The couple's first date was a blind date, months before they became cheerleading partners during the fall of 1984.

"We didn't know each other on our first date, then later we became cheerleading partners," Westhues said. "The girls in my house (Gamma Phi Beta) said it was too weird of a coincidence that we had a brief encounter on the blind date, so I would probably end up marrying him."

Since becoming engaged, Crow and Westhues say they have been more conscientious about performing while they cheer.

Crow said he has become more careful with his fiancée when he throws her up in the air performing partner stunts.

Westhues said she would prefer that Crow catch her, because he knows how she falls. She said he knows what stunts or pyramids scare her so he knows how she reacts.

The couple said the cheerleading squad made subtle hints about another engagement in the Crow family, yet they acted surprised when it occurred.

"I guess it's unusual for partners to become engaged," Crow said. "Your relationship as yell leader-cheerleader is usually like brother and sister."

This will be Crow's and Westhues' last season of cheerleading. The couple believes it is time to move on to other things, although cheering brought the two together.

"I know we will be sad to give it up," Crow said. "I've been in it for three years and it's been fun but I want to concentrate on married life and graduate a year from May."

Authorities receive shuttle launch crew tapes

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Tape recordings of radio conversations among launch crews have been turned over to presidential investigators in the Challenger explosion to determine whether launch managers knew of abnormally low temperatures on the space shuttle.

The recordings include more than 30 radio "loops" between the launch pad and the "firing room" where launch commands are issued. They are expected to help the presidential commission find out whether top NASA officials knew that teams on the launch pad had read temperatures far below freezing on the skin of the shuttle's right booster rocket.

The commission holds its third public hearing Tuesday, and was expected to call some engineers from Morton Thiokol, which makes the shuttle's solid rocket boosters, and officials from NASA. The engineers are reported to have argued strongly against a launch the night before, only to be overruled by a company official in Utah.

The man who runs the shuttle booster program for Thiokol, Allan McDonald, was expected to be one of the witnesses. McDonald apparently was among 15 Thiokol engineers arguing against launching because of the detrimental effect the cold would have on the booster rocket's seals. The seals, which are between segments on the booster, are suspected of having leaked because they lost their resilience in the cold.

In Cape Canaveral, Fla., former astronaut Richard H. Truly, the new head of the shuttle program, said there are "a lot of options that have to be studied" before he can make a recommendation on when a shuttle should fly again.

"When I've had the time to take a look at those options and evaluate them, I'll try to come up with a rational recommendation," Truly said on arrival at the Kennedy Space Center to meet with senior space agency officials.

Truly said he had met earlier Monday in Washington with the presidential commission investigating the Challenger disaster and had given Chairman William Rogers "my pledge that I was fully supportive of what they were doing."

He said he told panel members that "we had the same objective, and that is to find out what happened in the accident so that we in NASA can set out to take the initiative to fix it."

Asked whether he knew what would come out of the commission's hearings in Washington on Tuesday and Wednesday and their effects on NASA, Truly said: "No, I really don't."

He said his trip to Kennedy was "the first opportunity that I've even been able to take a look at the firsthand data. Prior to that, I've only read about the accident in the press."

Enroll

from this time last year, said E.J. Hargave, transcript analyst for the FHSU registrar's office.

FHSU President Gerald W. Tomanek doesn't believe the enrollment drop is a major concern.

"It is encouraging to note that our overall enrollment has remained fairly stable the past few years," Tomanek said.

The Full-Time Equivalent figures for the six state schools are also in and show K-State down 531 from 15,982 a year ago at this time.

The FTE enrollment figures are calculated by dividing total undergraduate hours by 15, veterinary medicine (pre-professional) credit by 12 and graduate credit by nine.

Although the enrollment for K-State is up, the FTE has dropped. The drop is attributed to the fact that the off-campus head count helps with the total enrollment but doesn't contribute a great deal to the total FTE, said Tim Lindemuth, news editor in University relations.

At KU, the FTE, not including the KU medical centers, increased 385 over last year's figure of 20,953, Gleason said.

The FTE also increased at PSU with an increase of 70 students to 4,290.

WSU's FTE figure was down to 10,436 from last year's spring enrollment, Wynne said. The total FTE at FHSU has declined to 3,961, Hargave said.

Although ESU's enrollment figures fell 55, the FTE increased by 32 from this time last year, Schulte said.

President Marcos flees Philippines

Agony over, Aquino tells nation

Local Filipinos approve of Aquino

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Ferdinand E. Marcos fled the Philippines after 20 years in power Wednesday and Corazon Aquino, the new president, told her nation "the long agony is over."

Marcos resigned the presidency Tuesday night, driven from office by a military and civil rebellion. He was taken with his family in U.S. helicopters to Clark Air Base. Officials in Washington said they left for Guam shortly after 5 a.m. Wednesday.

A State Department official said the Marcoses would remain in Guam "for some time," but he did not know their ultimate destination.

After Marcos left the riverside presidential palace, where he had been isolated for days by a revolution Aquino called "people power," Filipinos swarmed into the streets for a carnival of joy.

They created traffic jams at midnight, chanting "Cory! Cory!" for their champion, who had refused to concede after the National Assembly declared Marcos the winner of a Feb. 7 election marred by violence and fraud.

Aquino said in a brief television appearance early Wednesday: "The long agony is over. We are finally free, and we can be truly proud of the unprecedented way in which we achieved our freedom — with courage, with determination and most important, in peace."

A crowd broke into the palace, wolfing food left on the tables, carrying off shoes, monogrammed towels and other loot. They fought with Marcos supporters left behind, and

Two Filipinos living in Manhattan said Monday night they believe Ferdinand Marcos did the right thing in resigning his post as Philippine president.

Bob Patron, junior in biochemistry, and Avelina Paulsen, instructor in biology, said they are not too worried about relatives still in the Philippines, but are glad Marcos has resigned and is allowing Corazon Aquino to become president of the provisional government.

"I'm really happy for them (the Filipinos)," Patron said. "Now they are finally receiving what they should have. The people's choice is in office now."

Paulsen, who came to the United States in 1962, still has relatives in Manila and said her brother-in-law was a lower official in the Marcos administration. She also said she and Marcos were from the same hometown of Batac, Philippines.

She said stepping down from a post as important as the president of a country would be difficult.

"He (Marcos) is a proud man and he wanted very much to be president," she said. "I'm sure he was not much for bloodshed and the like and did not want that. He had his reasons, but what they are I am not sure."

Paulsen said she believes Marcos should have resigned instead of trying to take the presidency by force.

"It's too bad he waited so long. It would have been more dignified if he would have let Corazon (Aquino) be president," she said. "For anybody in that position to step down is a hard

Beggs quits as NASA's top official

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Indicted NASA Administrator James M. Beggs resigned Tuesday, allowing President Reagan to name a new top space agency executive, congressional officials said.

One aide, who refused to be identified by name, said Beggs telephoned Rep. Manuel Lujan, R-N.M., and notified him he had submitted his letter of resignation to the White House.

This aide said Beggs "did not talk about a successor at all," even though he has been quoted in recent days as disparaging his stand-in, acting Administrator William Graham.

He said Beggs told Lujan he had initially hoped to stay in his job while he fought criminal charges unrelated to his NASA tenure, but said "the tragedy (the loss of the Challenger on Jan. 28) changed the ramification of the situation."

Beggs, 60, had been administrator of NASA since July 7, 1981, three months after the first space shuttle flight. He has been on unpaid leave since Dec. 2, when he and three other former General Dynamics ex-

Weapons testing absurd, speaker says

By SARAH KESSINGER
Staff Writer

If the United States continues to seek a technical advantage in the arms race with the Soviet Union, it will only destroy itself, said George Reiter, professor of physics at the University of Houston.

Reiter was the first speaker in the 1986 Lou Douglas Lecture Series Tuesday evening in Forum Hall.

Reiter spoke to an audience of about 100 about the absurdity of the arms race and the continuation of U.S. nuclear weapons testing even after the Soviets have called for a ban on testing.

Reiter cited several myths about the arms race.

"One myth is that what we do is out of defense and what they do is out of aggressive intent. This is ridiculous and absurd," he said.

Another myth is that the U.S. buildup has been a reaction to the Soviet buildup; on the contrary, the Soviet buildup was preceded by the U.S. buildup, he said.

The idea of nuclear war is "so scary that you really don't want to think about it," Reiter said as he showed transparencies of the result of a nuclear bomb on Houston.

"How did we get to the point where our lives are so incalculable? We literally do not know what the effects would be," he said.

Reiter gave a capsule history of the arms race beginning with World War II, when the United States was the only nation to possess the atomic bomb. Ten years later the Soviet Union had it and the United States produced more, he said.

Docking announces plans to run for governor

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Democratic Lt. Gov. Tom Docking on Tuesday launched his bid to become the third member of his family to occupy the Kansas governor's mansion.

Calling his candidacy for governor "the worst kept secret in Kansas political history" the 31-year-old Wichita lawyer said he would focus his campaign on "the fight for Kansas' future." He said if he gets elected he would work to revive the state's economy, improve its public schools and help its financially struggling farmers.

Docking's father, Robert, was elected governor in 1966 and served four consecutive two-year terms. His grandfather, George, was elected in 1956 and 1958. Tom Docking was elected lieutenant governor in 1982 as the running mate of Gov. John Carlin, who is finishing his second term and is barred by the state Constitution from seeking a third.

A crowd of about 300 applauded and cheered loudly as Docking's speech at a downtown Wichita hotel made his yearlong informal candidacy official. The rally was billed as a "pre-announcement party" with the official first announcement of his candidacy scheduled for Wednesday in Topeka, the state capital. Docking also has campaign announcement stops planned Wednesday and Thursday in six other Kansas towns scattered throughout the state.

In an interview before his speech, he said he was mindful of his family's political heritage and what his father and grandfather had done for the state.

"One must be respectful of traditions and I have to acknowledge where I come from and my own family's background," he said. "At the same time, I'm running for governor on my own."

"I'm my own man and people will have to vote for me based on what they know about me and my own background."

Some of the party faithful at Tuesday evening's rally wore buttons that said "Docking '86, Docking '66, Docking '86." Many said they had been campaign volunteers for the candidate's father or grandfather.

As Docking entered the small meeting room to speak, the crowd began chanting "Docking, Docking" and applauding in unison. Docking was joined on the speaker's platform by his mother, Meredith; his wife, Jill; his two children, Brian, 6, and Margery, 1; and his brother and sister-in-law, Bill and Diane.

"Tonight I will leave from this celebration and begin a journey to all regions of our state," Docking said. "I go forward with optimism for our cause and hope for our future. I take this journey to announce to you tonight that I am a candidate for governor."

Calling this his "most important week as a public servant," Docking said Kansas' strengths and traditions would be the greatest weapons in the battle for the state's future.

"We will wage the fight for the future on many fronts," he said. "We must marshal all the strengths we can draw from our pasts to meet the challenges of our economy, of our education system, of our farms. The stakes could not be higher."

Docking advocated "treating our teachers like the professionals that they are by compensating them for their ability and their dedication."

He said fighting for the future would mean battling to free farmers "from the vise-like grip of declining prices on the one hand and increasing costs on the other..."

"We Kansans know that the farmer's problem is the banker's problem and the laborer's, too. We are all in this together," he said to enthusiastic applause from the crowd.

Docking was asked about a media poll that showed he would win the election easily if it was held now.

"I'm mighty pleased to hear that," he said. "The fact of the matter is it's very very early in the campaign process."

He said he is delighted with the level of support he is getting, but there remains a lot of work to be done.

Carlin seeks status of budget reductions

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Kansas Gov. John Carlin urged federal lawmakers on Tuesday to reach an agreement by mid-April with President Reagan on a 1987 deficit reduction package, but warned that states cannot take over financing of a host of programs the president wants to eliminate.

Carlin, speaking on behalf of the National Governors' Association, told the House Budget Committee that states needed to know as soon as possible how Congress intends to meet next year's targets for reducing the deficit under the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law.

The Democratic governor, leader of the NGA's budget work, emphasized that deficit reduction should be the top priority of Congress but said states are facing grave problems because of uncertainties with the federal budget, the performance of the economy and the effects of tax reform legislation.

Lawmakers must not wait until late summer or fall to decide how to trim federal programs or raise taxes in order to comply with Gramm-Rudman, Carlin contended. The law sets an October deadline for developing a budget-balancing plan for the 1987 federal fiscal year, but many states are already developing their own spending blueprints for next year.

In his testimony, Carlin criticized Reagan for recommending deep cuts in domestic programs while increasing defense spending. His sharpest complaint centered on an administration budget proposal to reduce federal monies for Medicaid, which pays for medical care for the poor. He called it "inexcusable."

"Federal responsibility for Medicaid and other basic means-tested programs is essential because individuals with the greatest needs tend to be concentrated in state least able to meet these needs," Carlin said.

In addition, he maintained that states do not have surplus monies to offset proposed federal cutbacks — $111 billion over five years in grant programs to states under Reagan's proposed 1987 budget.

"As partners with both federal and local governments in the delivery of services to our citizens, the governors wish to assist in deficit reduction," Carlin said. "However, we are opposed to large shifts in current federal responsibilities to state government based on the misconception that states have fiscal surpluses."

"Farm Belt states — especially Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas — are in poor fiscal shape as a direct result of a deteriorating farm economy," Carlin said.

Marcos new to presidents' exile list

Until they were deposed and forced to leave their countries, they enjoyed absolute power.

In recent years, the list included Francois "Baby Doc" Duvalier, Idi Amin, Jean-Bedel Bokassa and the shah of Iran.

The list may also include Ferdinand Marcos.

Marcos, who stepped down as ruler of the Philippines on Tuesday, was offered asylum in the United States, but his final destination was not immediately determined.

Duvalier, whose flight from Haiti ended 28 years of family rule, also has an unclear future. He was accepted reluctantly by France on Feb. 7, but the French intend to expel him as soon as a third country agrees to accept him.

"The sooner he goes the better," said Prime Minister Laurent Fabius, who criticized the United States for its refusal to provide a refuge for Duvalier. The issue of asylum can be a hot potato.

France, where Duvalier's presence has drawn protests, traditionally has served as a land of asylum. Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini lived there while trying to overthrow the shah. The shah's last prime minister, Shahpour Bakhtiar, and the ayatollah's first president, Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, have been granted permanent refuge there.

France is also home to Bokassa, the deposed ruler of the Central African Republic. Last week, he demanded to be expelled from France, where he says he is kept as an impoverished political prisoner.

Another former African ruler is heard from less often. Amin, who ruled Uganda with an iron fist from 1971 until he was kicked out in 1979, was granted asylum in Saudi Arabia.

Afghanistan's exiled king, Mohammed Zahir Shah, has lived quietly in Italy since being ousted in 1973.

The United States has also offered asylum to a variety of exiles, including Lon Nol, the former Cambodian president who died in Fullerton, Calif., last year. But no exile caused more problems than a man who was only granted temporary refuge.

On Jan. 16, 1979, the shah of Iran left his country and hopped from Egypt to Morocco to the Bahamas and then to Mexico.

The shah eventually fled to Panama and then to Egypt, where he died in 1980.

Proposal could help reduce deficit

WASHINGTON — Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas said Tuesday that Congress could consider a tax amnesty proposal to pull in additional federal monies this year to help meet deficit reduction goals.

"Some of you have tried in your states, and it has been very effective. So we believe it deserves a look," Dole told the National Governors' Association.

A tax amnesty proposal would allow delinquent taxpayers to pay what they owe, along with some interest, but without added penalties.

The Treasury Department, according to Dole, is studying an amnesty proposal to determine how much revenue should be gained. Sen. Alan Dixon, R-Ill., who is sponsoring amnesty legislation, has said it could bring in $12 billion to $25 billion.

"Obviously that wouldn't be enough probably to take care of all of our problems," Dole said, "but it could be part of a package to meet the deficit cutting goals of the new Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law."

In his remarks to the governors, Dole said deficit reduction would be the top issue before Congress with tax reform legislation the No. 2 item. Proposals to toughen U.S. trade laws are next on the agenda, according to the Kansas Republican.

Judge dismisses bad check charges

TOPEKA — Judge Fred Jackson of Shawnee County District Court Tuesday dismissed charges of check kiting against Jack E. Patty, a former official of Wingert Oil Co. and now assistant to the president of Ottawa University.

Jackson ended a scheduled preliminary hearing for Patty Tuesday by dismissing the charges "for want of prosecution." Jackson determined the state did not have sufficient evidence to sustain a prosecution against Patty.

Assistant Shawnee County District Attorney William Ossmann, who brought the charges against Patty last November, was not available for comment late this morning. A receptionist in the district attorney's office said Ossmann could not come to the telephone.

Ossmann's complaint had charged Patty with conspiracy to commit felony theft by kiting 16 checks between First National Bank of Topeka and Peoples National Bank and Trust Co. of Ottawa during the last week of October 1983.

Patty's attorney, Robert W. Green of Ottawa, had labeled the accusations "groundless and without factual basis" when they were brought by Ossmann.

Patty was one of four Ottawa men charged in connection with what the Shawnee County district attorney's office called a scheme to provide Wingert Oil Co., which is now defunct, with a cash flow by kiting checks between the two banks.

First National Bank of Topeka demanded the company pay it $1.5 million in February 1984, but has never collected the money.

Agency requests small business aid

TOPEKA — Small companies dominate the Kansas business scene but still need all the support they can get, a Senate committee was told Tuesday.

A Kansas Small Business Development Center official told the panel her agency is requesting $300,000 for the next fiscal year to continue the work that it does to keep small business in the state afloat.

"Numerous studies have shown that businesses are particularly vulnerable in the first five years of life and that failure comes most often from lack of capital and an absence of sound management and planning practices," Susan Osborne-Howes, director of the center, told the Senate Labor, Industry and Small Business committee.

Osborne-Howes said the headquarters of her small business agency is in the College of Business Administration at Wichita State University and oversees other centers sponsored by Kansas' six state universities, Washburn University of Topeka and Johnson County Community College.

Only 145 businesses in the state are not classified as small, said Osborne-Howes. That means 99.8 percent of all Kansas businesses are in the small category, which includes all companies that employ under 500 workers.

Officials of small businesses that have problems go to the center for counseling in areas such as bookkeeping and marketing, she said. The center also has helped some farmers with business decisions.

the Soviets were building antimissile devices to protect themselves, a way to overcome that defense had to be devised, Reiter said.

If one force had 1,000 missiles and another had 1,000, then they could annihilate each other, Reiter said. Because this is a chancy proposition, warheads were placed on missiles so 1,000 missiles could fire as many as 3,000 warheads, making it an advantage to strike first, Reiter said.

"I don't think there's been much serious talk on our part to end this," he said.

"The situation is actually worse for Russians than it looks," he said. They use liquid fuel missiles instead of solid fuel, which takes longer because the liquid has to be transferred into the missile, Reiter said.

The Soviets have really given up on bombers, Reiter said. There are 6,000 to 7,000 Soviet missiles compared to 11,000 U.S. missiles.

"I hope that you can see that the claim that we were at a strategic disadvantage to the Russians is simply not true," he said.

Reiter explained the proposed X-ray laser and its functions, saying there is no possibility of using this antiweapon; nevertheless design and development of it continues.

Reiter also explained an ordinary chemical laser now being developed. The laser requires a satellite with a 45-foot mirror which must maintain stability and shape through temperature changes. No mirror of these qualifications exists, he said.

"Let's say you could build things like this that worked. We should be willing to accept 20 million American deaths if we want to wipe out the U.S.S.R.," Reiter said.

The arms buildup is absurd "on the face of it," he said. The U.S. government has promoted its strategic defense idea but is intending on waging war in the future, he said.

"It doesn't really matter what they intend, the Russians see this as a first strike escalation that hasn't been seen before," Reiter said.

Consumer prices increase slightly

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Consumer prices rose a modest 0.3 percent in January, held down by moderating energy and food costs, the government reported Tuesday. Analysts predicted an even better performance in February because of plunging oil prices.

The Labor Department's Consumer Price Index showed inflation increasing in January at the same average monthly rate it has advanced since late 1981. The January rise followed increases of 0.6 percent and 0.4 percent increases, respectively, in November and December.

"We really haven't begun to see the impact of lower oil prices yet. Gasoline prices at the pump are down just slightly. But over the next three or four months, we are going to start to see significant declines," said Robert F. Wescott, senior economist for Wharton Econometrics in Philadelphia.

In January, a slight decrease in the pump price of gasoline was translated into a 0.1 percent increase in the index after adjustments were made for seasonal factors.

Economists said the index reflected prices in mid-January, before pump prices began to fall significantly. Yet even the reported 0.1 percent rise was down from increases of 0.8 and 0.5 percent in November and December.

Home heating fuels did show a January decline of 1.1 percent, which Labor Department analysts said partially reflected the milder-than-usual winter in the Northeast.

The report also indicated that the decline in the U.S. dollar — roughly 20 percent against major foreign currencies since September — has yet to raise the price of imports enough to make a difference in inflation at the retail level.

Had it not been for a big increase in demand for military equipment, orders for durable goods would have fallen 2.8 percent, the department said.

Faculty teach-in investigates U.S., Soviet weapons issues

By MELISSA BRUNE
Staff Writer

Only a small fraction of the American public is aware of the Soviet Union's temporary moratorium on underground nuclear weapons testing which has been in effect for the last six months, said George Reiter, professor of physics at the University of Houston and spokesman for the Union of Concerned Scientists.

Reiter spoke at a teach-in, along with four K-State faculty, about U.S. and Soviet nuclear weapons issues Tuesday in the Union Little Theatre.

In the late 1960s, Reiter said, the two superpowers were about to limit underground weapons testing. During an interim in these weapons talks it was suggested that the Soviets would possibly cheat on the conditions, he said. As a result of this, there has never been a test ban treaty between the two nations.

The idea of deterrence was once of primary importance in nuclear weapons development, but President Reagan's push for development of the Strategic Defense Initiative, "Star Wars," has caused the administration to believe it is possible to prevail in a nuclear war, Reiter said.

"There is no will in this country among the leaders to put an end to this arms race," he said. "My sense is that all of us are going to have to begin taking responsibility for this world...and not leave it to the people who are running it now, because they are losing contact with reality."

Soviet responses to SDI were discussed by Jacob Kipp, adjunct professor of history at K-State and at the Soviet Army Studies Office at Fort Leavenworth. He said the Soviets are concerned with U.S. attempts to militarize space.

Kipp said the Soviets believe there can be no "technological surprise" which the United States is expecting in order to make SDI feasible. But there can be "technological initiative" to develop technology in a manner which allows for enhancement of national security, he said.

Kipp said a prevailing Soviet view since the 1920s has been that their "opponents (the United States) are masters of technology," but are "naive children in political affairs."

Talat Rahman, assistant professor of physics, reviewed the number of weapons in U.S. and Soviet nuclear arsenals. She said the United States led in deployment and replacement of nuclear missiles and the Soviet Union eventually caught up in development.

Between 1972 and 1982 the Soviet Union and the United States increased their stockpiles of deliverable warheads. She also noted both countries' arsenals contain about 10 times the power in megatons needed for mutual destruction.

Al Compaan, professor of physics, said some forms of technology can be used to stabilize the arms race.

"Technology is ethically neutral," Compaan said in his discussion of lasers and surveillance technology. Both the United States and the Soviet Union use satellites for surveillance purposes, he said.

Compaan said surveillance and laser technology also can be used for offensive purposes. These offensive capabilities could include using lasers as ignition sources for urban fire storms or crop destruction.

The rhetoric of "NukeSpeak" was the topic discussed by Ed Schiappa, professor of speech. Schiappa said "NukeSpeak" is the use of euphemisms and jargon to cloud the nuclear issue. "NukeSpeak" falls into two categories, domestication and bureaucratization, he said.

Domestication is the use of "friendly metaphors" to describe nuclear terms. Examples include referring to nuclear buildup as an "arms race," which implies it is a contest someone can win, and calling a nuclear war a "nuclear exchange," which suggests "mutual gift giving."

Bureaucratization is an "attempt to mystify the nature of nuclear concepts," he said. This includes the use of acronyms such as SDI to put the burden on the listener to understand the concept.

Survey reviews Jardine pet policy

By RON RENO
Collegian Reporter

The Jardine Terrace Mayors' Council will meet at 7 tonight at the Pittman Building to discuss distribution details for a survey about proposed changes in the pet policy at Jardine.

The council decided to conduct a random survey among Jardine residents asking them about their opinions about having pets, such as cats and dogs, in the complex.

Members of the council met during a closed session Saturday to review a proposed alteration of the current pet policy at Jardine, said Sue Nelson, freshman in veterinary medicine.

Nelson said she and the six members of the council met to examine the proposed revisions in the pet policy she submitted.

During the meeting the council further revised the policy Nelson submitted. The proposed policy now includes provisions which would limit the number of cats to one per household and would also continue to forbid the ownership of dogs in Jardine.

The original proposal was to allow Jardine residents to decide if they wanted to allow residents to house cats and dogs within set guidelines.

Nelson's original revision had allowed no dogs, but did not change the restriction on the number of cats.

The revisions in both Nelson's proposal and the one that came out of the council meeting have met with resistance by some who initially advocated the changes in the current pet policy.

Tracy Schemper, freshman in business administration, initially pushed for a change in the current policy when the Department of Housing told her that she must get rid of her two cats or be evicted. Schemper then circulated a petition around Jardine and worked on the first proposal to revise the policy.

Schemper, who has two cats, disagreed with the change limiting the number of cats to one, and has since stepped out of the leadership role she had assumed in getting the policy changed.

Schemper continues, however, to support a change in the current regulations.

"I am all for any policy they can set up," Schemper said.

In order for any change to be put into effect it must first receive a majority vote from the five voting members of the six person council. If that happens it would then go to the housing department for approval or rejection.

Downfall of Marcos must lead to reform

The ground swell of dissent among Filipinos following the August 1983 assassination of former Sen. Benigno Aquino, following three years of self-exile in the United States, was a strong indication of things to come.

The murder of the leader of President Ferdinand Marcos' strongest opposition group has led to a special presidential election and the eventual fall of the Marcos regime.

Marcos fled to Guam Tuesday after 20 years in power, and Corazon Aquino, Benigno's widow and the new Philippine president, said the cause of agony for many Filipinos left with him.

Marcos' government disintegrated because it could not withstand the pressure from persistent military and civil dissent. His government clearly did not have the support of the people, despite a victory in the Feb. 7 presidential election marred by violence and fraud.

His departure was relatively peaceful, as it should have been. Marcos had emphasized in the past, however, that he would "defend the republic to the last breath of our life, the last drop of our blood." His decision not to use the military weapons provided to him by the United States on his own people is commendable.

U.S. ties with the Filipino people are important. Our military presence there proves that, and the United States should work diligently with Aquino to speed the establishment of a stable and secure government.

The road to stability will be a rocky one. Mistakes will be made, but the new civilian leadership must forge ahead and attempt to reform a tragic economic and political system.

Scholarship proposal requires more money

The recent proposal before the Kansas House Education Committee to increase the number of semesters a student may receive state scholarship funds contains serious drawbacks for future scholarship recipients.

In the proposal, college students who are in five-year programs would be eligible to receive scholarship monies for as long as they are in school. Under the current scholarship policy, Kansas residents who attend a college in the state can receive up to $1,000 per semester for four years.

The new proposal to up the number of years from four to five is disadvantageous to potential state scholars. Since the proposal allows for no additional funding for the added recipients in five-year programs, some students in four-year programs might not receive any aid because of lack of funds. The state currently cannot meet the needs of those eligible for state aid, and adding five-year students to the program when there is no money available would come at a bad time.

Proponents for the legislation argue that it would encourage students to enter five-year programs rather than four-year ones. However, the proposal could also tend to discourage four-year students from attending college if there are no funds available for scholarships. Surely it is better to at least fund students for four years of college rather than be forced to deny them any aid.

State scholarship aid should be spread around Kansas to as many students as possible, not to just a select few. By spreading aid around, more students are given the opportunity to attend the institution of their choice.

While students should be encouraged to enter five-year educational programs (and the current policy probably does tend to discourage this), without extra funding for the state scholarship program the proposal to include students in five-year programs is not feasible.

Vicki Reynolds, for the editorial board

Altering K-State's image a priority

How do you say, "K-State"?

When your hometown grocer asks what college you're attending, do you stick your nose in the air, throw back your shoulders and say with a grin on your face, "K-State!" or do you pull your hat down on your forehead, glance around to see if anyone's nearby and whisper in the person's ear, "K-State"?

Most of the K-State students I know don't broadcast throughout their community that they attend the University. They admit that they go to Manhattan but don't brag about the campus or the students to their summer employers or high school friends.

When I ask them why they don't blow their horn, they say they don't want to sound like a brass band.

Being modest isn't bad. The problem starts when you're apologetic. A university can't apologize for its image if it wants to be a leader in the field of education.

One way for K-State to take the lead is to change the public's conception of "Silo Tech." A year-round public relations campaign emphasizing every aspect of the University, not just the colleges of agriculture and engineering, would make K-State more visible. Everyone — alumni, industries, other universities — should be targeted in some way, not just high school graduates or community college transfers.

Collegian
Columnist

More emphasis should be placed on the All-University Open House. It's an excellent recruiting tool because it ties together academics, extracurricular activities and sports in one tidy package that the K-State student as well as the high school prospect or parent can use.

The colleges could use their ambassadors more effectively as guides for prospective students and their parents when they visit the campus. Students in a campuswide ambassador program could make visitations around the state and represent the University as a whole.

But the best promotional tool K-State has is the students. Each student could be an effective public relations person for the University if he or she demonstrated pride in the University and its many accomplishments.

On the academic side, K-State has had seven Truman Scholars in the past six years, and two students are interviewing this spring for the honor. Four students have been chosen as Rhodes Scholars in the last 10 years in addition to a Marshall Scholar and a Fulbright Scholar in the past two years.

A team of engineering and human ecology students won the national competition to design a space glove for use aboard the space shuttle, while the Collegian and the Royal Purple were judged in 1984 as one of the four best collegiate publications in the country by the Associated Collegiate Press.

In sports, the men's basketball team has traveled to 16 NCAA tournaments. Only the University of California at Los Angeles, the University of Notre Dame and the University of Kentucky have made more trips. The women's basketball team has made four trips to the NCAA tournament since 1975.

To be successful, a university needs five ingredients: faculty dedicated to higher education; supportive alumni; administrators who listen to the concerns of students, parents, faculty and alumni; students who are leaders on campus as well as off campus — and pride.

This final ingredient makes the difference between a good university and a great university. Decide which one you want K-State to be and work toward that goal.

State unity cushions impact of cuts

WASHINGTON — The nation's governors are meeting here under unusually strained conditions. They face a major challenge from proposed federal fiscal policies, and serious threats to their own hard-won unity.

The National Governors Association finished its annual winter session on Tuesday. Their preoccupation was President Reagan's budget and tax proposals, which call for a 19 percent reduction next year in authorizations for federal aid to state and local governments.

At the same time, Reagan has renewed his call for elimination of deductibility of state and local taxes, a move which will inhibit the state's revenue-raising efforts. That is why the potential divisions among the governors are particularly awkward this year. The split is political, but the division on economic lines may be even more important.

This is a big year for gubernatorial elections, with 36 of them on the ballot. Twenty-seven of those 36 governorships are now held by the Democrats. That spells large-scale political opportunity for the Republicans, who are determined to move closer to parity this year. For a decade, under governors of both parties, the governors association has attempted to create a bipartisan state presence. But that cooperation faces serious strains.

Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander, a

DAVID BRODER
Syndicated
Columnist

Republican and the 1986 governors association chairman, is respected and trusted by his colleagues. But Alexander dissents personally from the general opposition to repeal of deductibility.

But the situation is made vastly more complicated by the growing recognition of the two-tier economy of the United States and the growing polarization of states and communities between haves and have-nots.

The glowing national reports of declining unemployment, steady economic growth and low inflation mask the fact that important sectors of America — agriculture, mining, energy and some lines of manufacturing — are operating at recession levels.

While overall state finances appear to be in good shape, almost one-third of the states were showing signs of serious economic pressure. A survey this month by the National Association of State Budget Officers found 14 states have been forced to cut their fiscal 1986 budgets since they were passed last year.

They are states which are dependent on agriculture, mining and energy of such sick industries as textiles: Colorado, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana and Utah in the West; Arkansas, Mississippi, Oklahoma and South Carolina in the South; Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska and Wisconsin in the Midwest. Vermont is the only Northeastern state on the list.

The differences among the states carry an important policy warning to the administration and Congress: The domestic spending cutbacks that are coming will hit some communities much harder than others, unless some thought is given to cushioning the impact.

One such approach is embodied in the "targeted fiscal assistance" bill sponsored by Sen. Dave Durenberger, R-Minn., and Rep. Bob McEwen, R-Ohio. With general revenue-sharing to local governments ticketed for extinction, they are proposing to take $2.3 billion and pump it into communities with heavy tax burdens.

Such a program would indirectly help the struggling states, but lobbying it through Congress will require a unified effort for governors who are anything but unified.

Pet policy review

Editor,

Re: The story, "Jardine residents want cats, dogs," in the Feb. 20 Collegian:

As a resident of Jardine Terrace Apartments, my husband and I are in favor of allowing at least cats in Jardine. I have read the policy drawn up by Tracy Schemper and Sue Nelson, and in response to the arguments raised by John P. Spicer, senior in economics, and Curtis Harris, maintenance technician with the Department of Housing, I would like to make a few points.

First, cats would be declawed, at least in furnished apartments, according to the proposed policy. Second, fleas do not fly because they do not have wings. Third, animals would be confined to the apartment and allowed outside only on a leash (including cats). Fourth, the 111 apartments represented by the 130 signatures are representative of 10 buildings, not the entire 25, and this does not include the tenants who were not home at the time this petition was taken.

I personally am not in favor of allowing dogs because of the noise problem, but I think cats should be allowed at least in unfurnished apartments where any damages are the responsibility of the tenant.

I also feel people opposed to the change, for whatever reasons they may have, should read Schemper's and Nelson's proposed policy, as I have, before forming opinions or making judgments.

Distortion of facts

Editor,

I agree with every word in Catherine Saylor's column, "Morality central to nuclear debate," except for the following: "That the 100,000 Japanese killed were innocent citizens, often children, and the 1 million Americans who would have been killed were aggressors who had each decided to risk death, is a point of contention."

This is a gross distortion of the historical facts of World War II. The Japanese people chose to be ruled by a government that unilaterally attacked the United States and invaded large areas of Asia without provocation. They were responsible for a war that killed millions, including children.

The use of atomic bombs at Hiroshima and Nagasaki was the lesser of two evils. Americans had witnessed mass suicides by Japanese civilians during the invasion of Okinawa. Throughout the war the Japanese had demonstrated a willingness to fight to the death rather than surrender.

A million Americans might have died in an invasion of Japan; many, many millions of Japanese would have chosen to die. The bombs convinced the emperor that his reservations about the war were correct; the bombs convinced the Japanese people that they could protect neither the Emperor nor themselves from their adversary.

The 13 million Americans in uniform during World War II were volunteers and draftees fighting in a war they didn't want to fight, in places they didn't want to invade. Their haste to get back home as soon as the shooting stopped, and the U.S. policy toward the defeated nations is a clear demonstration that our goal was a successful conclusion of the war, not aggression.

Engineering frogs

Editor,

To eliminate the risk that readers of the Collegian might get only one side of the distraught engineer story, we felt it in our best interest to comment on the personal views two fellow engineers deemed necessary to make.

As engineers, who are supposedly members of a profession, why was the first response to this criticism by Jerry Strunk, junior in electrical and computer engineering, an outright personal attack? The observations he made about his own department were obviously developed through adverse personal experiences.

The two engineers, who appear to be well acquainted with the administration, unprofessionally attacked Strunk. Instead, they could have offered advice to a less experienced student. The College of Engineering has produced two fine professionals in these students.

Todd Schemm, senior in industrial engineering, holds the view that the college is an open, uninhibiting system. This view is subject to question. Apparently, Schemm has been hanging around in the dean's office, because we haven't seen these administrators mingling with "the masses" to find out how things are going at the "normal" student level.

What would Schemm's logic be to explain why the Department of Mechanical Engineering continually refuses to put the instructors' names beside the courses in the line schedule?

After four years of mechanical engineering — being aware that there are strong sentiments against some instructors by the students — we believe that if names were included some mechanical engineering instructors wouldn't have any students to instruct.

Maybe, as K-State students, we will enjoy an edge over other engineering graduates. After four years of education in this bureaucratic tangle, rife with faculty/administrative infighting, our eyes will be open to these occurrences when we hit the "real" world.

It is ironic that engineering students, "taught" that engineering is the science of efficiency, attend classes in one of the most inefficient and obscene wastes of space on campus.

In the end, engineering students will come to this conclusion: K-State is not necessarily run to further the education of the students. We are seen merely as sponges that line up twice a year to be squeezed by the administration. The main objective, it appears, is to enable a few people to become slightly larger frogs in their tiny, little puddles.

Conservation tillage system produces higher crop yields

By SAM HOSTETTLER
Collegian Reporter

A study comparing conservation tillage systems for wheat and grain sorghum to conventional wheat and sorghum cropping systems shows conservation tillage systems generate higher yields, said Jeffery Williams, associate professor of agricultural economics.

In conservation tillage systems, farm ground is not plowed or disked as much as farm ground under the conventional system, he said.

"We took the yield data from the Tribune experiment station for the years 1973 to 1983 and constructed seven hypothetical dryland farms of 2,000 acres each for experimental conservation and conventional systems common to western Kansas," Williams said.

"We then established the economic characteristics on each farm using 1984's cost of production estimates to determine expected returns on the conservation tillage systems and the conventional tillage systems," he said.

The yield data was based on 98 farms in the Southwest Kansas Farm Management Association and this data was used to make up hypothetical dryland farms representative of that area.

The average farm size was approximately 2,000 acres and it was assumed 33 percent (660 acres) of each farm was owned and 67 percent (1,340 acres) was rented. Debt on 160 acres of owned land was assumed to be figured at 12 percent interest. The equity was assumed to be half of the depreciable life and purchase price adjusted to the year the farm was purchased.

In looking at the difference between the systems it was found chemical costs were more in the conservation tillage systems. But these tillage systems saved on labor, fuel and repair costs.

"This is because you work a field less in the conservation tillage system," Williams said. "You don't have to make as many passes around the field."

Of the seven systems researched, the three conservation tillage systems had higher returns after all costs.

"In order to do better in the conservation tillage system, you have to get more yields," Williams said. "Good management is also very important to a successful conservation tillage program."

The study showed with good farm management farmers can obtain higher yields using conservation tillage as opposed to conventional tillage.

Car-buying incentives fail locally

By JEFFREY J. BIELSER
Collegian Reporter

Although low interest rates may be helping the auto industry nationwide by record-high sales, local new-car buyers are not following the trend.

Cut-rate financing offered by major American automakers ranges from 7.5 percent to 7.9 percent. However, the incentive programs sponsored by General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. both ended Saturday. Programs sponsored by American Motors Corp. on certain Renault autos and Chrysler Corp. will end Friday and Saturday respectively.

The GM incentive program helped sales "a little" at Elkins Motor Co. Inc., 2312 Stagg Hill Road, said Steve Allard, finance manager. The last program, offered by GM last September, "didn't help at all," he said.

Most local dealers agreed the programs helped sales of cars specifically affected by the interest rates, but overall sales are comparable to last year.

One reason cited for sales remaining about the same is that lower interest rates were applicable only to certain models, with further restrictions within the model line. For example, some programs only offered low-interest financing on models with four-cylinder engines.

Roger Hammerschmidt, sales manager at Ed Schram Dodge Sales and Service, 3100 Anderson Ave., said there was no reason to put the programs on "hot" selling models.

"Automakers can't continue (offering the low interest rates) indefinitely because they are losing money," he said.

He said the automakers can't keep buying money at higher interest rates than the rates at which they are loaning it back out.

But, the incentive programs have been "off and on" over the past year, he said.

"Everyone else has this type of program and people expect this," he said.

Even though the most recent programs didn't have a large effect on sales locally, special incentives have boosted auto sales nationwide in the past.

A recent Associated Press story reported that after a recent sales-incentive program lapsed, auto sales dropped from an annual rate 10.5 million units to 6.5 million units.

The story also said the seven leading automakers reported a 13-year high in mid-January auto sales, which were up 18.1 percent over last year's sales.

Even though auto dealers are experiencing record sales now, the automakers' aggressive production schedules may pose a problem later in the year after all the sales incentives have expired.

"Despite the post-September slump in sales, domestic automakers built almost 2 million cars in the fourth quarter (of 1985) resulting in a sharp escalation in dealer inventory," said Donald Straszheim, chief economist at Merrill Lynch.

Last summer's car-buying binge will depress the new car market this year. All the people who bought new cars last summer won't be in the market for a new car for quite some time.

The build-up in used cars will cause "a condition that is depressing the price of used cars relative to new models," said Henry Kaufman, chief economist at the investment firm of Salomon Brothers Inc.

"When incentives are lifted in February, used cars will seem inexpensive compared with new models, which will further depress new car sales," he said.

First-round voting ends

House gives consent to bills

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Highway Patrol would receive $18.7 million in general tax money during the fiscal year beginning July 1, under one of a dozen bills given tentative approval Tuesday in the Kansas House.

A second appropriation measure given first-round clearance during more than an hour of debate would provide funding for 20 other state agencies during fiscal year 1987.

The House is scheduled to take final action on all 12 bills on Wednesday.

Of the $18.7 million in state general fund money earmarked for the patrol, about $14.2 million would go for wages. The total is about $76,000 less than Gov. John Carlin had proposed.

Rep. Bill Bunten, R-Topeka, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said his panel added a number of expenditures to the amount Carlin requested, including an additional administrative position in the patrol, but cut about $143,000 for gasoline expenses.

Bunten said the panel decided to reduce the gasoline money because the price of fuel is declining and because of plans to purchase bulk fuel tanks for two patrol stations in western Kansas.

However, Reps. Bob Ott, R-Salina, and Alfred Ramirez, R-Bonner Springs, said they were worried that the price of gas may go up before the budget year ends in June 1988, causing the patrol to run short on gas money. Bunten assured the lawmakers the patrol easily could gain approval for later adjustments in its gasoline budget.

The highway patrol measure also includes authorization to spend $21.6 million in non-tax money during the coming fiscal year.

The other appropriation bill would allow the state to spend $6.8 million in agency fee money during the next fiscal year to pay for the operations of 20 regulatory agencies, including the State Board of Healing Arts.

The only significant objection to the measure came from Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, who protested the hiring of a medical doctor to serve as administrator for the healing arts board.

The bill would allow the board to spend an extra $65,000 in its next budget to pay salaries of the administrator and several new investigators. Carlin and an interim committee on medical malpractice had recommended the additional board personnel.

"I'm not sure we need to pump up that much money now just to put somebody with a medical degree in charge," said Knopp, who contended a professional administrator and not a doctor is needed to manage the board's operations.

Other measures given first-round approval Tuesday would:

— Change the procedure which cities must follow to designate an official newspaper for legal publications. The proposal would allow a designation of an official newspaper to stand until the town's governing body decides otherwise, instead of the current requirement that the official newspaper be voted upon each year.

— Allow the Riley County Police Department, the state's only joint city-county law enforcement agency, to recover prisoners' medical expenses from county jail inmates who can afford to pay.

— Repeal a 1929 law that gives counties an option not to maintain roads through third class cities. The law has been overruled by a more recent statute, according to Rep. William Bryant, R-Washington, one of the sponsors of the proposal.

— Add extra members to the boards of wholesale water supply districts.

Teachers stress color in classroom

By BOB OLSON
Collegian Reporter

Teachers must be upbeat, colorful and innovative, or they will lose their students in the first five minutes of class, said Connie Rueck, resource teacher from Silver Lake.

Rueck spoke to approximately 50 education majors Tuesday morning during a seminar sponsored by Education Council.

Resource teachers Marilyn Blanding of Silver Lake and Carolyn Seyler of Manhattan were also featured speakers at the seminar. Seyler also works with the Competency Based Teacher Education Program at K-State.

The three participated in presentations and discussions with prospective teachers.

"We don't teach students, we teach teachers," Rueck said.

The three are called resource teachers and, as such, they monitor teaching methods, said Richard Hause, professor of curriculum and instruction. Hause is also a member of Education Council.

"Don't allow the classroom to be a 'black-and-white' experience for your students," Blanding said. "Some students come from a 'gray' home life, and your classroom may be the only color in their day."

"Use colors in your presentations and posters," Rueck said.

She said she buys felt-tip pens and colored paper "by the truckload." When she makes a teaching aid, she always considers how it may be reused. If the item can possibly be reused, she covers it with plastic-laminate before printing or writing on it, she said.

Seyler makes all of her letters for posters and presentations, she said.

"The ready-made kind usually end up on the floor, because the adhesive doesn't stick," she said.

Bulletin boards are an essential part of keeping important topics in front of students, Seyler said, and cited the number of examples on the walls of the seminar room. Any subject can be used for a bulletin board, as long it is important and properly done, she said.

Things can be used, filed according to the month or season they were used, and then pulled out next year for reuse, she said.

The three have been teachers for about 20 years and they agreed that the work really began when they became resource teachers. The spirit of the resource teacher is usually contagious, Seyler said.

The daylong session provided an opportunity for students in education to talk to teachers about the world of teaching, Seyler said. Presentations were given at 9:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. so as many students as possible in the College of Education could attend and benefit from the insights of the three, she said.

Refreshments were served after each presentation to provide an informal atmosphere for conversation between students and the speakers, Hause said.

Senators approve of school finance bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A school finance proposal, a bill authorizing a feasibility study of a superhighway in southeast Kansas and a measure designed to make it easier to commit Kansas residents to mental health institutions against their will, won tentative approval in the Senate Tuesday.

Also given first-round approval was a proposal to ensure attorneys who steal money from their clients receive stiff penalties and exempt school districts from provisions of the state competitive bidding law. Final votes on all measures are scheduled Wednesday.

The school finance bill proposes allowing school districts to increase their spending in the fiscal year which begins July 1 by 1 percent or 3 percent, depending on their present local funding levels.

The funding proposal would provide teacher salary increases averaging about 3 percent statewide if all districts used their full budget authority. It is estimated local property taxes would increase about $13 million if the state increased its contribution to education by $10 million over current spending levels.

Under the bill, school districts would be allowed to raise their budgets by 1 percent if those districts are above the median in their enrollment categories in per-pupil expenditures for education. Districts below the median could raise their budgets 3 percent.

Only one attempt was made to amend the proposal and it was beaten back easily. Sen. Nancy Parrish, D-Topeka, wanted to allow school districts to use interest earned on idle funds by transferring the earnings back to general revenue funds.

She said there is $249 million in idle funds in school districts around the state and interest earnings amounted to $49 million. Another $40 million is expected to be generated by the interest on the funds this year. She said flexibility is needed to let districts transfer that money back into general revenue funds for property tax relief.

Sen. Joe Harder, R-Moundridge, led the opposition, saying it was wrong to "rob these special funds" such as those created for vocational education, special education, capital outlay and transportation. He called it a "mistake to bleed these funds."

Senate Minority Leader Michael Johnston, D-Parsons, argued that any other state agency with millions of unused state tax dollars sitting in the bank would be forced to return the cash.

"If we found any other agency of this state with three-quarters of a billion dollars sitting around, we'd lapse the money," Johnston said. "We'd say we're giving them too much money and take it back. Why not the school districts?"

Parrish's amendment failed as only 13 senators supported it and 27 opposed it.

Sen. Alicia Salisbury, R-Topeka, said the Senate was "shooting in the dark" with its school finance bill because it remains unknown whether the Legislature will adopt a tax increase or agree with Gov. John Carlin's idea to make the state pension fund non-contributory as a way to increase teachers' and state workers' take-home pay.

The mental health bill sparked lengthy debate and raised questions about infringements on the civil rights of the mentally ill.

Sen. Robert Frey, R-Liberal, called the bill the "most significant change in commitment procedures" since a major revision of state laws dealing with the mentally ill in 1976.

"Some may say we're stepping backwards because the bill allows the commitment of people on the prediction they may become dangerous to themselves or others instead of current law which says they must, in fact, be found to be dangerous," Frey said. "I think it's a step forward because it provides a means for recognizing there are people out there suffering from mental illness and disease and need treatment."

"This bill is designed people off the street and into treatment, primarily outpatient care."

Ag committee hears land leasing proposal

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The attorney general's office today urged support of a bill which a spokesman said is aimed at keeping land in the hands of farmers who lose their farms.

However, farm organizations opposed it as a "bailout" by government trying to wash its hands of the crisis in the agricultural economy.

Under terms of the bill, corporations would be allowed to own land they acquire when farmers have mortgages foreclosed on them, as long as they offered it for lease or sale first to the farmers who lost it.

Under present law, corporations are not allowed to hold agricultural land for farming purposes unless it was acquired in the collection of debts, and then only for a 10-year period.

Jeffrey Southard, an assistant attorney general, told the Senate Agriculture Committee the purpose of the bill is to give farmers the first right of refusal to lease back or buy back land they lose through foreclosure.

He said farmers now are being told by the Federal Land Bank and other lending institutions that they will not be allowed to lease back their former land under any circumstances.

Taking all but their homestead land effectively puts these farmers out of business, Southard said.

"This bill would give them first opportunity to lease their land back and keep them in farming," Southard said.

SAMS fund-raiser collects $1,500

By MARIBETH GOTTSCHALK

Brother's Tavern was the place to be Tuesday evening as Pat Benatar, the Blues Brothers, Lynyrd Skynyrd, Madonna, and the Go-Gos performed in the Students Against Multiple Sclerosis "Rock Alike Event."

"I'm excited," said Sally Traeger, senior in marketing and the K-State campus chairman for SAMS. "The turnout, support and enthusiasm have been great."

Traeger said the event raised more than $1,500. This will go toward research for Multiple Sclerosis, a neurological disease which every week strikes more than 200 young adults between the ages of 18 and 24.

The overall "Rock Alike" winner was Madonna, portrayed by Melissa Edwards, senior in marketing and representative of Chi Omega sorority. Edwards, who raised over $1,000, will advance to regional competition April 5 at the University of Missouri at Columbia.

The winner of the regional division will compete in the national contest in New York. Sponsored by Music Television, the contest is scheduled to be held in May.

Other participants were, Alpha Chi Omega, Pat Benatar; Alpha Delta Pi, Pat Benatar; Kappa Kappa Gamma, Go-Gos; Sigma Chi, Blues Brothers; Sigma Phi Epsilon, Lynyrd Skynyrd; and Order of Omega, the Blues Brothers.

Members of the participating groups were pleased with the support and turnout of students.

Dana Brummett, sophomore in journalism and mass communications and member of the Kappa Kappa Gamma Go-Gos, said they entered the contest because MS is such a devastating disease.

"We (the Kappas) just wanted to get involved, while at the same time helping a worthwhile cause," Brummett said.

Brian Bauer, senior in marketing and a member of Lynyrd Skynyrd, representing the Sig Eps, said this has always been something they wanted to do.

"We made fools of ourselves for a good cause," Bauer said.

Brother's donated 25 cents of each $2 pitcher of beer sold, said tavern manager Geoff Gobble. He said they will be donating approximately $200.

February has been declared "Bust MS Month" and will continue with the "Heart of Rock 'n' Roll" March 3, 4, and 5. A large wooden heart will be set up in the Union and students are encouraged to stop by and place donations in the heart.

"Students need to realize what an effect MS could have on them," Traeger said. "This is an opportune time for everybody to give."

SAMS has also encouraged residence halls and greek houses to participate in the Miss-A-Meal project on Monday. Living groups are asked to donate to MS the money that it would cost to eat one meal.

Kassebaum rejects proposal to change natural gas pricing

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Sen. Nancy Kassebaum called Tuesday for the rejection of a natural gas pricing proposal before federal energy regulators, saying it could add $200 million a year to the energy bills of Kansans.

"If implemented, the proposal will unnecessarily increase gas costs without any offsetting benefits such as increased supplies," Kassebaum said in a statement filed with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

She urged the agency to reject a proposal that would change federal pricing guidelines to allow increases for "old" gas, which was not in production before 1977. Currently there are many prices for old gas, which covers a large share of production from Kansas wells including the Hugoton field in the southwest corner of the state.

The proposal by the Department of Energy would allow prices for old gas to rise up to a maximum for that category — roughly $1.90 a unit, or 1,000 cubic feet. Old gas can sell for 50 cents a unit or even less in some cases.

Kassebaum said the proposal would "effectively deregulate" gas pricing.

"While a case can be made for phasing out or eliminating price controls on old gas, that decision should be made as part of a rational energy policy set by Congress," she said.

Proposal increases school budgets

By The Associated Press

The Senate tentatively approved a bill revising the law under which state aid is distributed to local school districts. Under its provisions, districts would be allowed to raise their budgets 1 percent or 3 percent, depending on their present local funding levels, and would provide teachers salary increases averaging about 3 percent statewide.

The Senate also advanced to final vote a bill appropriating $250,000 for a study to determine the best possible route and traffic potential of a proposed new four-lane highway east-west across southeast Kansas. The road could be a freeway or turnpike, or a combination depending upon what the study shows and what funding methods were used to build it.

The Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee voted 6-5 to endorse Gov. John Carlin's proposal to raise the state sales tax from 3 percent to 4 percent, generating $190 million in new revenue for next fiscal year. Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, the committee chairman, cast the deciding vote, sending the measure to the Senate for debate later.

The House voted not to accept Senate amendments to a bill designed to limit cities' power to annex land and instead sent the measure to a joint conference committee for resolution of differences between the two bodies. The bill as passed by the House would limit cities to annexing 21 acres or less, unless the city surrounds it, or landowners requested it, or the county approved.

Committee endorses sales tax increase

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee Tuesday endorsed for passage Gov. John Carlin's proposal to generate $190 million in new revenue by increasing the state's 3 percent sales tax to 4 percent.

On a narrow 6-5 vote, with Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, casting the critical sixth ballot, the committee kicked out the bill and forwarded it to the full Senate for possible debate and action.

Kerr, the committee chairman, brought the bill up for a vote only after securing bipartisan support. He had demanded Democrats on the committee support the proposal and threatened to indefinitely shelve it if the minority party turned its back on the bill.

In action Tuesday, four Republicans were joined by two Democrats in winning committee endorsement. Senate Majority Leader Paul "Bud" Burke, R-Leawood, made the motion for committee approval and Sen. Leroy Hayden, D-Santanta, seconded the motion.

Besides Kerr and Burke, the other Republicans voting for the bill were Sens. Robert Frey of Liberal and Alicia Salisbury of Topeka. Hayden and Sen. Nancy Parrish of Topeka were the two Democrats supporting the Democratic governor's proposal.

Opposing the motion were two Democrats, Sens. Gerald Karr of Emporia and Bill Mulich of Kansas City, and three Republicans, Sens. Don Montgomery of Sabetha, Dan Thiessen of Independence and Jim Allen of Ottawa.

Kerr tried to move the bill Monday and said his fellow Republicans were ready to vote in favor of the bill. However, no action was taken because members of the minority party refused to support it.

"We need bipartisan support to pass this bill, both in committee and on the floor and the minority party has indicated to me they're not ready to support it," Kerr said at the end of Monday's meeting.

"I'm playing it straight. The bill's not going to come out of committee without bipartisan support. If we can't get the bill out of committee, the people on the budget committee need to know so they can plan."

Kerr said he's unsure what the message is, but he's heard it's related to the governor's executive order to reorganize the state Board of Agriculture.

Student still on critical list from Feb. 15 fire injuries

By The Collegian Staff

A University student is still listed in critical condition at the University of Kansas Medical Center where she is being treated for burns received more than a week ago.

Daniela Dalrymple, 27, sophomore in general arts and sciences, was burned in an apartment fire at 1830 College Heights, Apt. 2, Feb. 15.

Dalrymple was burned when her clothing caught fire while she was working in her kitchen.

She reportedly suffered third-degree burns over more than 40 percent of her body. A spokeswoman at the KUMC Burn Unit said further information on Dalrymple's injuries would have to come from the family.

Several attempts to contact her father, Lester Dalrymple, Rural Route 3, have been unsuccessful.

Commissioners review recreation bond

By SUE DAWSON
Collegian Reporter

The Quality of Life bond issue, proposed by the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board, received scrutiny by the Manhattan City Commission and area residents Tuesday afternoon.

During the commission's work session, area residents were given the opportunity to speak on each of eight separate items included in the $3 million proposal. A series of open public meetings on the issue have already occurred throughout the community.

The eight items in the bond issue are construction of an outdoor recreational sports complex; renovation of the Northview Park pool; construction of a 25-meter pool in the CiCo Park neighborhood; upgrading and renovation of the Community Building, Fourth and Humboldt streets; and construction of a new animal shelter outside of the Sunset Zoo area.

Other proposals include the purchase and construction of the Levee Trail for jogging and bicycle use; purchase and renovation of the Wareham Theater into a cultural and performing arts center and the allocation of funds for a youth center.

Speaking in favor of the Levee Trail project, Doris Fenton, 2121 Meadowlark Road, said she had seen a similar trail in Eugene, Ore.

"A number of people just seemed to enjoy getting out...in a natural area," she said.

Commissioner Dave Fiser agreed on the amount of usage the trail would get.

"I think we'd be amazed at the number of people that would use the levee park system," he said.

The commission agreed on the need for the Levee Trail, the outdoor recreational sports complex, and the Northview and CiCo pools. There was also support for the animal shelter.

"I would like to see us have a shelter somewhere else and to see (the existing shelter area) opened up again for trails and picnic areas," Fiser said.

The financial complexity of the Wareham renovation was a major concern of the commission.

"I think if anything sinks this bond issue, it will be complex ideas," Commissioner Gene Klingler said.

The $800,000 project would include a theater, office and commercial space in the three-story building. The commission said they would need time to study the proposal further. They also discussed presenting the theater issue as a separate question on the bond ballot.

The commission also asked for more research into the Community Building renovation. The $400,000 upgrading might repeat what Manhattan currently has, Mayor Suzanne Lindamood said.

The committee's interest in providing funding for some type of youth center appeared as a $100,000 allocation "at the discretion of the city commission." The commission asked for further study on uses for the project's funding, because there has been "strong public support" for it, Lindamood said.

One possibility discussed was a nonalcoholic bar in Aggieville.

Leisure studies requires internship experience

By ANGIE SCHUMAKER
Collegian Reporter

Experience can often provide an edge for seniors as they finish college and enter the job market, said Brenda Wiggins, instructor of leisure studies.

Because of this, the Department of Physical Education, Dance and Leisure Studies instituted an internship program as a requirement in the curriculum of leisure studies. Students are required to complete an internship during their last semester at K-State.

"It's the last thing they do before graduation," Wiggins said. "All of their course work is completed, and they've severed all ties to the University except for the internship. This makes them available to the employers, and many of them are hired on the spot."

"The main objective of the program," Wiggins said, "is to provide an opportunity for the students to plan, organize, lead and evaluate. By doing this, they're practicing what we're preaching all along."

"They get to go behind the scenes and see the total operation," she said. "They attend meetings, work with budgets and follow their supervisors."

Chris Williams, senior in leisure studies, said the main purpose of the program is to provide experience.

"You can use it as a steppingstone to what you want to do," she said. "There's not as much pressure involved in getting a job if you've got the experience behind you."

Kathleen Bechtel, senior in leisure studies, said she believes the classroom cannot always give the student the information she needs to succeed in a job.

"You can talk about it forever in class, but the experience is what really makes the difference," she said.

"An important aspect of the program is that you get a lot of hands-on experience," said Terry Rethman, senior in leisure studies.

The program can also serve as a link toward future jobs for the students.

"You meet people and get a lot of contacts," Rethman said.

Wiggins, who is filling in as the internship adviser, said the program has become important to K-State and to employers across the nation.

"There's a pattern of those who get jobs," she said. "They know about the advantages of their experiences (in the internship program), and they sell the idea to their employers when they get a job. Then the employers start calling us for interns."

A former K-State student received an internship at a resort in the British Virgin Islands in 1984. Previously, the resort had no internship program, but because of the work the intern did, they decided to implement the program and she was hired as the coordinator.

Before the students begin their internships, they are required to complete a pre-internship where they volunteer for various projects in the community. They have worked with the triathlon, Big Lakes Developmental Center, 4-H Club and Special Olympics.

"We are giving to the community, and we're getting something back in return — experience and knowledge," Williams said.

Each year the leisure studies department sponsors a Recreation Career Day which brings in agencies and students from all over the state. At this career day, students are given the chance to arrange for internships and to meet with prospective employers.

Anti-abortionists seek parental consent law

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Anti-abortion advocates Tuesday urged lawmakers to approve a bill they contended would protect children by requiring physicians to obtain parental consent before girls under 18 could get an abortion.

Witnesses told the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee parents need to know when their child is pregnant, and they need to be involved in the decision to have an abortion. They also said requiring parental consent would generate more information about abortions and possible complications afterward.

A bill before the committee would require physicians to get written consent from a girl's parent or legal guardian before performing the abortion, unless the girl is not living with a parent or guardian.

In addition, girls could still go to court to get permission for an abortion, and the proposal would allow for an abortion without consent in a medical emergency.

Spectators, some standing, packed the hearing room to listen to testimony. Opponents of the bill are scheduled to speak Wednesday.

Bill Gilfillan, a lobbyist for Kansans for Life, said a teen-age girl must have parental permission to have her ears pierced or to get an aspirin from a school nurse.

"Yet right now, state law does not require a teen-age girl to obtain parental consent to have an abortion," Gilfillan said. "Children, who in the eyes of the state do not have the necessary maturity to drive a car by themselves, are currently legally allowed to navigate this momentous decision alone."

Linda Heim, a Topeka nurse who counsels women and girls facing unwanted pregnancies, told the committee pregnant girls often are more concerned with social implications of their pregnancy rather than medical implications. Often, she said, they do not know about possible complications.

"Most of the girls are anticipating an emotional confrontation with their parents, which they dread," Heim said.

In addition, if parents were in on the decision to get an abortion, the girl might get more medical information, Heim said. Parents are not as timid as children in asking for information, and girls would not be afraid to seek additional medical treatment if complications arose, she said.

Mary Garberg, a spokeswoman for the greater Kansas City area chapter of Women Exploited By Abortion, said many girls are not prepared for the emotional and physical consequences of having an abortion. She said she knows women who had four abortions before the age of 18 and now are sterile.

"Some of the problems concerning the mental aftermath are nightmares," Garberg said.

Conferees also argued against abortion itself, calling it the taking of innocent life.

NASA engineer testifies in shuttle case

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A rocket booster expert testified Tuesday that on the night before the ill-fated Challenger explosion, "I did all I could to stop the launch" because of a predicted bitter cold night, but that his firm's management decided to approve it.

Roger Boisjoly, an engineer for Morton Thiokol, Inc. who deals in booster rocket structures, told a presidential investigating commission that not a single engineer in a private caucus of company officials on the eve of the space shuttle launch was in favor of going ahead the next morning.

"I have been distressed by things that are appearing in the paper," he said, describing that meeting. "There was never one positive pro-launch statement ever made, by anybody."

The engineer said he had expressed "deep concern" about launching after a night of sub-freezing temperatures. He said that when they were cold, the rubber-like O-ring seals between segments of the booster rockets would not fit properly into their seats.

"It's like trying to shove a brick into a crack instead of a sponge," he said.

Last month's Challenger launch was the coldest in the history of the nearly five-year-old shuttle program.

The shuttle was launched at 11:38 a.m. on Jan. 28 and exploded 73 seconds later, destroying the ship and killing all seven in its crew.

A leading theory of the accident is that the seals failed, allowing a deadly plume of flame to emerge from the side of the right booster rocket.

Boisjoly said a Thiokol engineering supervisor, Arnold Thompson, tried to sketch for Morton Thiokol management their concern with the joint.

"When he realized he wasn't getting through, he just stopped," Boisjoly said. "I was not even asked to give any input on the final decision chart...I was never asked nor polled, it was clearly a management decision at that point."

After Morton Thiokol management decided to recommend the launch, Boisjoly said, "I left the room feeling badly defeated, but feeling that I did all I could to stop the launch."

Boisjoly and Thompson said they both warned their management last summer about a potential catastrophe if problems with the seals on previous flights were not remedied.

Joe C. Kilminster, the Morton Thiokol vice president who finally signed the firm's recommendation that the launch proceed, said he did so because he was convinced that there was a sufficient safety factor in the seals.

"It led me to believe we were in a position of having a safe condition for recommending flight," he testified.

But earlier, Kilminster's boss, Morton Thiokol vice president Jerry Mason, had acknowledged under intense questioning that the company lacked "enough data to quantify the effect of the cold."

'Carmen' unites effects of film, opera in show

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

With his version of Bizet's "Carmen," Francesco Rosi has transformed opera into film, rather than having just filmed an opera. As movies, most operas remain staid, but Rosi opens up this one, filming it entirely on location in Spain.

Film Review

Some of the settings are natural stages, like the wind-carved cliffs of the third act and the bullfighting ring of the fourth. At other times the camera boldly moves along with the performers, past the white-washed buildings of Seville or through a maze-like cigar factory.

The settings are dramatically rendered but they never overpower the performers. The performers remain the focal point, as the opera demands.

Julia Mignies-Johnson is an incredibly sensual Carmen. She prances and struts, her hair frizzed out in a wide mane, and poor Don Jose — a very proper Corporal — can't resist her temptation. She rolls her hips and flashes her thighs and Don Jose becomes so bemused that his situation is comic.

Placido Domingo's Don Jose is purposefully bland. It's this blandness of his middle-class lifestyle that Carmen tries to break down. But she makes a mistake because once she breaks through his facade she doesn't find much that interests her. She must go on to her next love, but Don Jose remains in her path, a hulking mass of man. He's given up everything for her and thinks she owes him something in return.

Placido Domingo was also in Franco Zeffirelli's film version of "La Traviata." That film emphasized melodrama, saturating the screen with color and motion. Francesco Rosi's approach is more subdued. Whereas "La Traviata" was sentimental to the point of camp (and loads of fun at the same time), "Bizet's Carmen" is naturalistic. The film is still visually lavish, but it's missing the emotional excesses of "La Traviata."

To fit the film's naturalistic approach, Rosi uses the spoken dialogue, though sparsely, from Bizet's original version of the opera. He also fits the choruses in by way of voice-over. In these instances, the performers on film aren't always singing, but we hear their voices. This allows the characters to act realistically without being confined by the conventions of opera.

What might seem a bit blasphemous to opera purists allows the literality of film to meld with the larger-than-life qualities of opera.

Bill proposal would ensure small-town banking

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Speakers asked a House committee Tuesday to endorse a measure that would allow limited branch banking in Kansas towns that have lost their only banks.

Supporters of the measure told the House Commercial and Financial Institutions Committee the bill would ensure that citizens in small towns would have banking services. But a representative of a state bankers group said the bill puts too many restrictions on who could open such branch banks.

The bill would allow branch banking in towns with populations less than 1,000 when the only bank in the town has failed and no one submits bids to assume the bank after it goes into the receivership of the federal government or the state banking commissioner.

Under the measure, if there are not at least 10 banks in a county, the search for a bank to reopen the failed institution as a branch would be expanded to banks in contiguous counties or to the next tier of contiguous counties.

Bank holding companies that own three or more banks would not be able to establish a branch bank, and banks could have only two branches, according to the bill's terms.

In addition, the bill would be retroactive, allowing branch banking in Bronson, Dexter and Herndon, which lost banks in 1985. In all, 13 Kansas banks were declared insolvent last year. Kansas, Nebraska and Oklahoma led the nation in bank failures.

The Senate passed the bill, 38-2, two weeks ago.

Jim Warren, president of the Kansas Independent Bankers Association, said the legislation is designed to help community residents and not bankers. No one will be able to build a banking empire under the bill, he said.

"Nothing can be more devastating for a community than the loss of its sole financial institution," Warren said.

Sen. Neil Arasmith, the bill's sponsor, said the restrictions in the bill were designed to have branches established by banks closest to a town. Arasmith, R-Phillipsburg, said the measure would ensure branches were established by those with an interest in and understanding of a local community.

Arasmith also defended the population restriction, saying the towns with more than 1,000 residents could more easily attract a new, fully chartered bank.

"Having a chartered bank in a community is a lot better than having a branch facility," Arasmith said.

But Jim Maag, a lobbyist for the Kansas Bankers Association, recommended the committee remove the restrictions on population of the town, location of the bidding banks and number of banks in a multi-bank holding company.

Also, Maag said, the bill's restrictions on the number of banks a multi-bank holding company could control and still be eligible to open failed banks as a branch would not be effective if lawmakers are concerned about large holding companies establishing branch banks in small towns.

K-State back on track again, appears ready to reach peak

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

K-State Coach Jack Hartman believes his team may be ready to hit its peak.

Traditionally, Hartman-coached teams have played their best basketball at season's end. And, after two good performances — a win against Oklahoma State and a competitive loss to Kansas — Hartman says the Wildcats may be back on track again after a tough start in the Big Eight Conference season.

"I thought that early in our non-conference, we really played well, played with a lot of confidence. Then we opened the (Big Eight) season and had a lot of narrow losses and I think it really did a lot to destroy some confidence that we had built up," Hartman said.

"But I think we're back playing pretty good right now. Lynn Smith has made a stabilizing influence."

Smith has taken over the starting point guard spot from Benny Green for the last two games.

K-State returns from an 84-69 loss to KU Saturday at Lawrence. The Wildcats led the Jayhawks by one point at halftime and played even with KU for much of the game.

Perhaps as big a story as the KU game Saturday was the report in the Kansas City Times that questioned the eligibility of high-scoring Wildcat forward Norris Coleman during the first half of the season.

"The Norris Coleman eligibility question has been very distracting, needless to say — particularly to Norris," Hartman said. "It was very unfortunate. It's simply a matter of interpretation. Nobody has done anything wrong. It's an interpretation the NCAA will make."

Hartman said K-State made contact with the National Collegiate Athletics Association Saturday morning before leaving for Lawrence to verify Coleman's eligibility.

Hartman said he believes the controversy about Coleman may help the team in the end.

"Those are the things you have to deal with. They make you stronger if you get through them," he said.

While Hartman called the Coleman dispute a distraction, it didn't seem to affect the "Sarge's" performance against KU — at least in the second half. Coleman scored 21 points against the Jayhawks, 19 of those in the second half.

Missouri is coming off an eight day rest since its last game, a 71-62 home victory over second-place Iowa State, Feb. 18.

"Sometimes, those things (a long break) work to the advantage and disadvantage (of a team)," Hartman said. "I would rather at this time in the season continue to play than have a lengthy layoff."

Missouri has a 19-12 overall record, 6-6 in the Big Eight.

Missouri has a number of talented scorers, led by forward Derrick Chievous, one of the conference's premier players. Chievous averages 18.4 points and 7.6 rebounds per game. Not far behind Chievous are guard Jeff Strong at 18.0 points and forward Dan Bingenheimer at 15.5.

In the earlier meeting of the two teams at Ahearn Field House, the Tigers beat K-State, 74-70.

"The history of the series is that we win there and they win here (Columbia)," Missouri Coach Norm Stewart said. "We had a tough time there, and they (K-State) have good ball players. It's Jack's (Hartman) last year, and there's nothing he would like better than to win his last one here."

GAME NOTES: Game time at Hearn Arena is 8:05. The game will be broadcast locally by KMKF (101.7 FM)...Coleman continues to be K-State's leading scorer at almost 22 points per game. Joe Wright continues his consistent pace at over 18 points.

Kansas star's 30-point outing marks return to '84-'85 form

If he had to choose a favorite day of the week in which to play basketball, chances are Kansas forward Ron Kellogg would choose Saturday — or at least he would have chosen Saturday during the 1984-85 season.

Three Saturdays during the 1984-85 campaign were among Kellogg's best performances ever as a collegian. Let's take a look back.

It is Saturday, Feb. 2, 1985, and the Jayhawks are in Lincoln to take on the Nebraska Cornhuskers. Kellogg explodes for a career high 39 points, breaking the Devaney Sports Center record for most points scored in a single game, in leading Kansas to a 91-80 win.

One week later it was the same old story. It is Saturday, Feb. 9, 1985, and third-ranked Memphis State is at Allen Fieldhouse in Lawrence to battle the Jayhawks. Kellogg scores 34 points, 20 of which come in the second half, in leading KU to a 75-71 upset win.

More magic followed. It is Saturday, Feb. 23, 1985, and KU is playing host to fifth-ranked Oklahoma. Kellogg scores 34 points, 22 coming in the second half, in leading KU to yet another upset victory, 82-76.

Although last Saturday's win by KU over archrival K-State wasn't an upset — the 'Hawks entered the game ranked third in the nation and lived up to their billing — it was significant in that it marked the return of Kellogg's Saturday magic.

Kellogg scored 30 points in leading

DAVID SVOBEDA
Editor

KU to a 84-69 win over K-State and the Jayhawks' first Big Eight Conference title since 1978. It was a complete effort by the man they call "Special K."

Kellogg scored 14 points in the first half and 16 in the second, handed out three assists in the first half and six in the second and committed just four turnovers for the entire game.

The assists, according to Kansas guard Calvin Thompson, were the most exciting — if not downright shocking — part of Kellogg's effort Saturday.

"Those nine assists were unbelievable. Ronnie normally scores quite a few points but for him to have nine assists and 30 points in the same game is really great," Thompson said.

Kansas Coach Larry Brown agreed.

"I'm most proud that he got 30 points and all those assists," Brown said. "He's just got a gift."

A gift for shooting, that is. Brown said the weakest part of Kellogg's game involves what he does with the ball when he's not shooting it.

"Quite truthfully, ball handling is not one of Ronnie's strong points," Brown said. "I'm trying to give him some help in that area — trying to elevate his ball handling skills to a higher level."

Regardless of his ball handling weaknesses, Brown believes Kellogg is a legitimate National Basketball Association prospect. As a former NBA coach and a player in the now-defunct American Basketball Association, Brown should know what he's talking about.

"Ronnie can play big guard in the NBA," Brown said. "He's tough enough, durable enough and he has a great shot."

Kellogg credits Brown for much of his development as a player.

"Larry Brown is like a father to all of us," Kellogg said. "He's really worked with me on certain areas of my game that weren't strong points for me."

Brown takes little or no credit for the majority of Kellogg's successes, however.

"I might have told him what a good shot is from time to time, but I'm not a great coach for shooters — that has been particularly hard on both Ronnie and Calvin," Brown said.

Not hard enough, Kellogg said, to keep him from becoming a much better player in his years at Kansas. And if he could play every game on Saturday, Ron Kellogg just might be the best player ever to step on the court at Kansas.

Inconsistent women's team to face Tigers

By TONY CARBAJO
Sports Writer

The K-State Lady Cats hit the road for the final time in the regular season tonight when they meet Missouri at Columbia.

Since entering Big Eight Conference play, K-State has experienced somewhat of an up and down season, entering the game with a 15-10 overall record, 5-7 in the conference.

Missouri, 15-10 overall and 7-5 in the Big Eight, enters the game on the heels of a loss to league-leading Oklahoma Saturday.

The Lady Cats lost at Kansas Saturday. The loss damaged the team's chances for an upper division Big Eight finish and a home court advantage for the first round of the conference tournament.

The Lady Cats were without the services Saturday of last week's Big Eight Player of the Week, Carlisa Thomas. Thomas was ruled ineligible for the Kansas contest by the National Collegiate Athletics Association. A statement regarding her status will be issued this morning.

With the absence of Thomas, the Lady Cats are down to just seven players. K-State Coach Matilda Mossman has been forced to rotate the players in and out of the games to avoid foul trouble, keeping them as fresh as possible.

If Thomas is unable to play, Sue Leiding will play center for the Lady Cats.

In the first contest between the two teams, K-State jumped out to a 40-25 halftime lead and never looked back on the way to an 81-65 victory at Ahearn Field House. Since that contest however, the Tigers have dropped only two games and share second place in the Big Eight.

Mossman believes the Lady Cats will be facing an improved team tonight over the one they defeated in January.

"Since we defeated Missouri here, they lost to Colorado at home, won four straight, and lost at Oklahoma," Mossman said. "I think they are playing good basketball right now."

"The fact that we defeated them here becomes irrelevant because of the way we are playing and the fact that we have to play them at their place. I think we have to continue to score well to beat them."

In victories over Iowa State and Oklahoma State, the Lady Cats have had as many as five or six players score in double figures.

GAME NOTES: Game time tonight is at 5:45, preceding the men's game...The game will be broadcast live on WIBW (580 AM)...Thomas led K-State in the earlier game against Missouri, scoring 20 points. Renee Kelly paced the Tigers with 28 points.

Duke gains top spot; KU jumps to No. 2

By The Associated Press

Duke basketball Coach Mike Krzyzewski said he's happy that his Blue Devils are ranked No. 1 in the nation, but he's more concerned with his team staying No. 1 in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

"To have Duke No. 1 in anything is nice," Krzyzewski said. "But we're much more concerned with what's going on in our conference this week. We're in first place in the ACC and that's the No. 1 we're concerned about."

Duke became the third team — all from the ACC — to hold the No. 1 spot in The Associated Press this season as the Blue Devils jumped over North Carolina in the latest rankings released Tuesday.

Duke, 27-2, received 62 of the 64 first-place votes and 1,278 points from a nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters. The Blue Devils joined Georgia Tech, which was No. 1 in the preseason poll, and North Carolina, which held the top spot each of the 13 weeks in the voting since the season began.

In four of the past five weeks, the Tar Heels were unanimous choices.

The Blue Devils posted two victories last week, beating Miami, Fla. 104-82 and then-No. 10 Oklahoma, 93-84. Duke, which plays at Clemson Wednesday night, is 10-2 in the ACC.

Kansas, 27-3, jumped from third to second in the poll with 1,181 points and one first-place vote. The Jayhawks clinched the Big Eight regular-season title with an 84-69 victory over Kansas State Saturday. Monday night, the Jayhawks beat Oklahoma on the road 87-80.

North Carolina received the other first-place vote and 1,140 points after suffering two losses last week. The Tar Heels, 25-3, were beaten at home by Maryland 77-72 in overtime and fell to then-No. 20 North Carolina State 76-65.

Georgia Tech, 21-4, moved up one notch from last week to fourth with 1,077 points, while Kentucky, 24-3 and winners of the Southeastern Conference regular-season title, reached its highest ranking of the season at No. 5 with 979 points. The Wildcats were 93 points in front of No. 6 Syracuse, 22-3, which held on Sunday for a 64-63 nationally televised victory over then-No. 13 Georgetown.

Memphis State, St. John's, Nevada-Las Vegas and Michigan rounded out the Top Ten.

NCAA director calls for changes in recruiting

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Recruiting is the only thing wrong with college sports, and alumni and boosters must be dissociated from athletic programs, NCAA Executive Director Walter Byers said Tuesday.

"The only weakness we have is in the area of recruiting," Byers told a group of sports writers and coaches who attended the National Collegiate Athletics Association's annual College Football Preview.

"The contest, as I see it, is essentially whether the presidents and chancellors uphold the stewardship of higher education and set the policy for college athletics or whether a minority of unscrupulous coaches and inflated, immature boosters and alumni are going to set the policy."

Byers threw his support behind a Southwest Conference amendment, proposed and then withdrawn at last month's NCAA convention, which would have limited all recruiting contacts to a school's staff members.

Current rules prohibit what the NCAA terms "representatives of an institution's athletic interests" — i.e., alumni, boosters — from any off-campus recruiting.

Byers called the action of the NCAA Presidents Commission at last June's special convention in pushing through tougher penalties for major rules violations "a good first half."

Coach Grant Teaff of Baylor University said the SWC legislation was withdrawn for lack of support but would be resubmitted at the 1987 convention after considerable reworking.

"I'm for it in principle," Teaff said, "but, for example, 90-95 percent of our players get their summer jobs through alumni. That's just one of the things that has to be clarified."

Iowa State topples Cowboys

AMES, Iowa — Sophomore Jeff Grayer poured in 25 points as Iowa State cruised to a 76-61 Big Eight Conference basketball victory over Oklahoma State Tuesday.

The victory, which clinched a second-place league finish for the Cyclones, was Iowa State's 17th straight win over two seasons at home, gave Iowa State its first unbeaten home schedule in school history.

Ron Virgil added 12 points while reserve Tom Schafer added 10 for the Cyclones.

Terry Faggins led Oklahoma State with 22 points and Alan Banister added 12.

The Cyclones took advantage of three early turnovers to jump to an 8-0 lead as Sam Hill hit his first three shots and Jeff Hornacek the fourth. But Oklahoma State scored 10 straight to grab its only lead, 12-10, on a shot by Faggins with five minutes played.

Oklahoma State could come no closer than seven points after trailing 39-30 at halftime.

Iowa State improved its record to 9-4 in the conference and 18-8 overall while the Cowboys dropped to 5-8 and 14-12.

Nets' guard banned from NBA

NEW YORK — New Jersey Nets guard Micheal Ray Richardson was permanently banned from the National Basketball Association Tuesday after testing positive for cocaine, Commissioner David Stern said.

Stern called it "a tragic day for Micheal Ray Richardson, nothing less than the destruction by cocaine of a once-flourishing career."

A player who is disqualified is eligible for reinstatement in two years.

"However, the reinstatement is not automatic. In order to be reinstated, it must be approved by both the NBA and the Players Association," Stern said.

Richardson, whom Stern said was tested Monday night, is the second NBA player banned from the league since its drug agreement with the union was instituted in January 1984. John Drew of the Utah Jazz was kicked out of the league last month for a similar infraction.

Early last month, when Richardson tested positive for drug use after a five-day disappearance, the league ruled that it constituted his second violation, although he had twice previously undergone treatment.

Economic, political problems confront Aquino, Philippines

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Corazon Aquino, the self-effacing widow who inspired millions of Filipinos to drive a president from power, now must sit down to grapple with the economic and political turmoil troubling her nation.

Aquino, who took up her husband's political mission after he was assassinated, mounted a "people's power" revolution backed by the Roman Catholic Church and much of the business community. It promises a far different style of government than Ferdinand E. Marcos led during two decades as president.

She already has accomplished something that eluded experienced politicians: unifying an opposition that was divided and demoralized by Marcos' dominance of Philippine life.

"We must get somebody who is almost the complete opposite of what Mr. Marcos is," the 53-year-old Aquino said in announcing her presidential candidacy last Dec. 3, the day after 25 military men and a civilian were acquitted in the 1983 assassination of her husband, Benigno S. Aquino Jr.

In the aftermath of Marcos' ouster Tuesday, one of those acquitted men, Maj. Gen. Prospero Olivas, suddenly appeared on television with newly promoted Chief of Staff Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, Aquino's military chief.

But dealing with men once accused of killing her husband — she said Marcos was always her No. 1 suspect — may be the least of her problems.

From Marcos, she inherited a $26 billion foreign debt, a sliding Philippine currency, increasing inflation, widespread poverty, apparently endemic corruption in government, a discredited judicial system, an often-hated military, a constitution designed for Marcos, and a growing Communist insurgency.

Her accession to power also poses new problems: The existing Philippine Parliament is controlled by Marcos partisans opposed to her, and her own support covers such a wide political spectrum that many inevitably will be dissatisfied with her performance.

Filipinos

thing to do. There has always been fraud (in the elections). This is not the first time."

Patron, who left the Philippines when he was 3, said Marcos leaving has been a long time coming.

"You can sort of feel it — that his reign would come to an end," he said.

He said it was a matter of time after the last election when Marcos put all people opposing him in asylum or in jail where they could do him no harm.

"There was no way Marcos would allow himself to lose," he said. "I don't think Marcos would do that. I didn't think it would come to bloodshed. I knew he couldn't do that — that he's going to step down sooner or later."

He said when Marcos' top aides left it would be similar to a domino effect.

"When he called his backers in to fight it was an intimidation tactic," he said.

Aquino will probably not stay in the presidency long, he said.

"My mom has this feeling that Aquino will not serve her full term — that she will turn it over to her running mate (Salvador H.) Laurel," he said. "She does not know that much politically."

Upon hearing that Marcos had fled the Malacanang Palace to Clark Air Base, Patron said, "they're running like rabbits."

"There was widespread fraud — the vote count was bogus," he said. "He can control the election."

Patron said this incident should help Philippine and U.S. relations.

"There's a lot the Marcos government is hiding from the United States," he said.

Paulsen said she believes life will get back to normal in the Philippines.

"Life goes on — there may be disruption as far as business, but people go on with life and such," she said.

Associated Press photographer Bullit Marquez saw one body in the lobby.

Aquino's military commander ordered soldiers to prevent looting or violence against Marcos loyalists.

Increasing U.S. pressure combined with the military and civil revolt to end Marcos' rule. He fled to the U.S. air base 50 miles northwest of Manila barely nine hours after a last hurrah of being formally sworn in for another six-year term.

Aquino took the oath as president in a rival ceremony.

Chief Pentagon spokesman Robert Sims said in Washington that the Marcoses would spend the night at Clark base, but "I do not know what their plans are thereafter."

Maj. Thomas Boyd, a Clark public affairs officer, said they stayed in the Distinguished Visitors Quarters.

Official word of the resignation came first from Washington. Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Marcos, a U.S. ally throughout his presidency, would be "welcome to come to the United States."

In announcing U.S. recognition of Aquino, 53, Shultz said: "The new government has been produced by one of the most stirring and courageous examples of the democratic process in modern history."

ecutives were indicted by a grand jury on charges they plotted to hide cost overruns on the ill-fated Sgt. York anti-aircraft gun — before Beggs joined the space agency.

But Beggs since has told associates he recognized the need to step aside so NASA could regroup in the wake of last month's shuttle disaster.

The criminal case has yet to come to trial. In the interim, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration has been run by acting administrator William Graham.

Aquino seeks to end guerrilla warfare

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — President Corazon Aquino said Wednesday she will seek a cease-fire with communist guerrillas but not the extradition of Ferdinand E. Marcos, who was driven into exile by her "people power" revolt.

Salvador H. Laurel, the new vice president, announced plans for a general political amnesty and said the insurgents are not truly communists, but people Marcos forced into fighting.

Government television announced that a military committee was preparing a list of anti-Marcos political prisoners to be freed Thursday, which it said might include about 50 percent of those held.

Aquino, who blames Marcos for the assassination of her husband, Benigno, in 1983, told a news conference: "I have said I can be magnanimous in victory. I would like to show by example that the sooner we can forget our hurt, then the easier it will be for our country to start rebuilding from the ruins left us."

She also announced her Cabinet appointments at the news conference, and said Laurel will serve as prime minister and foreign minister.

American helicopters took Marcos, who had ruled this 7,100-island archipelago for two decades, to Clark Air Base on Tuesday night. He and his party were flown to Hawaii by the U.S. Air Force after a stop in Guam.

Aquino met with 11 members of the Marcos government Wednesday, including Prime Minister Cesar Virata, and asked them to stay on until her appointees receive National Assembly approval. She also included some Marcos men in her new government.

"Let's forget the past," she said.

Marcos, 68, was brought down by a fraud-tainted presidential election which Aquino refused to concede, combined with U.S. pressure and a military-civil revolt.

Aquino said she would not ask the United States to extradite Marcos, whom she has called an "old dictator."

Her husband, Marcos' chief political rival, was shot dead at the Manila airport in 1983 as he returned from three years of voluntary exile in the United States.

Gen. Fabian C. Ver, Marcos' armed forces commander, and 25 others were acquitted of conspiracy in the slaying. Ver fled the country with Marcos.

Aquino, 53, said a new Commission on Good Government would investigate alleged illegal transfers of wealth from the country by Marcos and his associates.

The commission also will study how to resolve the assassination of her husband, while another special commission will study constitutional reform, she said.

U.S. plane transports Marcos to Honolulu

By The Associated Press

HONOLULU — Exiled former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos arrived in this island state Wednesday to take refuge in "dignity and comfort."

A U.S. Air Force transport landed at Hickam Air Force Base carrying Marcos, his wife, three children and three grandchildren and their entourage on a flight from Andersen Air Force Base, Guam where they had stayed in Guam for 13 hours after fleeing their homeland.

Marcos, whose health has been reported as poor, walked slowly from the plane on his own after being helped down a steep set of steps by Air Force officers.

They were followed from the starkly painted four engine jet by supporters and relatives, including a number of children, and after brief greetings from Ariyoshi and military officers, were lead to a line of waiting cars to be taken to temporary military living quarters.

There has been speculation that Marcos owns property in Hawaii, but no property is known to be registered in his name.

Reagan discourages military reduction, applauds Filipinos

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan declared Wednesday that it would be "reckless, dangerous and wrong" for Congress to reduce his $320 billion military budget request, saying cuts "could fatally compromise our negotiating position" with the Soviets.

Military spending cuts would be "backsliding of the most irresponsible kind," he said in a nationally broadcast speech. Democrats, in reaction, were critical and even Republicans said the budget was sure to be reduced.

Trying to reverse dwindling public and congressional support for his 5-year-old defense buildup, Reagan argued that "American power is the indispensable element in a peaceful world."

Congress already has "undercut our negotiators" at the Geneva arms talks by banning tests of anti-satellite weapons and unilaterally giving the Soviets "a concession they could not win at the bargaining table," the president said.

In a bluntly worded address prepared for national broadcast from the Oval Office, Reagan said to cut defense now is "not cheap (and) it's not safe."

"Just as we are sitting down at the bargaining table with the Soviet Union, let's not throw America's trump card away," Reagan said.

In a brief reference to the ouster of Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos and his replacement by Corazon Aquino — his first public statement on the switch — Reagan applauded the "remarkable restraint shown by both sides to prevent bloodshed during these last tense days."

"Our hearts and hands are with President Aquino and her new government as they set out to meet the challenges ahead," he said. "Today, the Filipino people celebrate the triumph of democracy, and the world celebrates with them."

House Democratic leader Jim Wright, giving his party's response to Reagan's address, said the president's defense budget must be cut to protect the nation from another danger — huge deficits.

"We think the deficits themselves pose a danger to our national security," Wright said in remarks prepared for broadcast after the president's speech.

Wright said if Congress approves the 11.9 percent boost in authorized military spending that Reagan seeks for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, "we'd be spending almost four times as much on the military by the end of this decade as the nation spent during the height of the Vietnam War."

Wright criticized "glaring waste."

Interviews continue in presidential search

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

The Presidential Search Committee, in what could be its final meeting, will convene in executive session on Sunday in Topeka to interview and evaluate the remaining candidates for the presidency of the University.

No final list of candidates for the position, which President Duane Acker will vacate at the end of June, has been drawn up, search committee Chairman Jerome Frieman said Tuesday.

"Each of us have our own view of the people, but the committee has made no decision," Frieman said.

The 15-member search committee had planned to interview all of the candidates Feb. 22-25, but elected to convene for a final session on March 2. The delay will prevent the committee from finishing its work by a self-imposed deadline of March 1.

"March 1 was a target, and the next meeting will be on March 2, obviously we're not going to make it. What happens after that? I don't know. The committee may be able to finish, or it may not," said Frieman, associate professor of psychology.

The face-to-face interviews are the final opportunity for the search committee to review the candidates for the $92,000-a-year post before submitting a list of three to five finalists to the Kansas Board of Regents on or before April 1. The regents will interview the finalists and make the selection.

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Board of Regents, said Friday that the regents would meet in closed session on March 21 and 22 at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City to interview the finalists.

It is uncertain whether the search committee's revised interview plans will alter the interview schedule established by the regents.

Frieman said publication of a list of semifinalists for the presidency in the Feb. 8 Wichita Eagle-Beacon has not resulted in a substantial increase in the Senate rejects agriculture board change

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Senate Wednesday rejected Gov. John Carlin's proposed reorganization of the State Board of Agriculture; but approved a school finance bill which would provide state teachers with average pay raises of 3 percent next year.

The actions in the Senate topped activity as the 1986 session of the Legislature reached the halfway mark. Wednesday was the 45th day of the scheduled 90-day session.

The Senate also passed 11 bills besides the school funding measure; and gave tentative approval to an appropriations bill which would provide the Judicial Department more than $40 million for its operations next fiscal year.

However, the Senate did not act as expected on a bill authorizing $250,000 for a feasibility study on a proposed new east-west superhighway across southeast Kansas. A somewhat red-faced Senate president Robert V. Talkington confessed he had inadvertently forgotten to send the bill to the Senate Ways and Means Committee for clearance of the expenditure, as Senate rules require.

It asks the Kansas Turnpike Authority to contract for the study to pick the best possible route and traffic potential on a new road from

State teachers to receive pay increase roughly Wichita to the corner of the state near Joplin, Mo.

The House, meanwhile, gave final approval to a pair of appropriation bills, then tentatively approved during debate a measure which would nullify the action of the 1984 Legislature and keep Kansas' automobile license plates as they are now as far as county and alphabetical designations.

The Senate's overwhelming rejection of Carlin's executive order to reorganize the State Board of Agriculture, 29-11, came as no surprise, but spokesmen for the governor vowed the fight may not be over this session.

Five Democrats joined the 24 Senate Republicans to adopt a resolution disapproving the order, which Carlin submitted to the Legislature Feb. 10.

All 11 votes against the resolution to reject came from Democrats, who charged that Republicans had turned it into a partisan political issue to the detriment of Kansas agriculture.

Republican senators countered there is no support from the people to change the Board of Agriculture from a policy body to an advisory body, nor any support for having the state agriculture secretary appointed by the governor rather than named by the board.

The rejection resolution kills this order. The House has an identical resolution of disapproval, with 69 sponsors. However, Rep. Lloyd Polson, R-Vermillion, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, said it would not be taken up in the House because the Senate action ended the matter.

Despite the defeat, a spokesman said Carlin believes the issue is not dead.

"The governor believes this has been a dark day for agriculture," said Mike Swenson, Carlin's press secretary. "This issue was politicized by the Republicans when it didn't need to be."

Passed 39-1 by the Senate and sent to the House was a school finance bill allowing local school districts to raise their budgets 1 percent of 3 percent next year, depending on level of local expenditures. Also passed by that chamber, 29-10, was a proposal to ensure attorneys who steal money from their clients to receive stiff penalties.

The traditional county designations on Kansas license plates would be retained under one of 12 bills tentatively approved after debate in the House. It would overturn a law passed by the 1984 Legislature that calls for scrapping the old county designations in January 1988 along with the larger initials that designate the month the tags expire.

Senate set for voting

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate will vote for senate chairperson, senate vice chairperson and the senate representative to faculty senate at its meeting tonight at 7 in the Union Big Eight room.

Nominations for senate chair were heard at the Feb. 20 meeting with the only nominee being Sally Traeger, junior in marketing.

Further nominations for senate chair, as well as for the other positions, will be taken at the meeting.

Each candidate will be given a time to speak, immediately followed by questions from senate.

Navy surgeon found guilty in trial

WASHINGTON — Navy surgeon Donal M. Billig was convicted Wednesday on two counts of involuntary manslaughter and one count of negligent homicide in the deaths of patients in open heart operations at Bethesda Naval Hospital.

He was found innocent of two charges of involuntary manslaughter in the deaths of two other patients.

Billig stood silently between his two military attorneys as the jury foreman, Rear Adm. Harry S. Quast, read the verdict of the jury of nine Navy officers.

The judge, Capt. Philip Roberts, said the court would reconvene on Monday to begin hearing evidence before the jury decides on a sentence.

Billig, 55, the former chief of heart surgery at Bethesda Naval Hospital, was charged with five counts of involuntary manslaughter in the deaths of patients during or soon after open-heart operations in 1983 and 1984.

School district kills capital outlay

LAKIN — A special capital outlay levy that would have raised nearly $250,000 during the next school year has been defeated in a mail ballot in the Lakin School District.

Sources in the southwest Kansas district said the measure — which failed 599-386 — was defeated because of wrangling over the school board decision not to renew a school principal's contract.

Ballots were sent to 1,358 voters Feb. 6 and the deadline for return of ballots was noon Tuesday. Kearny County Clerk Leona Randolph said 80 percent of the ballots were returned in the county's first mail-in vote. About 8 percent of the ballots were invalid, she said.

Voters were asked for continued permission by the school district to levy up to four mills for capital outlay — repairs, renovation and remodeling — during the next five years.

The school district has had the authority to levy up to four mills for the past five years, and in September the board said in a published notice that it planned to continue the levy for the next five years. A petition challenging the action was filed and prompted the special election.

Some school district patrons said the negative vote was a reaction to the decision Feb. 4 not to renew the contract of Lakin High School Principal Daryl Olson.

Leopard killed following attack

GREAT BEND — A 16-year-old, 125-pound leopard that had been in a zoo since it was a cub was killed by a zoo employee after it leaped seven feet to the roof of its cage and attacked one of its keepers.

Keeper Mike Brown had opened a ceiling hatch Tuesday to drop feed into the cage at the city-owned Brit Spaugh Zoo when the cat leaped from the floor and attacked him.

Brown, 38, and the cat fell to the floor behind the cage in a public access area, at a time when the zoo had a number of visitors, and keeper Doug Burt grabbed a rifle and killed the leopard.

Brown was in stable condition Wednesday at the Central Kansas Medical Center after surgery for head wounds.

The cat was just a few months old when it was purchased for the zoo by the Great Bend High School Key Club.

English remains widely spoken

LONDON — English is still the world's most widely spoken language — ahead of Mandarin, Spanish and Hindi, said a study published Wednesday.

English is spoken by an estimated 1 billion people, or about one-fourth of the world's population, according to the book "The Right Word at the Right Time," published by Reader's Digest.

Next on the list was Mandarin, China's national language, with 800 million speakers, it said.

Mandarin is followed by Spanish, with about 250 million speakers. Hindi is spoken by an estimated 200 million people, and Arabic, Bengali and Russian by about 150 million people each, the book said.

Craft transmits pictures of Earth

PARIS — Spot, the French earth observation satellite launched last week by Europe's Ariane rocket, has sent back its first photos of the Earth's surface, officials here said Wednesday.

Officials of the French National Center for Space Studies said the computer-enhanced pictures received Sunday were of "superb precision."

They said black-and-white photos of Nice, France, showed streets and buildings clearly, and color photos of an area south of Algiers, Algeria, showed an oasis and the geological structure of the surrounding desert.

Spot, which was launched Friday in a north-south polar orbit, is intended as a commercial venture which will compete with the U.S. Landsat series of satellites.

Director calls for aid for homeless

LOS ANGELES — Producer-director Paul Mazursky says county officials have a "moral obligation" to help the homeless in Los Angeles.

Mazursky, the producer of the popular movie "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," on Tuesday asked the Board of Supervisors for more county aid as about 400 transients demonstrated at the county's Hall of Administration.

Entertainers Jean Stapleton and Paul Winfield joined Mazursky in the appeal.

Mazursky said he studied the problems of the homeless in his research for the film, which stars Richard Dreyfuss and Bette Midler as wealthy Beverly Hills homeowners and Nick Nolte as a homeless man.

Comedian wants 'brotherly love'

PHILADELPHIA — Comedian Bill Cosby is asking his hometown to show that it's still the City of Brotherly Love despite recent racial incidents that gained national attention.

The star of the top-rated "The Cosby Show" taped two public-service radio messages to be broadcast in the metropolitan area on behalf of the Coalition for the Reaffirmation of Brotherly Love, the coalition said Tuesday.

The coalition of business and community groups enlisted Cosby in its campaign to promote racial harmony in the city.

In the radio spots, Cosby asks the public to send in examples of Philadelphia neighborhoods where people are living in racial and religious harmony.

AIDS Committee to outline proposals

By GARY BORN
Collegian Reporter

In an effort to speed up the process of developing a University Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome policy, the University AIDS Committee decided Wednesday that members will begin writing individual proposals. Members will discuss their proposals at the next meeting.

"I think we would be better off if we outlined what needs to be contained in our policy and write it down rather than going back to the blackboard and that way we'll have something concrete to discuss," said Dorothy Thompson, assistant University attorney.

Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center, said Lafene will have to come up with its own policy and cannot wait for an all-University policy to be passed. Lafene will make a proposal at their weekly meeting today.

The policy at Lafene is a health-service policy and it will not interfere with the policy determined by the committee, he said.

"It is not likely that we will handle the situation any differently than what we do with Hepatitis-B," Tout said.

Since AIDS was initially identified by the Centers for Disease Control in 1981, the number of cases reported in Kansas has increased. One case was reported in each year for 1982 and 1983. In 1984 two were reported, and through mid-December 1985 12 cases of AIDS have been reported.

In Kansas, 11 of these people are known to have died, including all cases reported prior to 1985.

The test is not for the detection of AIDS but instead for the detection of the antibody HTLV-III, the disease germ. The results of the test show whether an individual has been exposed to the antibody HTLV-III. Those individuals with the antibody may be infectious, and they may or may not come down with AIDS.

Positive results indicate the person has been exposed to the antibody for HTLV-III, but may never actually develop the disease AIDS.

Tout said he did not know if the cases in Riley County are positive for the disease.

Ag secretary to give speech at Kansas bankers' meeting

By The Collegian Staff

Acting Secretary of Agriculture Frank Naylor Jr. will address the Kansas Bankers Association's agriculture conference today in the Union Ballroom.

Naylor replaced John Norton, who resigned last week as acting secretary after just five days on the job. Both Norton and Naylor were named to hold down the post while Richard Lyng awaits Senate confirmation to succeed John Block as secretary of agriculture.

Naylor, 47, a native of Mulvane and a 1961 graduate of the University of Kansas, has served since May 1981 as undersecretary for small community and rural development programs in the USDA.

The acting secretary will deliver a verbal "Report from Washington" to bankers attending the conference's breakfast meeting at 8 a.m.

President Duane Acker, who will leave the post at the end of June, has been mentioned as a possible successor to Lyng in the USDA's No. 2 job — deputy secretary of agriculture.

Jardine council to conduct survey

By RON RENO
Collegian Reporter

The Jardine Terrace Mayors' Council met Wednesday evening at the Pittman Building to discuss distribution of a random survey concerning changes in the current pet policy at Jardine.

The council decided to present the survey to residents of one-fourth of the more than 500 apartments at Jardine.

"What we're interested in is finding out how residents feel about pets," said Sheldon Klassen, executive mayor of the six-person council.

The council also determined the surveys would be presented during the next week to each selected apartment by one of the six mayors. The mayors will be accompanied by a resident representing those who want a change in the policy.

The proposed policy, which would allow the ownership of cats in Jardine, will also be given to residents in the survey.

Tracy Schemper, freshman in business administration, expressed her displeasure on Monday that the survey would not be presented to all the apartments. Schemper originally led the movement to change the policy but has since relinquished that position.

"I'm upset with the random sampling and I don't think that it's fair," Schemper said. "I think that it will cause problems in the future for the people who didn't get to voice their opinions."

The 10-question survey has inquiries which include whether the respondent is for or against the ownership of dogs and cats in Jardine and what changes he or she would make in the proposed policy.

Even though the proposed policy would continue to forbid the ownership of dogs in Jardine, the survey includes items on dogs so residents can voice their opinion on the matter, said Jardine resident Sue Nelson, freshman in veterinary medicine and leader of the movement.

The council decided to include one more question on the survey after Mayor Nabombe Chinonge said those who do not want the policy changed were not being included in the survey.

The question will ask residents who do not own pets if they would move out of Jardine if the new policy was implemented.

The next council meeting will be at 7 p.m. Wednesday at Pittman.

Life's little perks deserve gratitude

A letter to the editor the other day got me thinking about all the good stuff in life. If you're in a bad mood and have no desire to be cheered up, read no further.

If, on the other hand, you could stand an infusion of happy thoughts, then read on. It's time to lighten up.

What a great week we've had so far. The weather has been terrific. The colds we've all had are finally starting to die off (for which I am eternally grateful). And best of all, spring break is less than two weeks away.

At the imminent risk of adopting the repulsive practice of "roses and road apples," let's pause and, well, smell the roses.

Many people have plans for spring break, skiing and Padre Island topping the list as usual. I'm looking forward to spending several days in Dallas and Bentonville, Ark., at the Bella Vista resort, where I'll be playing at least 18 holes of golf every day. Now that's the way to spend spring break.

For most of us, the first round of exams is finished, and we have a little respite before plunging back into the fray. If they didn't go well (trust me, it happens) then at least you've got another couple of shots at it.

Here's some good news: Ferdinand Marcos is history; in the archives. Let's face it — the guy was a 24-carat slimeball. I wonder sometimes what effect the new Philippine President Corazon Aquino's absolute lack of governing experience will have on that country, but, my liberal friends assure me, anyone is better than ol' Ferd.

Despots are no fun at all, as any Ugandan, Filipino, Haitian, South African or Nicaraguan will tell you. In fact, a despot can wreck your whole week.

And what's more, the Challenger investigation is producing results more effectively than any committee I've ever observed. If they can stay away from pointing too many fingers, I'll wager a space shuttle is launched within a year.

The Soviets are having their party congress, for whatever that's worth. Maybe Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev will work a few miracles with the old fogies, and the Allies can stop squabbling, then our kids won't be nuked until they glow.

Speaking of nukes, I am reminded that there are a few things we can do without.

Bumperstickers, for starters. I am beyond caring about most of the issues that make good bumpersticker fodder. Please don't tell the world, "Don't honk, I'm peddling as fast as I can."

Am I the only one who hates waterbed stores that create and produce their own advertisements? It ought to be a criminal offense, punishable by removal of tongue, eyes, ears and vocal cords, to make an advertisement mentioning "Crazy Bob," "Megaman" or "Col. Billy."

Furthermore, I suggest legislation that will make it a felony to play the same song on the radio more than once every four hours.

Still, we can be grateful that we have a free press, the right of free speech and assembly and jury trials, all of which are frequently taken for granted. No one can force us, at gunpoint, to watch "The Wheel of Fortune" or "Gimme a Break."

Just keep on keeping on. Easier said than done, I know, but there's no sense in moping. No good has ever come of feeling sorry for yourself — and yes, thank you, I can speak from experience.

Just hang in there, drink plenty of fluids, get some rest, read a good book, steal a kiss from your girl or guy, pet a kitty-cat, get some sun, play a little golf and — love somebody. Ok?

Miranda rule protects rights of the accused

U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese and the Justice Department are examining a way to change the 1966 Miranda rule, which requires police officers to inform people under arrest that they have the right to remain silent, the right to an attorney and that any statement they make may be used against them. This ruling was made to secure the privilege against self-incrimination.

Meese has said he believes the Miranda rule places too many restrictions on officers when conducting an investigation, and that the procedures followed in keeping with the Miranda ruling interfere with law enforcement activity.

Supporters of the Miranda ruling believe that law enforcement is more efficient when evidence is gathered independently, rather than through lengthy interrogations of the accused.

A Supreme Court ruling last year permitted the introduction of illegally obtained evidence into the courtroom because the officers demonstrated good faith in their procedures. Meese claims this ruling is one victory for justice.

What Meese is seeking is a broader area in which officers can work so as not to jeopardize the use of valid evidence in the courts.

While speaking to the International Brotherhood of Police Officers, Meese said the founding fathers "believed in the balance between the rights of the accused and the rights of law-abiding citizens."

A relaxing of the Miranda rule could invite infractions on the rights of the accused.

Informing an accused person of his or her rights is a fundamental necessity for a democratic society. Officers need not see investigative efforts wasted because they fail to conform to the Miranda ruling. If law enforcement officials abide by the stipulations of Miranda, the rights of the accused will be assured just as the rights of accusers are protected.

GM supplies legal aid to non-white workers

The General Motors Corp. announced Sunday it would provide legal aid to any non-white employee charged with swimming at segregated beaches in South Africa.

GM's contention is that the corporation pays taxes to support the beaches at Port Elizabeth, yet 60 percent of its employees are prohibited from using them. GM employs 3,000 people at its Port Elizabeth plant, including 1,800 black and mixed-race people.

GM is to be commended for its action. The corporation is taking a risk because its products are no doubt more frequently purchased by whites in South Africa than by blacks. On the other hand, the move could benefit GM in America, where anti-apartheid sentiment is high.

Regardless of GM's motives, the move is a positive step by a large American corporation in the ongoing struggle to reform the South African government's policy of strict racial segregation.

According to a Johannesburg newspaper, GM's action is the first significant anti-apartheid measure taken by a foreign company operating in the republic.

Since this is the first action of its kind, the response from the government should be monitored. If providing legal aid to non-white GM employees moderates the government's practice of segregation and discrimination, other U.S. companies should follow the example.

Swimming at a public beach, regardless of the location, should be a right of all people — white, black, and in between.

Election in '88 to reflect the past

The 1988 presidential election is gearing up as aspiring politicians begin conducting litmus tests in cities and towns to measure support among the voters. Politics will once again dominate our newspapers and television newscasts. We should prepare ourselves for what is about to transpire.

If elections, as economist John Galbraith said, are really exercises in choosing between the disastrous and the unpalatable, the campaign will be quite long. Let's hope it is not.

As New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, Vice President George Bush, Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, New York Rep. Jack Kemp, Colorado Sen. Gary Hart, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, former Tennessee Sen. Howard Baker and others battle it out during the next two years, we shall hear and read much about the candidates and their strategy for success.

The media will love this campaign. It will sell loads of advertising. It's a symbiotic relationship, however. The number of well-orchestrated political rallies covered on the evening news and the quantity of ink devoted to the antics of presidential contenders in the pages of newspapers and magazines, will have a strong impact on who resides in the White House at the turn of the decade.

Some candidates will fail to peak the curocity of the media, or to build a strong base of support, and fall by the wayside.

Long before the presidential campaign ends in September 1988, a winner will be "declared" and fingers will be pointed at the "losers." However, there will be no repeat of Harry Truman's "surprise" victory. These days, technology is sophisticated enough to digest the information and spit out a winner.

Election coverage has advanced considerably in the last 20 years. In 1963, election day, the networks predicted a Reagan victory early in the afternoon. Jimmy Carter's concession before the polls closed on the West Coast reportedly hurt the candidacy of Democrats running in local elections.

The urge to announce an early winner, will never diminish, and we should anticipate another early announcement in '88.

Political blunders will also receive attention. In 1976, the media made selective use of blunders and slips of the tongue. TV performer Johnny Carson finally announced, "I have a late score from the newsroom. Jimmy Carter is ahead of Gerald Ford, two blunders to one."

The string of silly statements made by President Reagan in 1980 and 1984 will never be forgotten. In 1988, the media should work diligently to expose candidates who shamelessly produce "factoids" — unchecked facts — to sell their candidacy.

As in the past, the winner will be the politician who says what everybody is thinking most often and says it in the loudest voice. Perhaps during this election the media can pay more attention to the people who walk quietly. It would at least be a diversion from the past.

Letters

Studying pet policy

Editor,
Re: Curtis Harris' letter, "Shredding furniture," and John P. Spicer's letter, "Pet laws just fine," in the Feb. 25 Collegian:

I would like to urge people to review the final draft of the pet policy for Jardine Terrace before making any judgments.

In reference to Spicer's letter, I would like to remind him that the Collegian did publish a correction concerning the petition for pets. It stated that only 10 buildings (240 apartments) were able to be petitioned before the mayor's meeting. There were 111 apartments represented by this petition. Keeping in mind that several tenants were not home and that several apartments were vacant, a majority does indeed seem to have been met.

In reference to Harris' letter, I would like to suggest that housing maintenance review the new policy. I feel it adequately covers any of the department's objections by requiring mandatory declawing, vaccination, worming, neutering and the wearing of flea collars.

The new policy is for small caged animals and cats only. These are to be kept strictly indoors. The policy also covers areas such as registration, enforcement and fines. If housing maintenance still has doubts about the policy, I suggest it contact local or K-State veterinarians to verify the effectiveness of these procedures.

The people who have proposed this policy are not just being sentimental. It is estimated that at least 100 "illegal" cats are now living in Jardine. If I were a parent with children here, it would be these "illegal" cats and strays that would concern me the most. We feel this policy offers a viable and sensible solution to this problem.

President Marcos

Editor,
After many long hours of excruciating thought, I believe I may have stumbled upon an answer to the question of who should be K-State's next president.

It began when I was reading the newspaper. The headline was something like this, "Marcos resigns, leaves palace." I thought about the situation of the former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos.

He is a former president with no place to go. I then thought about K-State. It is a place looking for a president. The answer should be obvious by now. Invite Marcos to be the next president of K-State.

Consider these advantages. First of all, with Marcos as president, K-State would become a household word all over the world. Think about what this would do for recruitment. With Marcos' knack for making money, we could have the F.E. Marcos Coliseum (sorry Fred), a new library and the ROTC program at K-State would be greatly augmented.

With these points in mind, I urge the Presidential Search Committee to consider Marcos for K-State's next president.

Reckless drivers

Editor,
I was born and raised in Wisconsin and am currently living in Manhattan while I attend graduate school. I knew that upon my moving here I would be introduced to a different lifestyle than what I was accustomed to, but I felt it would be beneficial.

After being here for almost three years, I am wondering if I will live long enough to obtain my degree. What I am referring to is the haphazard drivers in this town.

I didn't know that all you have to do is send money to Sears and Roebuck Co. to obtain a driver's license in this state. Some people (with Kansas plates) sure drive as if that's all that it takes to obtain a license.

I am not claiming to be the best driver in the world, but I feel that I am not a threat to anyone's livelihood. Where I am from, the three colors on a stoplight mean the following: green means go; yellow means slow down (not "gun it" to make the light); and red means stop. (It seems as if the first few seconds of red don't mean that here.)

My 3-year-old daughter understands this better than some Kansans. I think it is time that the law enforcement agencies in town (Riley County Police Department and K-State Police Department) start putting as much emphasis on ticketing these offenders as they do parking violators.

Moving vehicles can do much greater damage than can a vehicle which is not parked in its proper place. One other comment, when it snows, leave the car in the garage.

Too much fluff

Editor,
The story, "Couple discovers new reason to 'cheer,'" in the Feb. 25 Collegian:

I read with concern the article about the bizarre marriage of cheerleader, Sandy Westhues, senior in dietetics, and yell-leader Raegan Crow, senior in marketing.

We are grateful to the Collegian for exposing the insidious conspiracy of these families to create a master race of hyper-enthusiastic cute-oids. Surely it is no coincidence that Raegan's brother also mated with a cheerleader.

The community, and the world at large, should be informed of such subversive activities as this and male foreign students in the women's locker room — not to mention the reunion of the student and her long-lost mother.

Once again the Collegian has scooped the National Enquirer in these matters of utmost importance to our community.

These stories are consistent with the Collegian's policy of printing "All the news that fits."

Work starts on handicap accessibility

By GREG LAUDICK
Collegian Reporter

Within a few weeks, Kedzie Hall will no longer be off limits to the handicapped. An addition of a chairlift to the east side of the building will make the building partially accessible to students confined to a wheelchair.

"This construction of an accessibility feature is in compliance with Public Law 504," said Gretchen Holden, coordinator of services for students with physical limitations. "The law makes it mandatory for any student program receiving federal financial aid to be accessible to handicapped individuals."

Construction of a mechanical chairlift began last Monday on the middle entranceway on the east side of Kedzie. The addition of the chair will make all of Kedzie's first floor accessible to handicapped students.

"It took a long time to finally figure out how to make the building accessible without using up too much space and blocking the hallways," Holden said. "At first we thought of using ramps, but the work would have been too much to get the necessary angle for them to be useful."

After dropping a plan to put the chairlift inside the building because the device would take up too much room and violate fire codes, the present plan to build an enclosure on the outside of the building was adopted.

The funding for the construction of the lift came when a reallocation of the "special maintenance fund," a fund for the general maintenance and renovation of buildings, was granted by the Board of Regents.

"Fred Ferguson (physical plant director) should be thanked for getting us the $46,000 we needed to do the job on Kedzie," Holden said.

"We've been trying to get it done for quite some time."

In order to comply with Public Law 504, K-State will be making a number of the older buildings accessible on campus. Although the law does not call for all buildings to be available to the handicapped, it does force the University to make its programs accessible to the physically disabled.

"Making the buildings more accessible is much easier than switching classes from one building to another that has the available entranceways for the handicapped," Holden said.

Sigma Chi to sponsor Derby Days activities

By The Collegian Staff

The Sigma Chi fraternity will sponsor its annual Derby Days competition this week, with 11 sororities participating in the events.

Derby Days is the national fund-raising project for the fraternity, with proceeds going to benefit Wallace Village for Children. The village, located in Broomfield, Colo., is a center for children with minor brain damage. Last year about $120,000 was raised nationally by the fraternity for village.

The Sigma Chi and the sororities began the events Wednesday night at Brother's Tavern, 1120 Moro St., where part of the money from each pitcher of beer sold went to the designated charity.

A T-shirt signing contest is scheduled for 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. today. During this time fraternity members will be wearing T-shirts which the sorority members will sign. At the end of the day, the names will be counted and the sororities will receive a certain amount of points depending on how many names they had.

A dance contest will take place tonight at Brother's.

Agronomist seeks use of milkweed

By DIXIE GLANVILLE
Collegian Reporter

A weed is normally a plant annoying to have around and even more frustrating to eliminate. One weed abundantly found in Kansas may have a brighter future than most.

Milkweed is being investigated for its commercial possibilities, said Merle Witt, research agronomist at the Garden City Branch Experiment Station.

Parts of the milkweed have been considered for development in the past.

"The fluff from the milkweed seedpod was used in place of kapok, a tropical seed fluff, in life jackets in World War II when supplies were interrupted," Witt said.

"It took about 10 ounces of milkweed fluff in the life vest to keep an adult afloat," he said. "Fluff could now be used as filler for coats, jackets, sleeping bags, comforters and pillows."

The second use for milkweed came when the sap from the plant was evaluated by the U.S. Department of Energy as a possible substitute for rubber or petroleum substitutes. Research and development was discontinued after crude oil prices stabilized, Witt said.

"The future for milkweed development lies with the possibility of using the fibrous stem and leaves in manufacturing quality paper," Witt said. "The research is in a preliminary stage at this point."

"We intend to look on for a three-year period to see how they withstand Kansas weather," he said.

The Garden City plot was started last May from seed. Fifty varieties, 15 wild-type and 35 hand-crossed hybrids, are being grown in the test plots.

The plants could also be started from stalks of the milkweed plant. The perennial plant, one that is active throughout the year, grows to an average height of 1½ feet.

During the first year of his study, Witt has observed minor leaf spotting, but no fungus, mold or other diseases.

A similar but smaller milkweed research project at the Colby Branch Experiment Station has run into some disease problems.

John Lawless, from the Colby station, speculates the problem is soil-borne. The disease carries over in the soil from year to year.

Native Plants Inc. of Logan, Utah, is sponsoring the projects at the two K-State branch experiment stations and at three other sites in the nation. It chose the two Kansas locations because Eastern and Western milkweed varieties intersect in the area and several naturally occurring hybrids can be studied.

Witt said the major purpose behind the research is to determine the advantages of using the plant and identify the potential for producing it.

"The uses and methods of harvesting are still in need of development at this time," he said.

"All of the cultivated crops today such as wheat, corn and sorghum, have come from weeds," he said. "Milkweed just has not been domesticated."

Halley's Comet

1910 comet leaves impression

By MARIBETH GOTTSCHALK
Staff Writer

Pearl Clarke, resident of Meadowlark Hills Retirement Center, had just turned 19 when she first saw Halley's Comet.

It has been 76 years since Halley's comet was last visible from Earth, and as it has happened for hundreds of years, Halley's is back — and Clarke, now 94, can see the comet again.

"We lived in extreme southwest Kansas in Meade County on a homestead claim, and my mother got us up at 3 o'clock in the morning, and (the comet) was in full tail. It was beautiful, just beautiful," Clarke said.

This celestial wonder, which was seen in 1680 by Edmond Halley, was recorded to have a tail angled at 90 degrees when it first appeared in December of that year. Halley continued to watch the comet until it disappeared in March 1681.

He began calculating the path of the comet and realized its path was much the same as comets seen in 43 B.C., A.D. 531 and 1106. After much calculation, Halley came to the conclusion the comet had a recurrence rate of 76 years.

After the astronomer's prediction, Halley's comet reappeared in 1759, 1835, and in 1910. With these returns people began to fear the destruction of the world.

Chris Sorensen, associate professor of physics, said there was a rumor that the tail's gases would cover Earth, so people would stuff clothes under the door in hope of keeping the gases from getting into the house.

Sorensen said in 1066, when the comet was said to have appeared, it was said to be covered with blood from the Battle of Hastings which occurred in the same year. During the battle, the comet was considered an omen of the death of the Saxon King Harold, the last of the Saxon kings. Harold was being threatened with an invasion by Normandy.

Clarke said her mother, who was a teacher, was "pretty much ahead of her time" and heard about the comet through word of mouth and newspapers. Because of her mother's knowledge, fear of the comet was never instilled in Clarke or her two sisters.

"We didn't have any fears. I didn't have any fears, but oh, there was mass hysteria all over the country," Clarke said. "Probably not in the larger cities, of course, but our newspaper did not come every day and we did not have radio or television.

"There were groups who segregated themselves, sold everything they had and gave to the poor. They were so sure that the tail of the comet and its gases were going to smother us all to death. There were others who thought we would be consumed in flames. But it didn't happen," Clarke said.

Clarke said wealthy people began "living it up" because they feared being burned up.

"I know some of the orneriest kids in school brought their Bibles and sat there and just read and read," she said.

There were also those who were blaming sickness and suicides on the coming of the comet. Clarke said she hasn't heard of anyone being afraid of the comet this time.

"Maybe in the backhills of Kentucky or Tennessee," she said.

Sorensen, who has seen the comet several times earlier in its current visit, said it will be visible again March 6 through April 5. The comet can be best seen in the southeast sky about one hour before sunrise.

At this time people should be able to see it with the naked eye, but Sorensen advised using a good pair of binoculars.

In early April, the best time to view the comet would be about an hour after twilight in the southeast. In late April it will be visible in the southern sky an hour after sunset, Sorensen said.

Sorensen said to look for "a fuzz ball, or a blurry star, with a bright center and a tail" when looking for the comet.

Predictable comet returns

By MARGARET MAY
Features Editor

Halley's comet only visits once every 76 years and 1986 is the year of its return.

The comet is like a five-mile in diameter snowball filled with rocks and ice, said Chris Sorensen, associate professor of physics. The ice is not only water ice, but dry ice, frozen methane and ammonia.

Comets are as "common as fish in the sea," wrote Johannes Kepler, an early astronomer and mathematician. There are as many as 10 comets a year, Sorensen said, but they are not predictable like Halley's.

"Nobody has actually seen the comet," said Sorensen, "you look up in the sky and you see this fuzzy ball that might be one-half or one-fourth as big as the moon. And behind the fuzzy ball you see the streaming tail.

"The fuzzy ball is called the coma, that is just gas and dust too, deep inside the coma is what's called the nucleus, and that is the little ball that is 3 or 4 or 5 miles in diameter that is actually the comet," Sorensen said. "Nobody's ever seen that, but maybe we will though with some of these spacecrafts that are supposed to get within a few hundred miles."

Although no samples of the comet have been taken yet, five space probes launched in the fall of 1985 will collect information about Halley's comet.

The tail of the comet is made up of dust and evaporating gasses. The comet begins to melt as it gets closer to the sun which releases gases from the comet and the gases, rocks and dust get blown away from the sun, he said. The tail always blows away from the sun.

"You can think of the tail as a wind sock of the solar wind," he said. "The sun is an active, huge thermonuclear reaction blowing ions out all of the time, it is called the solar wind."

"It is sort of an unlucky coincidence that the chance in our lifetime is one of the poorest chances on record (to see the comet)," Sorensen said. "When it (the comet) is closest to the sun, it happens to be on the other side of the sun from us. So we can't even see it then because we would have to look through the sun, which of course we can't."

The comet is swinging south so it is highly visible south of the equator in southern latitudes. For persons in the northern latitudes, when the comet is brightest, it will be low in

Police to gain sign language skills

By GARY BORN
Collegian Reporter

The University police may soon be "talking with their hands" in order to help deaf students, faculty and staff on campus.

In conjunction with the Division of Continuing Education, the K-State Police will start training officers in the skill of sign language after spring break.

"We wanted a program that would help meet the community's needs, and this is one of those programs that helps everyone involved," said Capt. Charles Beckom, superintendent of the K-State Police.

Beckom said the idea of a sign language class was discussed by him and Bill Butler, administrator for the Division of Continuing Education, for a long time before it was finally decided upon.

Continuing education currently offers a class in sign language, but the course for the officers will be a little different than the class being taught to students.

"We need a separate class for officers because they need to know different information than what the everyday person would need to know," Butler said.

Butler said the reason for the different classes is mainly due to the technical jargon used by the police.

"The program would also have to change to meet the needs of other different agencies, like the ambulance service and the fire department, since they have other words and phrases which are used in their routine," Butler said.

Beckom said he would like to see a minimum of one uniformed police officer skilled in sign language on each shift and possibly some administrative personnel also.

"The good thing about this program is that it benefits the community as well as the officers," Beckom said.

With a new state law going into effect recently, each police officer is now required to take extra classes which help officers do their jobs more effectively. The classes must total 40 hours for one year and can be in a variety of topics.

"Our officers can use this class toward their hours and this type of service really benefits the University," Beckom said.

According to available information, this is the first program of its kind in this area and possibly the first in Kansas. If it does well, Beckom said, it may be adopted by the Riley County Police Department and other local agencies also.

"If we accomplish this successfully, we'll toot our horn a little bit and be willing to help other interested groups take advantage of the program," Beckom said.

There are currently about 15 deaf students on campus, said Gretchen Holden, coordinator of services for students with physical limitations.

"I know of three profoundly deaf students on this campus and about a dozen others who have a serious hearing impairment," she said.

Holden said she could not estimate how many students use hearing aids because if a student is able to function normally with a hearing aid and does not need assistance from the Center for Student Development, that person's handicap is not known by the University.

the southern skies.

"It is like we have been double-whammied," Sorensen said, "not only to the whole world is (the comet) out of sync in the orbital motions, but it's also, for half of the world, in a bad viewing position."

"This is something everybody should see; this is history's comet. This is something that has come back and back many times and been recorded throughout history. It is the kind of thing that if they don't see it, they'll wish they had 10 years from now when they tell their kids about it," he said.

Moonless, dark skies and an unobscured southern horizon are the ideal conditions. A telescope or binoculars are not required to see the comet, he said.

In one or two weeks it will be visible in the southeast horizon at 4:30 or 5 a.m., the morning dusk time, and will stay for about a month. Toward the end of March, it will be the brightest. In the first part of April, it will swing south and become visible earlier in the morning, possibly as early as midnight. At the end of April it will be visible in the evening. The best time to see it is the end of March and the beginning of April, Sorensen said.

"The other thing is to watch the moon, you don't want a moon out because it lights up the sky," he said. Sorensen also said just because there is a moon in the evening, doesn't mean there will be a moon in the morning. People need to check the moon phases, a first quarter moon is ideal, Sorensen said.

Senior wins national award

By DAN SMITH
Collegian Reporter

An opportunity to receive a national award for being an outstanding student in physical education was something Janna Adkinson, senior in exercise science, knew nothing about two weeks ago.

At least not until she received a letter from the Department of Physical Education, Dance and Leisure Studies indicating she had been designated the outstanding student in that department.

The annual award was initiated this year by the National Association for Sport and Physical Education. The purpose of the award is to recognize outstanding students majoring in physical education or sport from colleges and universities that have professional preparation programs.

"I felt really honored to receive the award," Adkinson said. "I was really happy and surprised."

Adkinson did several things to merit receiving such an award. These included her academic performance; contributions to the department, in which she assisted Richard Cox, professor of physical education, dance and leisure studies, in his study of students' learning abilities; making posters for the national conventions for PE; and graphing professors' research work.

In addition, Adkinson is also secretary for the Professionals in Human Movement Club, in which students must maintain a 3.0 grade point average or above.

"My parents were ecstatic (about the award) and felt it would really open a lot of doors for me in the future," Adkinson said.

Adkinson will receive the certificate for the award at the American Association of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance National Convention in mid-April in Cincinnati.

The AAHPERD National Convention is centered on giving presentations of research and new findings in the field of PE.

At this point, Adkinson said she does not know if she will be able to attend the convention.

"I'm not sure if I'll have the money to go right now, but if I can afford to go I will," Adkinson said.

If she is unable to attend the convention, the certificate will be mailed to her during the latter part of April. Her name will also be published in the NASPE News.

All of the professors in the department are involved in selecting the recipient for the award, she said.

Each institution will be responsible for developing criteria to identify the outstanding student of the year. Only one student from each institution will be recognized by the NASPE each year.

Panel considers education changes

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Members of the State Board of Education should continue to be elected, according to speakers who told a Senate panel Wednesday that it would be a disservice to education to change the way board members are selected.

The Senate Education Committee heard the testimony about a resolution that would amend the Kansas Constitution so that the State Board of Education would no longer be able to create its own regulations without legislative approval, and allow the governor to appoint the nine board members.

The board currently has 10 elected members and is the only state agency that can make its own rules without interference from the Kansas Legislature.

Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola, chairwoman of the Legislative Educational Planning Committee, told the committee she opposes the proposed amendment.

"The wide spectrum of education encompassed in the State Board of Education is better served in an elected body," Apt said.

The governor would appoint members who in turn appoint the commissioner of education, the state spokesman on education, Apt said. The governor would, in effect, be setting the state's policies on education, she said.

"Our number one product is educated youth," Apt said. "I think the board of education should stay out of the range of governmental power."

Jim Murphy, a spokesman for

Gov. John Carlin, said the appointment of board members would not short circuit the wishes of the people. It only would insure that the board works more closely with the governor to improve education in the state.

However, Connie Hubbell, legislative chairman for the State Board of Education, said election of board members ensures that they effectively represent their constituents. It makes the board not only more accountable to the people, she said, but it also makes them more accessible.

Discussion to include legislators

By The Collegian Staff

The annual legislative brunch, sponsored by the League of Women Voters of Manhattan-Riley County, is scheduled for 10 a.m. to noon Saturday in the lower level of the Wareham Hotel, 418 Poyntz Ave.

The brunch will feature a panel discussion by area legislators on topics including economic development, governance of education and state budget funding.

League President Carol Peak said legislators invited include Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan; Ivan Sand, R-Riley; and Sen. Merrill Werts, R-Junction City.

Persons attending will be given the opportunity to ask questions of the panelists, with Peak serving as moderator.

For reservations, call 539-5483 or Peak at 539-9513.

Tigers outgun Wildcats; Meyer injures knee

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

COLUMBIA, Mo. — It was a thoroughly disgusted K-State Coach Jack Hartman facing reporters' questions after Wednesday night's 84-69 loss to Missouri.

Following a relatively even first half of play, which saw Missouri lead 30-28 at halftime, the Tigers blew K-State straight out of Hearn Arena.

"We just didn't stand up. We didn't fight back when Missouri made a run," Hartman said. "That's what disappoints me."

Much of the credit for the Wildcats' second half collapse, however, can go to a Missouri team which hit 78.6 percent from the field in the second half.

"They hit real good, but that's basketball," Hartman said. "If you're going to be successful, you've got to deal with that.

"Missouri did shoot extremely well, and that underlines all the things that you're not doing well."

In a performance reminiscent of the one he put on in the game against K-State earlier in the season at Ahearn Field House, Missouri guard Jeff Strong was virtually unstoppable in the second half.

Strong hit nine of 10 field goals and 22 of his 24 total points in the second half. In the earlier meeting between the two teams, Strong had 20 of his 22 points in the second half.

"There was really nothing we could do (about Strong)," K-State's Ben Mitchell said. "He was taking the shot and taking it from long range. He's such a good player."

"We can try to give the (defensive) man some help, but there's really nothing we can do when he's isolated like that."

"Jeff got himself in good position,"

Missouri Coach Norm Stewart said. "He put the ball in the hole — he got a little more active in the second half."

As was the case in the earlier game, the Tigers' Derrick Chievous was a thorn in the side of K-State, scoring 23 points.

"Derrick has been practicing well," Stewart said. "Sunday and Monday were as good of practices as he's had all year. Practice is a prelude to your performance. If Derrick keeps doing that (practicing well), he will continue to play well."

Ben Mitchell led the team with 18 points on seven of 12 shooting from the field.

"Ben played well," Hartman said. K-State's Norris Coleman was held under 20 points for the first time in seven games.

Coleman was taunted by some Missouri fans throughout the game in reference to the controversies about his high school grades, age and questioned eligibility status.

"Before the game, I thought it (the taunting) would bother me, but it didn't," Coleman said. "It was all in fun."

"I wasn't paying any attention to them (Tiger fans). I was out there to play ball and I couldn't let them distract me."

The Wildcats' other leading scorer, Joe Wright, suffered an off night as well, scoring 13 points, five under his average.

K-State's inside game was hampered by the loss of center Ron Meyer to a knee injury just over two minutes into the contest. Meyer's injury was diagnosed as a sprain, and his status is uncertain. Meyer had knee problems as a senior in high school.

The loss dropped K-State's record to 16-12 on the season, 4-9 in the Big Eight Conference. Missouri lifted its record to 20-12 overall and 6-6 in conference play.

Winning game No. 20 on the season was pleasing to Stewart.

"You like to win 20 games. We've played a lot of good people," Stewart said. "I think at the start of the year, if people thought this team would win 20 with this much talent...I don't think anybody expected it. I expected us to be successful, but I didn't know how successful."

Stewart told reporters following the game that his 38 games against Hartman were some of his most memorable — and some of his most frustrating.

"That was the 38th ballgame between us — we are 8-8 in Ahearn, we are 8-8 in Hearn and we're 3-3 in Kemper. When you've played that long, somebody ought to come out on top — even if it's just by one game," Stewart said.

"Jack has had some great games, and I thought we were going to have one tonight — he was pushing it in the first half."

Toleration important trait for officials

By ROXIE MCKEE
Collegian Reporter

Fast action, quick pace, and split second decisions are all a part of the life of an intramural basketball official.

"The action is really fast paced. I like making split second decisions," said Tom Utermohlen, junior in geography.

Utermohlen has been officiating basketball for three years and thinks he improves a little every game.

"The more I do it, the more I learn. Every game is a learning experience," Utermohlen said.

He says there are three main ingredients to good officiating — alertness, fairness, and consistency.

Intramural coordinator Steve Martini said he believes basketball is by far the toughest sport to officiate.

"There is always someone who gets upset by a call. Intramurals are a great release for people, but some people take it more seriously," Martini said.

Martini said verbal as well as physical abuse of officials is not tolerated, and he is fairly strict about such cases. Martini said one time he had to suspend an athlete for one year from any intramural competition.

"I had an official five years ago who got hit from behind — blind sided. I feel in cases like that students should not only be suspended, but kicked out of school," he said.

Martini said that people should not act any different in the gym than they do on campus and in the classroom.

"Verbal abuse may cause you to get a game suspension or be put on probation. I had to suspend a guy last year for grabbing a referee by the shoulder," Martini said.

Vanessa Brands, senior in veterinary medicine, has been officiating for three years and says it is a "good way to make money, good exercise — plus it's a lot of fun."

Brands said the control of a game is up to the officials.

"If the officials let it (the game) get out of hand, then it gets out of hand — it's all up to the officials," Brands said.

She said it is easier to officiate good teams than bad teams, and that she learns a lot by watching other officials in action.

"It's a lot of fun to watch K-State games and observe how they (Big 8 officials) officiate," Brands said.

Michon Weingartner, junior in leisure studies, said officiating gives you a good perspective of the game.

"Officiating gives you a different view of the game — how the game is actually played," Weingartner said.

Weingartner said the worst part of officiating is "Players who are flagrant and don't understand you are a student too — (who) give you all kinds of flack."

"If I hear a player swear, I usually give a technical. I give about 10 technicals a season," Weingartner said.

"I prefer women's games and plan to someday officiate college ball," Weingartner said.

Lady Cats lose again; Thomas ruled eligible

By TONY CARBAJO
Sports Writer

COLUMBIA, Mo. — The Missouri Lady Tigers used an unanswered 13-point second half scoring spree en route to a 67-57 win over the Lady Cats Wednesday, denying K-State's hopes of capturing an upset win in the Hearn Center.

K-State held a narrow 32-31 halftime advantage and led throughout the second half before succumbing to the Missouri rally with only four minutes remaining in the contest.

The Lady Cats were in command of the contest throughout, but the Tigers would not let K-State's lead get any higher than five points.

K-State Head Coach Matilda Mossman cited Missouri's physical play as the factor that turned the tide in favor of the Tigers late in the game.

"What are those diets that you take something to put on weight?" Mossman jokingly asked reporters following the game. "If we have another game like this one and the KU game (very physical), we are going to need that."

"When you play a game that physical, you have to shoot twice as well and rebound twice as hard. It takes a lot out of you," she said. "They adjusted well to the officiating in the second half."

K-State stayed in the game with an aggressive zone defense in the first half. Senior center Amanda Holley recorded four first-half steals and held Missouri star center Renee Kelley to just nine first-half points.

K-State also kept up with the Lady Tigers on the boards in the first half but could not keep up down the stretch. Missouri outrebounded K-State 47-24 for the game.

"We didn't get enough defensive rebounds," Mossman said. "We played good defense and held them to a low number of points."

K-State star forward Carlisa Thomas returned to the lineup after sitting out the Kansas game while the National Collegiate Athletic Association conducted an investigation concerning her eligibility. It was announced before game time that Thomas would be allowed to play in the contest.

The NCAA told K-State officials late last week that Thomas was ineligible for one game because of "participation" in "organized" competition during the summer of 1985. K-State appealed the decision and lost, and Thomas was held out of the KU game.

With the loss, the Lady Cats fell to 5-8 in Big Eight play and 15-11 overall, while Missouri moved to 8-5 in the league and 16-10 overall. The Lady Cats close the season Saturday against Nebraska at Ahearn Field House.

Parrish announces signing of wide receiver

K-State football coach Stan Parrish announced the signing of wide receiver John Williams Wednesday.

The 6-foot, 180-pound Williams is the 23rd signee for Parrish's Wildcat team and comes to K-State from Taft Community College in California. He caught 16 passes during the 1983-84 season for 245 yards and three touchdowns for a team which ran the ball 80 percent of the time.

The Lakeland, Fla. native didn't play football last year, but did run track at Fresno Community College.

Nebraska wins at home against Colorado

LINCOLN, Neb. — Senior Harvey Marshall scored 23 points to lead Nebraska to a 79-72 win over Colorado in Big Eight Conference basketball Wednesday night.

Nebraska trailed Colorado by one at the half, but outscored the Buffs 16-6 in the first 10 minutes of the second half to take the lead for good.

Nebraska's last 18 points came from the free-throw line. Prior to the game, Nebraska retired the jersey of All-Big Eight center senior Dave Hoppen, who suffered a knee injury last month at Boulder. Hoppen's jersey is the first basketball jersey to be retired by Nebraska.

Nebraska is now 17-9 on the season, 7-6 in conference play. Colorado drops to 8-18 with the loss.

Networks need to learn there is basketball outside of East

Big Eight basketball gets no respect.

Only two teams are receiving any form of recognition from the national press and those two teams don't receive the attention they deserve in terms of coverage, either.

Wayman Tisdale earned Billy Tubbs and Oklahoma some respect with the national media over the last three years — respect which carried over into the pre-season polls at the start of this season. And Larry Brown at Kansas came in a couple of seasons ago and gave the Jayhawks instant recognition in the polls.

Both of these teams have earned and often reaffirmed their placement in the rankings. It is also great to see a conference team earn a No. 2 ranking in the nation (KU), behind one of the "big boys" of the Atlantic Coast Conference.

So, why doesn't the Big Eight Conference receive the recognition it deserves?

The media doesn't think the Midwest sells — that's why. Here are two fantastic examples of this raw treatment by the media of Big Eight programs so far this season.

I came home from the Collegian one night a couple of weeks ago and flipped on the Cable News Network. Yes, it's sports time on CNN and the announcer says something of this sort.

"No. 8 Oklahoma defeated by Missouri, No. 10 Kentucky squeaks by Alabama and No. 17 North Carolina State defeated by Maryland. Let's go to the highlights."

Then the national network treated sports fans with clips of the Kentucky game and then some footage from the North Carolina State game.

Well, one can't blame CNN for not having footage from the Oklahoma game — the Big Eight's television contract with Raycom does not include weekday games. So the conference can't point fingers for this — it's their own fault.

According to the Big Eight office, Raycom no longer telecasts weekday games on a regular basis because it was keeping the fans out of the stands — yes, that's right, all of us

TIM FITZGERALD
Assistant
Sports Editor

viewers in Kansas drove to the OU/Mizzou game because it wasn't on the tube.

The problem was that at the end of the half-hour of CNN sports the announcer restated the top stories that day in sports — Kentucky is almost defeated and NC State is beaten.

What? How about that top 10 team, Oklahoma? They were defeated — film footage or no film footage.

Well, that was example No. 1. I wasn't real pleased with CNN, but the failings of one network didn't raise my ire enough to warrant a column — then enter NBC and their reaffirmation that that the Midwest doesn't sell.

While listing the top 20 teams that were in action Saturday — KU was at the top of the list — the announcer said there were no major upsets.

Then NBC showed some uneventful highlights of games, but what a shock — no footage from Lawrence. KU was even on television that Saturday against Nebraska, but NBC didn't see fit to show a little clip of the team which at the time was ranked No. 3 in the nation, when the network shows entire games of selected ACC and Big East teams every weekend.

The Big Eight doesn't seem to be in a rush to change this lack of recognition, either. As the contract currently stands with Raycom, any revenue from games played by Big Eight schools shown on television by another broadcaster will not go to the school or the conference, but to Raycom sports.

This doesn't offer much incentive to rush out looking for additional television exposure, does it? What a bargain for the conference — no regular weekday coverage and no extra television revenues.

On top of this strange contractual agreement, the conference scheduling is not always brimming with rhyme and reason either. KU and Oklahoma — a potential national coverage match-up — was scheduled for Monday night.

Oh, don't worry, Raycom went out of their way to televise the game for the area and to provide highlights for the networks — if the networks think the footage is worth showing.

There is some great basketball going on in the Midwest — it will sell. Television fans just want to see good basketball, be it from the Midwest, West or the East.

The conference needs to arrange a new television contract. Surely the Big Eight can find a network which will treat it with some respect.

To be a "big boy" one must act like a "big boy."

volume of mail or number of telephone calls to his office about the search process or the candidates. "I have had a number of people just express their sympathy — not to me personally, but to the process — and say that they hoped it would not harm the search," Frieman said.

Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, two university presidents and the chancellor of a state university system were among the semifinalists, according to published reports.

However, one of the individuals named in the Eagle-Beacon story has withdrawn his name from consideration. Ten days after a list was made public, John Slaughter, chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park, indicated that could no longer pursue the K-State presidency.

The eight remaining candidates are: John Campbell, dean of the College of Agriculture at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana; Jon Wefald, chancellor of the Minnesota seven-school state university system; Robert Rutford, president of University of Texas at Dallas; Greg O'Brien, provost at the University of South Florida in Tampa; Charles Sidman, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Florida in Gainesville; John La Tourette, provost and vice president for academic affairs at Northern Illinois University in DeKalb; William Mobley, dean of the College of Business Administration at Texas A&M University at College Station; and Rathbone.

Acker, 54, will leave the University June 30, but has declined to discuss his plans. Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., said recently that Acker is being considered for a high-level position in the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Burglars remove cash from auto dealership

Sometime between 10 p.m. Feb. 6, and 7 a.m. Feb. 7, a suspect or suspects burglarized the Toyota-Mazda auto dealership on Seth Child's Road.

The suspects entered through an opening at the rear of the building after removal of an exhaust fan. The office area was ransacked and the front door of a safe was cut out with a cutting torch from the businesses service area.

Cash was taken from the business, with a total reported loss of more than $700.

Several other business burglaries in the same area occurred within days of this burglary. In all cases, cash was taken and vending machines broken into.

Persons having information on this or any crime are asked to call Crime Stoppers at 539-7777. Callers, who may call collect, need not identify themselves and may receive a cash reward of up to $1,000.

PERSONAL 16

AXO MARY, Mary, quite contrary, how does your B-day go? With lots of beer, and much to cheer, and friends all in a row! Love ya! Anne. (107)

DERBY DAYS Coaches Greg, Doug, Paul and Scott: We Thetas think you're pretty fun, with such awesome coaches, we've already won. We'll dance, we'll shuffle, we'll play the games—we'll win our way into Sigma Chi fame. And when the fun is over and done, remember, to the Thetas you'll always be #1. Love, the Thetas. P.S. Warning: Sniffing beads can be hazardous to one's mental health. (107)

PADDLES—LAST Friday was great, but work on that twitch, ha. You look great on TV, but tons better close up! Ineligible in baseball. (107)

SWEET SHELBY my love, (I see you found it). Thanks for the party pack. K-State will never be the same—neither will my room. The "ambiance" is just too much! (so is the roll-on perfume!) Give my love to "On, Sheila" and my sympathy to "the Bob and Phyll Show" (putting up with you two). Auf wiedersehen, Marshmallow, "V" for victory (or whatever), Meinen lippen sic kuesnen so heiss, contrass . . . (oops!) — "lose it" — U No Who. (107)

TRI-SIGMAS!! We already know you're the greatest house on campus—that's just a tremendous grasp of the obvious—so get psyched for Derby Days because "We will win!" Love, your coaches! (107)

OH RAPTURE! The Pirates of Penzance cast is perplexing. It's been fun dancing, singing and getting to know each other. Let's break a leg tonight. (107)

CARLEY, ALYSON, and Terri—Just wanted you to know how much fun it was having you as roomies! Remember that you're always welcome, so come back and visit! We'll miss you. Love, the girls of Wide Open, Smoker, and Murphy's Room. (107)

BRENT—WHY don't you call Kim? Mariani is obviously blind. You're such a sweetheart! From someone who cares. (107)

AGD PLEDGES: Congratulations and welcome to the Alpha Gam. We're so glad to have you. Love, the members. (107)

TRI SIGMA Pledges: Raise the curtain and let the show begin. The excitement of Tri Sigma has no end. Friendship, laughter, and memories you'll share, that link of Tri Sigma will always be there. Welcome! Love, your Sigma Sisters. (107)

KAPPA ALPHA Theta—Black and Gold Dancers, you're lookin' fine, tonight we'll lay it on the line. So get down to Brother's and have some fun, 'cause the Thetas have only just begun! Love, Doug, Greg, Paul and Scott. (107)

JAY CLINE: Roses are red, violets are blue; to heck with the roses and violets—just enjoy the Personal. Sunny. (107)

ROOMMATE WANTED 17

ROOMMATE WANTED: Own bedroom in clean house with two responsible males. $155/month plus one-third utilities. 539-7653. (103-107)

TWO GIRLS wanted to share quiet two bedroom apartment near campus. No smoking, $130/month plus utilities. Deb or Lisa, 537-8727. (105-107)

TWO RESPONSIBLE ladies wanted to share basement apartment beginning in June. Own room, close to campus. No smoking, $125/month. Ann, 532-3737/776-6975. (106-110)

LIBERAL FEMALE would like to share apartment with other liberal female. $192.50 a month plus one-half electric. Call 537-7313. Mary. (107-112)

She said charges of wrongdoing by military officers would be investigated and members of the military would be removed in areas where "people will be in danger by the continued presence of certain officers and men."

Loud applause greeted her announcement that, although the riverside presidential palace will remain the seat of government, she will not live there because "it is not fitting for the leader of an impoverished nation to live in extravagance."

Military bomb disposal experts Wednesday searched the palace grounds for possible booby-traps planted by fleeing Marcos guards. Sgt. Enrique Lescano of the Philippine Constabulary told The Associated Press he found a plastic charge hidden inside a book in the palace and that the grounds were littered with hand grenades and other ammunition apparently left behind in Tuesday night's hasty evacuation.

On Wednesday, schools remained closed but shops, banks and other offices opened for business.

Laurel, interviewed on CBS News, announced plans for "a general amnesty to all political offenders."

On ABC's "Good Morning America," he said of the guerrillas: "Given a credible government, a democratic moral order and a general amnesty, 90 percent of the people who are now fighting in the hills will lay down their arms and come home."

"They are not communists. They are only people who were driven to fighting in the hills because of the unwanted regime of Mr. Marcos."

Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, the deputy armed forces commander who led the military rebellion with Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile, said on the ABC program:

"One great advantage now is that the people will be behind us. Since popular support is one of the most important ingredients to success in counterinsurgency, we feel that we shall be able to generate a lot of mass support at the grass roots level, precisely what was lacking during the Marcos administration."

such as $400 hammers and $7,600 coffee pots, and said "even the Pentagon should be held to strict standards of accountability in spending taxpayers' money."

"Those few who have cheated taxpayers or have swindled our armed forces with faulty equipment are thieves stealing from the arsenal of democracy," he said, promising to prosecute them "to the fullest extent of the law."

But even one of the president's most loyal supporters on Capitol Hill remained skeptical that Reagan could achieve the Pentagon budget he is seeking.

'Pledge of Resistance' topic of work session

By The Collegian Staff

A 25-minute video film on the "Faces of War" will be shown during the rice and beans dinner at 6:15 tonight at St. Isidore's Chapel, 711 Denison Ave.

The film examines the struggles in Central America. Following the film there will be a short work session to discuss the local response to the national "Pledge of Resistance" mobilization in the event of escalation of U.S. intervention in the region.

Individual and group options for action and the legal, political and personal consequences will be discussed.

Persons attending are asked to bring plates, glasses and silverware.

Better ag economy will help banking, ag secretary says

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

Lending institutions in Kansas will be under stress for the remainder of the year, but as the agriculture economy improves so will the banking industry's ability to support debt-ridden farmers, acting Agriculture Secretary Frank Naylor Jr. said Thursday.

The government's financial commitment to agriculture must be strong enough to support an economic recovery, Naylor told 200 members of the Kansas Bankers Association's agriculture conference meeting in the Union.

"This year will probably be the most stressful in Kansas," he said. "Kansas banking institutions will be under stress. There will be a three-to-four-year transition period, but the federal government has committed an enormous amount of resources to agriculture."

Naylor replaced John Norton, who resigned last week as acting secretary after five days on the job. Both Norton and Naylor were named to hold down the post while Richard Lyng awaits Senate confirmation to succeed John Block as secretary of agriculture.

To help producers out of debt, Naylor said bankers and farmers should make use of a new USDA program that will provide funding for a three-year interest "buy-down" of its guaranteed farm program loans.

Designed to help farmers having trouble repaying their loans or obtaining new ones, the $490 million program will enable lenders to make loans to farmers at interest rates reduced by up to 4 percentage points, with the lender absorbing half of the loss of revenue from the reduced rates.

"The buy-down will have a significant impact on banking institutions in Kansas. It is a tool they haven't had before. It's a tool that would be difficult, if not impossible, to develop on their own. If the funds are used judiciously it could provide invaluable support," Naylor said.

Under provisions of the program, the USDA would pay the lender the remaining half of the interest buy-down. The end result would be that the borrower gets a break on interest, the lender gives up points in interest and the government makes a

Ruling to keep coliseum meetings open

By PATTY REINERT
News Editor

The Kansas attorney general's office has decided meetings of the Program Committee for the Coliseum and other similar committees are subject to the Kansas Open Meetings Act and must abide by its guidelines.

The decision came after a complaint was filed in December by Catherine Saylor, non-degree graduate student; fall Collegian Editor Tim Carpenter, senior in agricultural journalism; and David Adams, director of Student Publications Inc. and associate professor of journalism and mass communications.

Saylor was denied entrance to the committee's Dec. 17 meeting. The committee is charged with the task of overseeing architects for the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

The committee is comprised of representatives of the KSU Foundation, University administration, K-State Union, Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, Faculty Senate, Student Senate, University Facilities and alumni. At the Dec. 17 meeting, the committee met with officials from the Kansas Board of Regents, the state Division of Architectural Services and employees of Gossen Livingston Associates of Wichita, the architectural firm in charge of the coliseum project.

After discussing the situation with Adams, who is also news director for the Collegian, Saylor and Carpenter returned to request admittance to the meeting.

After consulting by telephone with University Attorney Richard Seaton and taking a committee vote, Program Committee Chairman George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, told them the meeting would remain closed.

Seaton said it was "my opinion that because of the advisory function of the committee, it was not subject to the open meetings law."

In a letter to Seaton, Deputy Attorney General Jeff Southard wrote "an advisory body participates in the decision-making process by gathering information, evaluating options and making recommendations to the governing body, and thereby participates in the conduct of the affairs of the governing body."

The Kansas Open Meetings Act defines a meeting as "any prearranged gathering or assembly by a majority of a quorum of the membership of a body or agency subject to this act for discussing the business or affairs of the body or agency."

Miller said "it was the feeling of the entire committee, with the exception of one individual, that the meeting should be closed."

Charles Reagan, head of the department of philosophy and member of the committee, voted to keep the meeting open.

"I voted for it to be open not because I knew whether legally it had to be open, but because I thought the reason there had been so much adverse publicity about the coliseum was that people did not know what the discussions were and what the problems were, and I didn't see any reason to close the meeting," Reagan said.

"The law is very complex and there are a large number of exceptions, so I wouldn't want to second-guess (other members of the committee)," he said. "Everyone else there except me thought that it should be closed."

Miller said the opinion of the attorney general's office "is not contrary to my own belief. In fact, the meetings since Dec. 17 have all been open."

"The reason that particular meeting was closed was that it was our first meeting and the committee members felt they needed to address some sensitive issues concerning the coliseum," he said.

Adams said he decided to file the complaint because "numerous things have happened this year in which I felt the spirit of the open meetings law had been violated."

"The whole purpose in getting involved was to clarify if these meetings are covered under the Kansas Open Meetings Act, and I think the attorney general's opinion makes it clear that they are," he said.

Southard said instead of dealing with the issue on an individual basis, it "would be better for the University to disseminate the information to other committees to inform them of

NCAA council rules Coleman ineligible

By TIM FITZGERALD
Assistant Sports Editor

K-State forward Norris Coleman has been declared ineligible for practices and games for the remainder of the 1985-86 basketball season.

The decision was handed down Thursday by the National Collegiate Athletic Association's Administrative Council, which ruled Coleman was not a "2.0 qualifier" when he graduated in 1979 from Paxon Senior High School in Jacksonville, Fla.

The Council ruled Coleman's eight-semester grade point average, which was provided to K-State by Paxon, was not consistent with the general procedures used at the time by Paxon to determine a student's eligibility to receive financial aid and to participate under NCAA rules at a Division I institution.

The NCAA requires that eligibility be figured by the standard procedure in use at the school of a prospective student-athlete at the time of his or her graduation. However, in applying to K-State, Coleman requested a transcript which deviated from Paxon's established method.

"The Superintendent of Schools (in Jacksonville) supplied transcripts including grades 10, 11 and 12, but the principal (at Paxon) would supply eight-semester transcripts if the student requested it," Athletic Director Larry Travis said. "The student requested it and that was what was sent to our registrar — an official eight-semester transcript signed by the principal stating (Coleman had) a 2.1 (GPA)."

Calculated on a six-semester basis — Paxon's standard pro-

Marcos loyalists ruin records, Aquino says

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — President Corazon Aquino's Cabinet took over Thursday and her office announced that records in several ministries reportedly had been destroyed by Marcos loyalists.

The new government said hundreds of political prisoners held by the fallen Marcos regime could be freed next week, but extensive paper work slowed the process.

Some political prisoners were freed Thursday, but only one of the 39 people on the list for immediate release actually had gone home by nightfall, said Armando Malay, head of a group of prisoners' families called Kapatid (Brother).

Other prisoners were taken from jails to processing centers and had emotional reunions with relatives while bureaucrats dealt with the documents.

Officials said more than 500 people were in jail on assorted political charges when Ferdinand E. Marcos ended 20 years of rule in the Philippines and fled the country Wednesday in a U.S. Air Force plane. He now is in Hawaii.

Philip Habib, the special U.S. envoy, spent 1½ hours with Aquino on Thursday. A statement from her office said Habib extended "the warmest greetings of President Ronald Reagan and the American people."

He told Aquino that the popular uprising that forced Marcos from office, which was largely peaceful, had "deeply moved the American people and those in the highest circles of the U.S. government," the statement said. It did not say what the two discussed.

Habib paid a fact-finding visit last week during the tense standoff created by Aquino's refusal to concede the Feb. 7 election, which was marred by violence and widespread evidence of fraud. The Marcos-controlled National Assembly proclaimed him the winner.

The stalemate was broken

Health center establishes AIDS policy

By SARAH KESSINGER
Staff Writer

Lafene Student Health Center established its own policy Thursday morning involving the handling of acquired immune deficiency syndrome cases, said Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene.

The policy establishes rules of confidentiality and determines ways to protect Lafene employees from contracting the disease, Tout said.

"The policy was mainly for confidentiality but also for some way of identifying the case to protect the lab persons involved," he said.

There have been cases of AIDS reported at Lafene and Tout said carriers of the antibody do exist on campus. Tout declined to comment about the number of cases reported.

Lafene currently sends people to the Manhattan-Riley County Health Department to determine if they need blood testing for the disease or the antibody HTLV-III, which can be present in a person's bloodstream without infecting them with the disease.

The testing is completed anonymously and if it is positive, the person is encouraged to see a physician and tell people with whom he or she has close contact about the result, Tout said. However, the victim or carrier is not required to inform anyone about the situation.

If the carrier chooses to contact Lafene about the positive test, confidentiality of the AIDS victim or virus-carrier will be kept throughout treatment and counseling at Lafene, Tout said.

As part of the Lafene policy, the patient would be encouraged to continue to see the same physician. The physician for the AIDS carrier would be responsible for contacting those in Lafene who would have contact with the patient, he said. If the physician fails to contact the people working with the patient and one of them were to contract the virus, the physician could be held liable, Tout said.

Some health care workers at Lafene have expressed concern about having contact with victims, said Jeff Martin, student intern at Lafene Mental Health.

"Many health care workers want to know what precautions will be taken to ensure their safety," he said.

As of May 1, the Kansas State Department of Health and Environment will require physicians to report if they diagnose a case of the disease (not the virus), he said.

However, there is no penalty for not reporting it.

Tout said he is "not at all" concerned about AIDS becoming a problem at Lafene because "there isn't a physician on the staff that would hesitate to take care of a carrier that came in the office."

"The more we find out about it, the more comfortable we are," he said, concerning the attitude among physicians at Lafene.

The University AIDS committee has formed two subcommittees. One is to make a general policy on how carriers of the disease will be treated; the other is to educate people at the University about AIDS.

Cindy Burke, Lafene education coordinator, said the medical community is concerned about educating the public about AIDS. The education committee is currently getting information for distribution to those with questions, she said.

"Getting factual information and distributing it can do an awful lot with control and prevention of AIDS" and the hysteria it has caused, Burke said.

According to a report from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, AIDS is a condition where the body's natural immunity against diseases breaks down, causing the victim to be vulnerable to serious illnesses.

If a person contracts the AIDS virus, it does not always lead to the AIDS disease.

Current studies indicate most infected people remain in good health while others may develop the disease, which varies from mild to serious or fatal. Symptoms may occur in some carriers and can include tiredness, fever, loss of appetite and weight, diarrhea, night sweats and swollen glands.

The U.S. Department of Health's report said 94 percent of AIDS cases fall into the following groups of people: sexually active homosexual and bisexual men with multiple partners, 73 percent; present or past abusers of intravenous drugs, 17 percent; persons with hemophilia or other coagulation disorders, 1 percent; heterosexual contacts with someone with AIDS or at risk for AIDS, 1 percent.

Six percent may have contracted the disease in similar ways. Infants and children with AIDS could have been exposed to HTLV-III before or during birth, or soon after through blood transfusions.

Transmission comes through exchange of semen, blood, saliva or urine.

INTERNATIONAL

Attorney asks for acquittal in trial

ROME — The prosecutor recommended Thursday that three Bulgarians be acquitted because he could not prove they conspired in the shooting of Pope John Paul II. He said he was not given time to complete his case.

Antonio Marini appeared to suggest in his lengthy summation, however, that the jury exercise its right to ignore his recommendation. Italian law requires prosecutors to ask for acquittal if they feel the evidence is insufficient.

Acquittal on that basis stops short of complete absolution, with the possibility of future prosecution left open.

At the last minute, Marini tried to have the nine-month-long trial reopened so he could call more witnesses. Judge Severino Santiapichi denied his request and the prosecutor, clearly angry, said he was "obligated" to seek acquittals.

Three Bulgarians and four Turks were charged in the conspiracy case. The panel of two judges and six citizen jurors is not bound by the recommendation and all defendants in custody will be held until a verdict is delivered, probably late next month.

Italian juries reach their decisions by majority vote.

Great Pyramids scene of warfare

CAIRO, Egypt — Witnesses said soldiers fired tank cannon and automatic weapons at mutinous paramilitary forces near the Great Pyramids on Thursday and the battle continued into the night. Officials had reported the rebellion over.

Rioting broke out Tuesday night after paramilitary conscripts heard rumors that their three-year tour of duty had been extended by one year.

They rampaged through the streets, setting fire to hotels, nightclubs and shops, and stormed a prison where Islamic fundamentalists are jailed.

President Hosni Mubarak's chief political adviser, Osama el-Baz, told reporters that 36 people were killed and 321 injured in the riots.

He said 32 conscripts, two soldiers and two civilians were killed, and most of the wounded were conscripts.

Witnesses ask for aid for farmers

TOPEKA — The state should pick up college tuition costs when a displaced farmer decides to learn new skills or perfect existing ones, representatives from farm and educational groups told a Senate committee Thursday.

The witnesses urged the Senate Agriculture Committee to endorse a bill that would create a statewide grant program for farmers who have left the business for financial reasons and who want to go to a vocational-technical school, a state-run university or a community college.

Under such a program, community colleges, state universities and vo-tech schools would pay the cost of the tuition of a displaced farmer and his or her spouse and be reimbursed by the state.

The program would allow farmers to go to eight semesters at a state-run university or four semesters at a vocational school or community college without paying tuition.

The state Board of Regents would set standards to determine who would be eligible for such a program.

Senate approves budget measure

TOPEKA — The Kansas Senate on Thursday passed, 39-0, and sent the House a bill which appropriates $3.2 million for the Board of Indigents Defense Services and $40.4 million for the judicial branch of government.

The indigents board pays the cost of providing public defenders while the judicial budget includes $4.07 million for operation of the Court of Appeals and the Kansas Supreme Court and $36.3 million for the district courts of the state in the fiscal year which starts July 1.

Center discloses kidnapping figures

WASHINGTON — The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children said Thursday its study had found 1,299 cases of the kidnapping or attempted kidnapping of children by non-family members over six years.

Center officials said at a news conference that 70 percent of those kidnapping victims were also victims of sexual assault, murder or physical assault.

Center director Jay Howell said the 1,299 were all the cases that the center knows about of kidnapping by non-family members. But he said the center did not undertake an exhaustive study and believes there are other cases it is unaware of. A child was considered to be someone under 18 years of age.

"Now we have real data about the nature of kidnapping," he said. "It shows us that kidnapping has not been taken seriously enough."

While the statistics involved kidnapping by non-family members, the study was not restricted to acts by strangers, so some of the non-family members may have been known or familiar to the victim.

Ozark Airlines gets takeover bid

NEW YORK — The parent company of Ozark Airlines said Thursday it had received a $224 million takeover bid from the much-larger Trans World Airlines, which itself was the center of a bitter acquisition struggle last year.

Ozark Holdings Inc., which is based in St. Louis, said its board of directors was meeting to consider the bid by New York-based TWA, which also has major operations in St. Louis.

"We have received a merger proposal from Trans World, in which Ozark Holdings would become a subsidiary of TWA and Ozark stockholders would receive $19 in cash. The Ozark board is meeting today (Thursday) to consider the proposal," said Donald Morrison, Ozark's vice president for public affairs.

With approximately 11.77 million Ozark shares outstanding, the offer is worth about $224 million.

Judge refuses to issue gag order

MIDDLEBURY, Vt. — A district judge has refused to order attorneys and police not to talk about cocaine charges against John A. Zaccaro Jr., the son of former Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro.

Charles Tetzlaff argued that statements made last week by Middlebury Police Sgt. David Wemette to The Burlington Free Press and New York Post have jeopardized Zaccaro's chance for a fair trial.

In his ruling Wednesday, Judge Frank Mahady, disagreed. "I am satisfied we have many tools...which we can use if necessary to assure a fair proceeding with Mr. Zaccaro," he said.

Zaccaro, 22, a Middlebury College senior, was arrested last week after allegedly selling an undercover police officer a quarter-gram of cocaine. Among the evidence seized in a search of his off-campus apartment and car were eight grams of cocaine, $1,635 in cash and checks and drug sale records, police said.

He has pleaded innocent to possession of cocaine with the intent to sell.

Soviet musician to play in festival

HOUSTON — Tikhon Khrennikov, a Soviet musician accused of repressing some of that country's most noted 20th-century composers, has accepted an invitation from the Houston Symphony Orchestra to participate in a festival May 20-22.

Khrennikov, 72, chairman of the Union of Soviet Composers since 1948, also has been commissioned to compose a short fanfare commemorating the 150th anniversary of Texas' independence from Mexico.

Rural Kansas crisis requires fresh approach, Carlin says

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

The state is in poor financial shape as a direct result of the deteriorating farm economy, and Kansans must alter their approach to solving economic problems if conditions are to improve, Gov. John Carlin said Thursday.

"We are not in a cycle; we are in a depression. Unless people understand that nothing will change," the two-term Democrat governor told 200 people attending an afternoon session of the Kansas Bankers Association's annual agriculture conference in the Union.

Carlin said that following discussions with congressional leaders and governors who attended the National Governors Association in Washington, D.C., he is convinced most lawmakers do not understand the problems of agricultural states in the Midwest.

"A lot of states are doing well. It was a divided scene in Washington. The majority of the governors are doing well. The Northeast states are booming because of the high-tech industry, but those in the Midwest — especially in the North Central states — are hurting," Carlin said.

Kansas had the first bank failure in the nation in 1986 and was among the top three states in bank failures in 1985 with 13, the greatest number of bank failures in the state since the Great Depression.

The problems of farm bankers in Kansas are made up of the same bleak list of woes that beset all of agriculture. Land values, the collateral holding up most agriculture loans, plunged faster last year than in the three previous years. Farm exports declined further, and commodity prices dropped, straining the resources of farm banks.

In response to a statement made by acting Agriculture Secretary Frank Naylor Jr., at the bankers' conference Thursday morning, Carlin said he believes more than 10 percent of Kansas farmers are in financial trouble.

Naylor said despite drops in land value and commodity prices, nearly 90 percent of farmers are in financially stable positions. But 9.9 percent of them carry 45 percent of the nation's total agriculture debt with the percentage being even higher in Kansas, he said.

But Carlin said he disagrees with Naylor.

"It is hard to believe that 80 to 90 percent of farmers are in good shape. We rank No. 1 in bank closings, businesses are going out of business faster than anyone can remember."

"When there were six implement dealers in one community and only one now, it's obvious something is wrong. The figure can't be 10 percent," Carlin said after his speech.

Carlin said solutions to the current farm crisis in Kansas will come when "we break from the tradition of sticking to the past."

"We are celebrating 125 years of history, but time is moving fast. We must compete, and that requires that we respond in a different way," Carlin said.

Chairman criticizes NASA actions

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the presidential Challenger commission bluntly denounced NASA Thursday for a "clearly flawed" decision-making process, after hearing of a second instance in which the space agency brushed aside contractor fears for the safety of the shuttle and crew.

Summarizing three days of hearings at which several witnesses complained that their concerns were not passed to the agency's top officials, Chairman William Rogers lectured four senior NASA officials: "You eliminate the element of good judgment and common sense."

Rogers said he was speaking for the whole panel and said the process "should require people to take stands, and you should have a record on it."

His statement came on the heels of testimony by the official who decided to launch Challenger that he rejected an unsafe-to-fly warning from the spaceplane's manufacturer, because "it was not an objection to launch."

Arnold Aldrich, the No. 2 man in the shuttle program, said he rejected an objection on the morning of the Jan. 28 liftoff by Rockwell International that ice on Pad 39B made conditions "not safe to launch."

But, he told the presidential commission, "I would think it was more than reasonable that if someone were still concerned this was a very bad judgment or bad action, they would call me. I left every opportunity for that to happen" in the time between the 9 a.m. objection and the 11:38 a.m. launch. No such call came.

"It seems to me that if you are going to have a decision-making process with key people involved, it ought to be clear where they stand," said Rogers, as he closed out the second phase of public testimony.

"You will remember that I did say at one point that we thought the decision-making process may be flawed," he added. "I think I'm speaking for the whole commission when I say we think it is flawed."

He told the four senior launch officials that "the recommendations that were made were either not fully understood by you or not conveyed to you."

Rogers said Thursday's hearing was the last public session planned on the decision process, although the panel will continue its work in private. The next public hearing will not come for a week at least, he said.

The commission, appointed by President Reagan on Feb. 3, was given 120 days to make its report.

Rogers, who has grown increasingly vocal in his criticism about gaps in the information flow to officials making critical launch decisions, seemed particularly surprised by the Rockwell testimony.

"If the decision-making process is such that the prime contractor thinks he objected and says — testifies under oath — that they took a position that it was unsafe to launch and you say 'that was not our understanding,' that shows a serious deficiency in the process," Rogers said.

Rockwell's testimony about its concerns that ice could damage the Challenger made it the second major contractor to express reservations about the cold before the launch, which cost the lives of seven astronauts and destroyed one of four shuttles in America's fleet.

Earlier in the week, engineers from Morton Thiokol, which manufactures the shuttle's booster rockets, said they argued against the launch because they feared booster safety seals would not work properly after a night in sub-freezing weather.

Aldrich on Thursday echoed statements by other top NASA launch officials: "Until the events following (flight) 51L (the Challenger disaster), I was not aware of temperature concerns with solid rocket booster seams or seals."

William Lucas, director of NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center who followed Aldrich to the witness table, said he had never considered the seals a "threat to the safety of flight."

Carlin proclaims day in honor of Hartman

By The Collegian Staff

Gov. John Carlin has proclaimed Saturday to be Jack Hartman Day in state-wide recognition of his accomplishments which include being the winningest coach in K-State history.

Hartman will coach his final home game Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

In 1981, Carlin proclaimed Jack Hartman Day in Kansas after the Wildcats advanced to the final eight teams in the NCAA tournament.

Several pre-game presentations will be made honoring Hartman's contributions to the basketball program, the University and throughout Kansas, said Kenny Mossman, administrative assistant to Athletic Director Larry Travis.

Mark Jones, senior in management and 1985-86 Student Senate chairman, will present Hartman with a certificate of commendation on behalf of the student body.

Mossman said people attending the game should arrive 10 minutes early for ceremonies because the game will begin as scheduled.

A special presentation honoring Hartman's wife, Pat, will be made at half time of Saturday's game.

Hartman has a 589-277 record in his past 31 seasons of coaching including a 295-167 record at K-State.

While at K-State, Hartman has led the Wildcats to seven NCAA post-season appearances and three regular season Big Eight Conference championships in 16 seasons.

ALCOHOL & the BODY

1. MOUTH AND ESOPHAGUS

Alcohol irritates the delicate linings of the throat and esophagus; that's why it causes a burning sensation as it goes down.

2. STOMACH AND INTESTINES

Alcohol also irritates the stomach's protective lining, and can result in gastric or duodenal ulcers. In the small intestine, alcohol blocks absorption of substances such as thiamine, folic acid, xylose, fat, vitamin B1, vitamin B12, and amino acids.

3. BLOODSTREAM

Ninety-five percent of the alcohol taken into the body is absorbed into the bloodstream through the lining of the stomach and duodenum. Alcohol causes a slowing of the circulation systems and deprives tissues of oxygen. Alcohol also slows the ability of white blood cells to engulf and destroy bacteria and the clotting ability of blood platelets.

4. PANCREAS

Alcohol irritates the cells of the pancreas and can lead to acute hemorrhagic pancreatitis. Pancreatitis can destroy the pancreas and create a lack of insulin.

5. LIVER

Alcohol inflames and destroys the cells of the liver. This condition prevents bile from being properly filtered through the liver. Jaundice develops, turning the whites of the eyes and the skin yellow.

6. HEART

Alcohol causes inflammation of the heart muscle.

7. URINARY BLADDER AND KIDNEYS

Alcohol inflames the lining of the urinary bladder. In the kidneys, alcohol causes an increased loss of fluids through its irritating effect.

8. SEX GLANDS

Swelling of the prostate gland caused by alcohol interferes with the ability of the male to perform sexually. It also interferes with the ability of the male and female to climax during intercourse.

9. BRAIN

The most dramatic and noticed effect alcohol has on the brain. It produces lack of coordination, confusion, disorientation, stupor, anesthesia, coma and finally death. Alcohol kills brain cells and any damage is permanent.

Reagan supports call for defense spending

If President Reagan had his way, everything covered by the federal government's budget would suffer except defense spending. If everything suffers except the national defense budget, there won't be a country to defend.

In an address broadcast nationally Wednesday, the president declared that cutting defense is "not cheap (and) it's not safe." Reagan's definition of "safe" is questionable.

Under the Gramm-Rudman Act, 25 percent to 50 percent will be cut from most domestic programs, according to a study by Management Systems Inc. and the Center for Defense Information.

Ironically, even larger percentage cuts may occur in certain law enforcement areas including the U.S. prison system, presidential protection, the FBI and patrolling the U.S. borders. Patrolling the U.S. borders — isn't this integral to the safety of U.S. citizens?

The FBI, the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms could receive up to 63 percent in funding cuts by 1990 if Congress agrees to Reagan's plans to increase defense spending by about 3 percent above inflation in each of the next four years. Reagan is not even talking about maintaining the current defense budget; he is suggesting further increases.

If Congress votes to make equal cuts from defense and domestic programs, these vital internal law enforcement programs would still face possible 42 percent cuts.

Agriculture programs have not yet been mentioned, but it is well known that Reagan believes the agriculture industry should carry a large load of the budget cuts.

Reagan is so caught up in bargaining with the Soviet Union over nuclear arms reduction he is failing to serve the best interests of the people. The United States has a three-part nuclear defense system — air, land and sea. U.S. nuclear warheads could blow up the world 10 times over. Further expansion of national defense is nothing but redundant.

If President Reagan is interested in a safer, more secure United States, he should work for improvements in agriculture, education and law enforcement. Starving people are not safe, even if protected by all the world's nuclear arsenals.

Policy banning pets should be maintained

The Jardine Terrace Mayors Council is considering changes in the existing policy concerning pets at Jardine.

The policy change would allow Jardine residents to own cats. It is true that pets often provide companionship and love. But Jardine Terrace Apartments are not the place for cats or dogs.

First, the apartments are small and built closely together. There is a provision barring ownership of dogs because of noise. Although cats are not as loud as dogs, with the proximity of the apartments they can be heard. To have pets in these conditions would be unfair to the pets and the neighbors.

Damage to the apartment is a factor. The regulation would forbid pets in furnished apartments, but other maintenance factors, including the floors, cabinets, and woodwork, should be considered. In addition, the last thing University maintenance crews need is to ward off a feisty animal when trying to make repairs in an apartment.

The health and safety of children living at Jardine is important. A provision in the new regulation states that all pets must be kept indoors, but is there any way to guarantee that the animal can't get out?

A fairness factor also enters into consideration. Is it fair to allow pets into Jardine but not the residence halls? The University owns and maintains both living areas. Special rules should not be applied to one area and not another.

Agriculture issue baffles legislators

Someone should write the story of the American agriculture industry, and publish it in Ripley's "Believe it or Not."

It would be difficult to find a better example of consistently ruinous legislation grappling with an equally stubborn will to survive despite legislation. Farmers and politicians were once a fairly even match — in fact our Founding Fathers were landowners and farmers — but as concerned as state and federal lawmakers appear now about the farm crisis, most of them are confused as to what the farm crisis actually is and what needs to be done to repair it.

Farmers told America and its politicians what they needed to retain solvency years ago — fair prices for their crops — but Congress preferred not to take the advice of farmers and instead approved higher credit limits and relaxed loan eligibility requirements.

As a result, government agriculture agencies are currently the proud guardians of a $210 billion farm debt. This does not represent the total farm debt, only the generous portion the government dished out for themselves.

Kansas legislators are having their share of proud moments, too. Just Wednesday the attorney general's office urged support of a bill which would allow corporations to own farmland they acquire as long as they first offer it for lease or sale to the farmers who lost the land.

Wow. What foresight in legislation. These people think giving farmers the first right of refusal to lease or repurchase the land they formerly owned is a step toward alleviating local farmers' problems. I seriously doubt

JONIE TRUED
Collegian
Columnist

Kansas farmers who have lost their savings, equipment, homes and finally their land are going to be able to buy more than a tenement house at the edge of town. Certainly they will not have the financial backing to repurchase land they've lost through foreclosure or they've sold under deflated prices.

Farmers who would be capable of leasing the land back would have it even rougher. Banks are not loaning out too much money lately to farmers who have been foreclosed on or who no longer own anything remotely related to collateral. Where these land-leasing farmers would go to find a bank to give them a loan large enough to plant crops in the leased land is a question many farmers would like answered as well.

The whole planting process has gotten so expensive it is simply not possible for farmers to seed properly without a loan. A 50-pound bag of wheat seed can cost anywhere from $8 to $18, and because planting rates in Kansas average about 60 pounds per acre, a farmer planting a section of land can spend between $6,144 to $13,824 just for seed. In addition they must pay for fertilizer, fuel, extra labor and repairs to the massive pieces of machinery. They must also buy insurance against crop failure. As yet there is no insurance against low prices and grain embargos.

Legislation directed to agriculture must take a turn for the smarter and soon. More importantly, state and federal lawmakers should be forced to analyze the real problems in agriculture and respond to those problems. The current high debt, for example, is not the problem. It is the most immediate symptom of all the problems beneath it. Legislators who slap Band-Aid laws on victims of internal bleeding will soon bury the patient.

The agriculture industry needs a strong, informed, charismatic leader who can guide legislators to responsible decision-making in regard to agriculture policies. Lee Iaccoca would be my first choice. But until the necessary leader is found it is still up to the weary citizens of this country to educate and influence elected officials. We can no longer trustingly allow lawmakers to make decisions because we think they might know something we don't. They may know politics, but they do not know agriculture.

American agriculture has survived two devastating crises in the past — the drought of the 1890s and again in the 1930s along with the Depression — and each time the industry was dramatically changed for the better by technological advances. It will continue to survive in some form but the changes are not going to be good ones this time.

If the knee-jerk reactions of state and federal lawmakers are any indication, farming might become an occupation no sordid science fiction story has ever described.

'Pleasant Belt'

Editor,
Re: The column, "Pop music logs cultural attitudes," in the Feb. 20 Collegian:

Rich Harris has deemed New Jersey, Maryland and "most of Pennsylvania" as the "Unpleasant Belt." The typical reader of the Collegian is expected to relate to such a statement instantly. I have spent years in these states and I don't know what he is talking about. What criteria was used to set the boundaries of this dreadful belt? What saved surrounding states, say, New York or Delaware from being included?

And why most of Pennsylvania? What parts of Pennsylvania are absolved from being in the "Unpleasant Belt?" Philly? Slippery Rock State? The Poconos? I'll bet Scranton isn't. It has too much economic depression — though the situation doesn't involve farmers. I wonder if Pittsburgh is part of the belt. Experts from Rand McNally chose it as America's "most livable city" in 1985.

Students such as those at K-State who are required to take three semesters of composition and oral communications to learn to support their points when communicating don't wish to see evidence of such shortcomings in their campus newspaper.

I'm not even sure if Harris has been to any of these places (apparently he hasn't) and, if he has indeed had physical exposure to them, has it been extensive enough to make such an extreme accusation?

I have listened to too many people who have never so much as set foot east of Missouri make jokes about New Jersey, which I suspect they get from watching "Saturday Night Live." New York is allowed to make fun of New Jersey without basis because they are neighbors. It is part of mutual, ongoing, jestful parliance. For someone from say, Kansas, to make fun of New Jersey makes as much sense and is about as jestful as Jerseyites making fun of a rival state of Kansas, say Missouri.

Just what, I ask, is so "unpleasant" about beaches, liquor by the drink on Sunday, access to cities, fresh seafood, casinos, racetracks, lotteries, street life, easterners, mania for such sports as lacrosse and crew, the Atlantic Ocean, boardwalks, harbors, bays, hot concerts, first-run theater, real bagels, fast-paced activity, culture, significant architecture, rich tradition, and the most current fashions and trends while they're still current? All these things are what Phil Collins' song, "In the Air," conjures up for me since I was lucky enough to be living in the "Unpleasant Belt" during the summer of 1981.

Harris must not realize that anyone can engage in "singing Beatles' love songs and drinking ale to enhance the harmony" on Sunday in the "Unpleasant Belt" without a club card.

Having written this, in deference to Harris' discussion of music and cultural attitudes, I think I'll play Springsteen's "Jersey Girl" — "cause down the shore everything's all right."

Dark side of news

Editor,
I've known students who have ventured into Farrell Library only as far as the basement enrollment lines, students who've only been in Lafene Student Health Center to drop off immunization records and students who've never attended a K-State basketball game or gone to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, but I've never met a student who hasn't read the Collegian. Whether this is a compliment to the staff or Jim Davis, I'm not sure.

In light of recent allocations of funds and talk of new student fees that have many wondering, "How will that benefit me?" one institution on campus that could stand improvement, benefitting all K-State students, is improved newsprint for the Collegian. I enjoy reading the paper at breakfast; it's an educational publication — how else would I have learned to eat toast with a fork. It's widened my horizons — how else would I have seen a chimney sweep at work if I hadn't hired one to clean my backpack.

It's funny — how else could you laugh at the one who enters class unintentionally imitating a coal miner. If you're really into black comedy, it's funny when someone accidentally lets a paper that's going to be handed in come in contact with the Collegian.

Even so, hopefully someday I'll be able to put the Collegian down without the words, "Book her, Danno," running through my mind.

News judgment

Editor,
I am curious as to how the staff of the Collegian decides what information is newsworthy and if possible importance to readers. What are the requirements for relevance? How are these decisions made? What are the standards determining pertinence? Your credibility as even a mediocre newspaper slips badly when a story describing the engagement of two K-State cheerleaders is printed. Not to negate the happiness of these two individuals, but why is this event of such importance? Why did it warrant not only a substantial story, but two photographs as well, one nearly a fourth of a page? Does the printing of this story mean that in the future all newly engaged people will receive the same attention?

Students sign letter, protest budget cuts

By ERIN EICHER
Staff Writer

The Office of Minority Affairs and Special Programs has instigated a letter-writing campaign in protest of the Gramm-Rudman act's impending "butchery" of federal education funds.

Today is the last day a letter will be available at a table in the K-State Union for student signatures. The letter is symbolically written on a roll of butcher paper traditionally used to wrap meat, said Suzie Wisdom, minority affairs secretary and freshman in business administration.

"In effect, what they (legislators) are doing is butchering. There's no easy way to go about reducing the deficit, so they're just going to start hacking away," Wisdom said.

Students participating in the Federal Work-Study and TRIO programs, and students receiving Pell Grants and National Direct Student Loans would be most directly affected by the first round of cutbacks, Wisdom said.

The TRIO programs, administered through the minority affairs office, include Upward Bound and Special Services. Both would be facing about a 4 percent cut in the first round, with the possibility of an additional 25 percent budget cut in October, said Anne Butler, director for Educational Supportive Services.

A federal review panel determined part of the legislation, which would call for automatic cutbacks in domestic spending totaling $50 billion, may be unconstitutional. The U.S. Supreme Court will make a final decision in July, Butler said.

This letter is intended to have some impact in the re-evaluation of the bill, she said. The minority affairs office plans to send it to President Ronald Reagan; Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Wichita; Sen. Robert Dole, R-Russell and Rep. James Slattery, D-Topeka.

Today was declared National TRIO Day to increase awareness of the opportunities offered by this federal program, one of several student financing aids affected by budget cuts.

"In terms of impact on this campus, TRIO programs have been responsible for $300,000 (in student funding) over a three-year period," Butler said.

Participants in the TRIO programs are from low-income families, are members of an ethnic minority or have a physical limitation. They are often the first members of their family to go on to higher education, Wisdom said.

Senate proposes faculty salary increase

From Staff and Wire Reports

TOPEKA — Faculty salaries at state-run universities would go up by 3 percent and their retirement benefits would increase by 1 percent next year, under a plan members of the Senate Ways and Means Committee agreed to Thursday.

The proposed salary increases would ignore Gov. John Carlin's recommendation of no pay hike for faculty members at the six state universities and Kansas Technical Institute during the fiscal year that begins July 1.

Instead, Carlin would spend $9.1 million to eliminate employee contributions to their retirement program, which would result in a 5 percent increase in take-home pay.

The plan the committee approved would use about 75 percent of the $9.1 million for the 3 percent salary increase and 25 percent of the money for the increase in retirement benefits.

In addition, the panel voted to spend more than Carlin recommended in connection with the disposition of excess student fees, for student salaries, for general operating expenses and to allow the schools to keep some of the money they saved on utility bills.

The biggest departure from Carlin's budget for schools governed by the Kansas Board of Regents came when the panel added $1.6 million for general operations, a category known as "Other Operating Expenses."

The governor had recommended a 2 percent increase in the $81.2 million the state spent last year for the schools' general operating expenses but the committee added another 2 percent.

Under the proposal, universities would be allowed to keep the fees they collected during the current budget year that were in excess of what the Kansas Legislature authorized them to spend in 1985. The governor recommended no such action.

Sen. Wint Winter Jr., R-Lawrence, said allowing the universities to keep the money would help the schools recover extra costs associated with increased enrollments without having the amount taken off the next general fund appropriations.

"What we did today is very good new for higher education. When the state seeks to work for economic development it needs to recognize that the quality of higher education is won of the state's strengths," Winter said.

Winter said this indicates a consensus that more money is needed and that a tax package will probably be developed before the end of the session.

If the excess fee plan becomes law, the University of Kansas would receive a windfall of $226,326, Pittsburg State University would get $45,335 and Fort Hays State University would keep $5,490 in excess fees. In addition, KTI would receive a special general fund appropriation of $11,251 to make up for a lower-than-expected student fee collections.

Carlin had asked for no increase in the amount allocated this year for student salaries, which are expected to total $6.7 million. But the committee voted to increase the budget by 4 percent, or about $269,000.

Morris Kleiner, representing the Kansas State Conference of the American Association of University Professors, said the Senate committee's recommendation is not enough.

"I think it is disappointing. It will certainly not allow us to move up in competition with our peer institutions. It will still cause some faculty to be paid less than their peers," Kleiner told the Senate committee.

SWEDISH MASSAGE

A Hands-on Experience

Bob Parr, a Junction City masseur, demonstrates a back massage using the hacking technique.

Swedish massage...the classic massage...the art of relaxation.

Massages are given for reasons ranging from the need to relieve tension after a hard day's work, to helping soothe a sore muscle.

"The Swedish massage style is a style that incorporates various techniques that are designed to warm the blood, thin the blood, increase the blood flow in order to saturate the muscles and, therefore, have them relax," said Bob Parr, a free-lance out-call professional masseur in Junction City.

Parr is a part-time masseur and teaches basic massage classes. He has been a masseur for eight years and practiced professionally for 2½ years.

Parr recently taught a class at University for Man to help people learn how to give a good massage.

"First of all, massage is not a four-letter word," he said. "We frequently think of massage as associated with massage parlors."

"Not only is it OK to give and receive a massage, it's easy," Parr said. "I really believe the worst massage you will ever receive is going to be wonderful, and then they just get a little better."

"Probably the only difference between a 'professional or paid masseur' and a good friend, is the masseur or masseuse will have a system to work by," Parr said.

A masseur is not a massage technician or an occupational health therapist. A masseur's main job is to help the person receiving the massage relax, Parr said.

The person giving the massage should warm up his hands first to help prevent getting cramps while giving the massage, Parr said. This can be done by bending and massaging the fingers for a few minutes before starting the massage.

The masseur can also practice how much pressure he applies by pressing on a bathroom scale, Parr said. Just press until the number of pounds of pressure applied is what you want (for the back, usually about 30) and remember how it feels to your fingers.

In comparison, a facial massage calls for only very slight pressure, Parr said.

If the person receiving the massage is ticklish in some places, applying more pressure usually helps him not feel ticklish. If increased pressure does not work, Parr said to avoid the area.

There are times when a massage is not recommended, Parr said. If a person is ill and running a fever, the increase in circulation resulting from the massage could cause the infection to spread. If a person has an injury, and he has not consulted with a doctor, the injured area should be avoided when giving a massage.

Chronic problems such as back or leg injuries can be massaged, but special care should be used when working on these areas. If the person is under the care of a chiropractor, nothing should be done to interfere with the patient's treatment, he said.

A basic, full massage includes the feet, legs, arms, back, neck and face. Different masseurs will start and end in different places but that doesn't matter as far as the result of the massage goes, Parr said.

The atmosphere is important and should be warm enough to avoid being chilled and cool enough to avoid sweating. The lighting should be relaxing for the receiver of the massage.

There are four basic movements to the Swedish massage — effleurage, petrisage, tapotement and vibration.

Effleurage is the first stroke used to warm up the muscles in the legs, arms and back. It is a smooth, flowing stroke using flat, open hands. The pressure is heavier when going toward the heart and lighter when moving away from the heart.

Petrisage uses the fingers and the thumbs to give more direct pressure to specific areas.

Tapotement uses four techniques to invigorate the skin and reach deeper muscles. Hacking is done with the edge of the hands in a chopping movement.

Cupping is done with the palm of the hand cupped "like the old radio shows made the sound of horse hoofs." Clapping is also done with the palm of the hand but the palm is open and the movement is like a gentle slapping. Cuffing uses the side of loosely fisted hands with a gentle pounding movement.

Vibration is a method of grasping the body firmly and vibrating the hand.

Oils can be used to reduce friction while giving a massage. Mineral oil, baby oil or vegetable oil are common and a small amount of mint can be added to the oil for scent, Parr said. Lotion is used for the facial massage.

A table or a firm bed is best for a massage. Pillows and towels can be used to make the receiver more comfortable, he said.

The art of giving a massage can be learned by trial and error, Parr said. A masseur uses a certain method each time, but giving a massage is easy.

BSU members discuss issues concerning buppies, racism

By LESLIE ALLEN
Collegian Reporter

The existence of buppies, black urban professionals, are one of many issues black students face on campus.

Seven members of Black Student Union attended a Big Eight Conference Feb. 7 through 9, at the University of Missouri, Columbia, where issues concerning black students were discussed.

"They talked about black urban professionals as being those people who, after they graduate, move to urban areas and leave their culture and society. They wear designer clothes, belong to all of the right clubs which is all OK, but remember where you came from, and try to help your race," said Andrea Shelton, senior in family life and child development.

The title of the session was "A Changing Role of Black Student Government, Buppies and Apathy," said Lenior Simons, senior in political science. The speaker was Stephen Sneed, dean of students at Lincoln University, Jefferson City, Mo.

"The speaker talked about buppies being so concerned with money and success that they were neglecting some of the issues that the black community is facing," Simons said.

Two of these issues are racism and poverty, Simons said.

"Once they get to that stage where they are financially stable, they forget about how they got started, or where they came from, or to come back and help others," said Crescentia Brown, junior in architecture.

That is not something expected of them, but it is something Sneed thinks they should do, Simons said.

"Because he said the line between where they are and where they are from is very thin, and they should realize that," she said.

One way to help other blacks is to go to different schools and "tell the students I made it, this is how I made it and this is what you need to do to make it," Shelton said.

A problem with buppies occurs when black children are patterned in a situation that does not allow them to learn about black history and the genealogy of their individual families, Shelton said.

"If a black child is raised in a predominantly white community, and if I didn't ask questions, or if my mother was not a civil rights activist, I would have never known where my ancestors came from because they don't teach that kind of stuff in history classes," Shelton said.

"They (parents) think that 'I've made it. I'm not going to let my children go through segregation. I'm going to isolate them from any of that,' but it hurts (the children) because when they get out on their own, they are made fun of, and they're wondering why," Shelton said.

Retention and the need for role models are other issues concerning blacks, Simons said.

"I can remember when this woman came up for summer enrollment, and she was surrounded by all these white people, and she got intimidated and went home, but that is not a problem for all blacks," she said.

"I feel we need to have blacks in some key positions (in the University) so blacks don't feel so isolated because isolation is a big problem," Simons said.

Brown said the transition from her home community of Topeka was not difficult "because I was used to seeing white people all of the time. In fact, the only time I saw black people was in my church."

"A lot of the black students here come from large cities, such as Kansas City, Detroit, New York and Chicago and they are used to city life, but this is an agriculture school, and they're (the white students) coming from the rural areas and small towns," Shelton said.

"So they may only have had only one or two black families in their town, and when you have one or two, the black family is most likely going to be white-oriented because it is living among white people. So when you come to school, the white people expect the blacks to act their way," Shelton said.

"When I try, not to forget that I'm black, but just be a person, I'm always faced with a racial remark or something that reminds me that there's no way they're going to let you fit in," Simons said.

Senate elects 1986 chairwoman

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate elected Sally Traeger, junior in marketing, as senate chairwoman at its meeting Thursday night in the Union Big Eight room. Traeger replaces outgoing chairman Mark Jones, senior in management.

Gretchen Hagen, junior in history, was also nominated for the chairman position.

"One of my main goals is to help communicate with the students,"

Traeger said. "I want to see senators going out to the living groups. We need to get the off-campus students in to talk to us. We can do this through the communications committee, graduate council and SEA (Students for Educational Awareness)."

Senate also elected Martin Monto, junior in biology, as senate vice chairman. Wally Brockhoff, junior in agricultural economics, was the other vice chairman candidate.

"I would like to try to make groups coming to senate feel more comfortable," Monto said. "This can be a very intimidating body and I want to be a liaison, making people outside student government feel less alienated."

Susan Baird, junior in journalism and mass communications, was elected unanimously as the student senate representative to Faculty Senate.

In other business, senate also designated student interns for senate.

BSU members discuss issues concerning buppies, racism

By LESLIE ALLEN
Collegian Reporter

The existence of buppies, black urban professionals, are one of many issues black students face on campus.

Seven members of Black Student Union attended a Big Eight Conference Feb. 7 through 9, at the University of Missouri, Columbia, where issues concerning black students were discussed.

"They talked about black urban professionals as being those people who, after they graduate, move to urban areas and leave their culture and society. They wear designer clothes, belong to all of the right clubs which is all OK, but remember where you came from, and try to help your race," said Andrea Shelton, senior in family life and child development.

The title of the session was "A Changing Role of Black Student Government, Buppies and Apathy," said Lenior Simons, senior in political science. The speaker was Stephen Sneed, dean of students at Lincoln University, Jefferson City, Mo.

"The speaker talked about buppies being so concerned with money and success that they were neglecting some of the issues that the black community is facing," Simons said.

Two of these issues are racism and poverty, Simons said.

"Once they get to that stage where they are financially stable, they forget about how they got started, or where they came from, or to come back and help others," said Crescentia Brown, junior in architecture.

That is not something expected of them, but it is something Sneed thinks they should do, Simons said.

"Because he said the line between where they are and where they are from is very thin, and they should realize that," she said.

One way to help other blacks is to go to different schools and "tell the students I made it, this is how I made it and this is what you need to do to make it," Shelton said.

A problem with buppies occurs when black children are patterned in a situation that does not allow them to learn about black history and the genealogy of their individual families, Shelton said.

"If a black child is raised in a predominantly white community, and if I didn't ask questions, or if my mother was never known where my ancestors came from because they don't teach that kind of stuff in history classes," Shelton said.

"They (parents) think that 'I've made it. I'm not going to let my children go through segregation. I'm going to isolate them from any of that,' but it hurts (the children) because when they get out on their own, they are made fun of, and they're wondering why," Shelton said.

Retention and the need for role models are other issues concerning blacks, Simons said.

"I can remember when this woman came up for summer enrollment, and she was surrounded by all these white people, and she got intimidated and went home, but that is not a problem for all blacks," she said.

"I feel we need to have blacks in some key positions (in the University) so blacks don't feel so isolated because isolation is a big problem," Simons said.

Brown said the transition from her home community of Topeka was not difficult "because I was used to seeing white people all of the time. In fact, the only time I saw black people was in my church."

"A lot of the black students here come from large cities, such as Kansas City, Detroit, New York and Chicago and they are used to city life, but this is an agriculture school, and they're (the white students) coming from the rural areas and small towns," Shelton said.

"So they may only have had only one or two black families in their town, and when you have one or two, the black family is most likely going to be white-oriented because it is living among white people. So when you come to school, the white people expect the blacks to act their way," Shelton said.

"When I try, not to forget that I'm black, but just be a person, I'm always faced with a racial remark or something that reminds me that there's no way they're going to let you fit in," Simons said.

Senate elects 1986 chairwoman

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate elected Sally Traeger, junior in marketing, as senate chairwoman at its meeting Thursday night in the Union Big Eight room. Traeger replaces outgoing chairman Mark Jones, senior in management.

Gretchen Hagen, junior in history, was also nominated for the chairman position.

"One of my main goals is to help communicate with the students,"

Traeger said. "I want to see senators going out to the living groups. We need to get the off-campus students in to talk to us. We can do this through the communications committee, graduate council and SEA (Students for Educational Awareness)."

Senate also elected Martin Monto, junior in biology, as senate vice chairman. Wally Brockhoff, junior in agricultural economics, was the other vice chairman candidate.

"I would like to try to make groups coming to senate feel more comfortable," Monto said. "This can be a very intimidating body and I want to be a liaison, making people outside student government feel less alienated."

Susan Baird, junior in journalism and mass communications, was elected unanimously as the student senate representative to Faculty Senate.

In other business, senate also designated student interns for senate.

The Pirates of Penzance

A rambunctious band of pirates and a prim group of sisters share a topsy-turvy adventure as "The Pirates of Penzance" raid the McCain Auditorium stage this weekend.

Gilbert and Sullivan's spoof of the extravaganzas and absurdities of Italian opera opened last night and will be performed at 8 p.m. tonight and Saturday. The production is a joint effort of the K-State Players and the Departments of Speech and Music.

As the operetta opens, Frederic has just been released from his indenture to a band of pirates. Although the band attempts to raid and terrorize, they have a fault: They will spare anyone who says he's an orphan. Word of this spreads and consequently they are relatively unsuccessful bandits. An orphan himself, Frederic has been with them since a young age, and has had minimal exposure to the female gender. Now 21, Frederic is prepared to commit himself to the extermination of piracy, but before he can take on the task he meets a group of fair and hopelessly feminine sisters. One, named Mabel, catches his eye and he falls in love.

Suddenly, the pirates swoop in and attempt to capture the sisters, but it is apparent their infatuation with the ladies' beauty somewhat inhibits their normal boisterousness.

Before harm can come to anyone, the ladies' father, the Major-General, shows up. Having heard that the pirates have a soft spot in their hearts for orphans, he explains that he too is an orphan. The pirates fall for the trick and let them go.

The Major-General, his daughters and Frederic retreat to the family estate. Meanwhile, the Pirate King discovers that Frederic's indenture was to expire on his 21st birthday. However, Frederic was born on Feb. 29, a leap year, so he has really only had five birthdays. The pirates attempt to capture Frederic at the Major-General's estate, but the police come to the rescue. The zany, fun-loving spoof comes to an end as wedding bells ring for all.

According to "The World of Gilbert and Sullivan," this particular operetta owes its origin to Gilbert's previous writings. The plot depends on the fusion of two characteristic ideas. First, that a man is so completely at the mercy of his sense of duty, he will obey no matter what the cost. Secondly, that the 21st birthday of a person born in leap year on Feb. 29, does not occur until that person is 84 years old.

"The Pirates of Penzance" operetta by Britons Gilbert and Sullivan have been originally produced in New York. It was produced at the F. Theater in 1879 and didn't open in London until 1880.

"The Pirates of Penzance" about 38 members.

The role of Frederic is dou Clay Schnitker, senior in music. Honigs, junior in social sciences, will assume the role of Frederic's show and Schnitker's stage in Saturday's performance.

"Frederic is simple, not stupid, this longing to his sense of duty, like a Mark Hamill of Star Wars kid bound to this sense of duty," said.

Schnitker is no stranger to theater, having performed in the past four years.

Honigs explained that one of there is a double cast for Frederic is that the operetta singing is a real strain on the Honigs said he sees Frederic as innocent, naive and sincere. being a pirate is wrong, but if one, he's going to be the best.

"Frederic feels, 'I must do you.' He has a sense of duty before all," Honigs said.

Honigs considers acting a hobby, not his major course of study, enjoys it so much.

The Pirate King is portrayed by Thomas, graduate in music. King is clumsy, yet romantic, and likes to do things with his hands.

Thomas performed in "Pirates" at Tabor College in Kan., but portrayed a different Deni Good, graduate in the Major-General. The Major of 10 girls, all of whom are his. He has won medals in battle intelligent. The Major always to say and where to be, Good Good earned his undergrad in music, with a concentration in music. He has also been a professional Las Vegas, he said.

"If you're a performer, important to have dance, theatrical skills; you need all that."

"Mabel is the favorite daughter of the Major-General and always protect him. She is sweet and Three new K-State faculty members are contributing their talents to the production, Melissa Hatfield Riggs, Al Sheffield and Adrian Bryttan. All three joined the faculty in August of 1985.

Melissa Hatfield Riggs is the acting director for "The Pirates of Penzance." Riggs' directing credits include "The Maids," "The Woolgatherer" and "Footfalls."

The scenic designer is Al Sheffield. Sheffield has worked for Tibbits Opera Foundation in Coldwater, Mich., where he designed sets for such productions as "South Pacific" and "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas."

The orchestra is conducted by Adrian Bryttan. Bryttan is the conductor of the Kansas State Orchestra, along with being a faculty violinist. Bryttan has been a guest conductor for the Lynsenko Opera Company in Philadelphia and for the Chicago Opera Theater. He also started the Notre Dame Opera Theater at the University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Ind.

Lydia Aseneta is in charge of costuming and makeup for the operetta. Aseneta drew designs of the costumes needed for each character and sent them to a costume house in Ohio where some were custom made.

Students in Aseneta's costume and stage makeup classes are assisting the cast with costume fitting and stage makeup.

Tickets for "The Pirates of Penzance" are available at the Nichols Hall box office. The McCain Auditorium box office will also sell tickets the night of the performance.

BSU members discuss issues concerning buppies, racism

By LESLIE ALLEN
Collegian Reporter

The existence of buppies, black urban professionals, are one of many issues black students face on campus.

Seven members of Black Student Union attended a Big Eight Conference Feb. 7 through 9, at the University of Missouri, Columbia, where issues concerning black students were discussed.

"They talked about black urban professionals as being those people who, after they graduate, move to urban areas and leave their culture and society. They wear designer clothes, belong to all of the right clubs which is all OK, but remember where you came from, and try to help your race," said Andrea Shelton, senior in family life and child development.

The title of the session was "A Changing Role of Black Student Government, Buppies and Apathy," said Lenior Simons, senior in political science. The speaker was Stephen Sneed, dean of students at Lincoln University, Jefferson City, Mo.

"The speaker talked about buppies being so concerned with money and success that they were neglecting some of the issues that the black community is facing," Simons said.

Two of these issues are racism and poverty, Simons said.

"Once they get to that stage where they are financially stable, they forget about how they got started, or where they came from, or to come back and help others," said Crescentia Brown, junior in architecture.

That is not something expected of them, but it is something Sneed thinks they should do, Simons said.

"Because he said the line between where they are and where they are from is very thin, and they should realize that," she said.

One way to help other blacks is to go to different schools and "tell the students I made it, this is how I made it and this is what you need to do to make it," Shelton said.

A problem with buppies occurs when black children are patterned in a situation that does not allow them to learn about black history and the genealogy of their individual families, Shelton said.

"If a black child is raised in a predominantly white community, and if I didn't ask questions, or if my mother was not a civil rights activist, I would have never known where my ancestors came from because they don't teach that kind of stuff in history classes," Shelton said.

"They (parents) think that 'I've made it. I'm not going to let my children go through segregation. I'm going to isolate them from any of that,' but it hurts (the children) because when they get out on their own, they are made fun of, and they're wondering why," Shelton said.

Retention and the need for role models are other issues concerning blacks, Simons said.

"I can remember when this woman came up for summer enrollment, and she was surrounded by all these white people, and she got intimidated and went home, but that is not a problem for all blacks," she said.

"I feel we need to have blacks in some key positions (in the University) so blacks don't feel so isolated because isolation is a big problem," Simons said.

Brown said the transition from her home community of Topeka was not difficult "because I was used to seeing white people all of the time. In fact, the only time I saw black people was in my church."

"A lot of the black students here come from large cities, such as Kansas City, Detroit, New York and Chicago and they are used to city life, but this is an agriculture school, and they're (the white students) coming from the rural areas and small towns," Shelton said.

"So they may only have had only one or two black families in their town, and when you have one or two, the black family is most likely going to be white-oriented because it is living among white people. So when you come to school, the white people expect the blacks to act their way," Shelton said.

"When I try, not to forget that I'm black, but just be a person, I'm always faced with a racial remark or something that reminds me that there's no way they're going to let you fit in," Simons said.

Film Review

Film's point gets buried in morbidity

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

"The Hitcher" is the newest film to use that mainstay of American cinema — the unstoppable monster. In recent years "Jaws" made this villain popular and then "Halloween" turned the villain into human form. Now the villain has returned in the form of a hitchhiker.

The premise for "The Hitcher" is incredibly simple. A teen-ager, Jim Halsey (C. Thomas Howell), driving from Chicago to San Diego, picks up a hitchhiker, John Ryder (Rutger Hauer). Jim picks him up because he thinks having company will help keep him awake. He has already fallen asleep once and drifted off the road.

Once in the car, Ryder calmly tells Jim how he enjoys dismembering people. He pulls out his switchblade and waves it in front of Jim's face. Luckily, though, Jim is able to push Ryder out of the car. But then, what should Jim do next? Just take off and consider himself lucky? He knows Ryder will try thumbing another ride. Should Jim do something about it? There aren't any police stations around; he's on the wide open plains of Texas and far from any towns.

Giving Jim this moral decision to make gives the movie an intriguing twist. But the screenplay doesn't capitalize on this. It uses it for about five minutes and then tosses it away. From then on the movie degenerates into car wrecks and explosions.

The first 30 minutes of "The Hitcher" are positively eerie. Clouds roll in ominously and rain falls in sheets. But soon the filmmakers run out of ideas and they simply layer one crash on top of another. Eventually the screenplay does get back to the decision that Jim must make: Should he kill this man himself so no one else dies? But by that time Jim's reaction is anti-climactic.

While the film's screenplay lacks imagination, the direction of

BSU members discuss issues concerning buppies, racism

By LESLIE ALLEN
Collegian Reporter

The existence of buppies, black urban professionals, are one of many issues black students face on campus.

Seven members of Black Student Union attended a Big Eight Conference Feb. 7 through 9, at the University of Missouri, Columbia, where issues concerning black students were discussed.

"They talked about black urban professionals as being those people who, after they graduate, move to urban areas and leave their culture and society. They wear designer clothes, belong to all of the right clubs which is all OK, but remember where you came from, and try to help your race," said Andrea Shelton, senior in family life and child development.

The title of the session was "A Changing Role of Black Student Government, Buppies and Apathy," said Lenior Simons, senior in political science. The speaker was Stephen Sneed, dean of students at Lincoln University, Jefferson City, Mo.

"The speaker talked about buppies being so concerned with money and success that they were neglecting some of the issues that the black community is facing," Simons said.

Two of these issues are racism and poverty, Simons said.

"Once they get to that stage where they are financially stable, they forget about how they got started, or where they came from, or to come back and help others," said Crescentia Brown, junior in architecture.

That is not something expected of them, but it is something Sneed thinks they should do, Simons said.

"Because he said the line between where they are and where they are from is very thin, and they should realize that," she said.

One way to help other blacks is to go to different schools and "tell the students I made it, this is how I made it and this is what you need to do to make it," Shelton said.

A problem with buppies occurs when black children are patterned in a situation that does not allow them to learn about black history and the genealogy of their individual families, Shelton said.

"If a black child is raised in a predominantly white community, and if I didn't ask questions, or if my mother was not a civil rights activist, I would have never known where my ancestors came from because they don't teach that kind of stuff in history classes," Shelton said.

"They (parents) think that I've made it. I'm not going to let my children go through segregation. I'm going to isolate them from any of that," but it hurts (the children) because when they get out on their own, they are made fun of, and they're wondering why," Shelton said.

Retention and the need for role models are other issues concerning blacks, Simons said.

"I can remember when this woman came up for summer enrollment, and she was surrounded by all these white people, and she got intimidated and went home, but that is not a problem for all blacks," she said.

"I feel we need to have blacks in some key positions (in the University) so blacks don't feel so isolated because isolation is a big problem," Simons said.

Brown said the transition from her home community of Topeka was not difficult "because I was used to seeing white people all of the time. In fact, the only time I saw black people was in my church."

"A lot of the black students here come from large cities, such as Kansas City, Detroit, New York and Chicago and they are used to city life, but this is an agriculture school, and they're (the white students) coming from the rural areas and small towns," Shelton said.

"So they may only have had only one or two black families in their town, and when you have one or two, the black family is most likely going to be white-oriented because it is living among white people. So when you come to school, the white people expect the blacks to act their way," Shelton said.

"When I try, not to forget that I'm black, but just be a person, I'm always faced with a racial remark or something that reminds me that there's no way they're going to let you fit in," Simons said.

Senate elects 1986 chairwoman

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate elected Sally Traeger, junior in marketing, as senate chairwoman at its meeting Thursday night in the Union Big Eight room. Traeger replaces outgoing chairman Mark Jones, senior in management.

Gretchen Hagen, junior in history, was also nominated for the chairman position.

"One of my main goals is to help communicate with the students,"

Traeger said. "I want to see senators going out to the living groups. We need to get the off-campus students in to talk to us. We can do this through the communications committee, graduate council and SEA (Students for Educational Awareness)."

Senate also elected Martin Monto, junior in biology, as senate vice chairman. Wally Brockhoff, junior in agricultural economics, was the other vice chairman candidate.

"I would like to try to make groups coming to senate feel more comfortable," Monto said. "This can be a very intimidating body and I want to be a liaison, making people outside student government feel less alienated."

Susan Baird, junior in journalism and mass communications, was elected unanimously as the student senate representative to Faculty Senate.

In other business, senate also designated student interns for senate.

Oil taxes could hurt U.S. trade

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Raising taxes on imported oil would cost the average family up to $365 a year, penalize the poor, hurt key allies and damage the nation's trade balance, the Reagan administration told Congress on Thursday.

But the proposal should be kept alive in case it is needed to finance President Reagan's plan for overhauling the income tax system, J. Roger Mentz, acting assistant secretary of the treasury for tax policy, told the Senate Finance subcommittee on energy taxation.

After describing the oil tax as extremely regressive and estimating that for most families it would wipe out any benefit from the tax-revision plan, Mentz said, "The president has not ruled it out. We suggest you keep it on the table."

Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., chairman of the subcommittee, described the administration's position as "sitting on a fence with both ears to the ground."

The tax is being pushed by oil-state lawmakers to help a domestic oil industry being squeezed by plunging prices on the world market. Prices are dropping because Saudi Arabia is trying to whip other members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries into line, said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas.

"Are our memories so short that we're going to once again put ourselves at the mercy of OPEC?" asked Bentsen, recalling the oil embargo of the early 1970s.

Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., said a higher tax on imported oil would "place a safety net under the price of domestic oil that would also protect the financial system against the shock of further decreases in the price of oil." He noted that billions of dollars worth of loans to domestic producers are secured by the value of oil reserves — a value that declines with the world price of oil.

But Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, countered: "If national security, energy independence and bank safety and soundness are issues that need to be addressed, Congress can, and should, deal with these problems directly — not indirectly through an oil-import fee."

David Thomas Atchison, Manhattan, and Kathleen Pfister, senior in music theater, of the group Opening Night, perform a scene from "Brigadoon" during "The Music of Broadway: An Evening With Lerner and Loewe." The musical revue is performed Fridays and Saturdays through March 15 at Gregov's Dinner Theatre.

Traveling talent show to present musical hits

By MARIBETH GOTTSCHALK
Staff Writer

"Opening Night," a local group of amateur actors and actresses, will present "The Music of Broadway: An Evening With Lerner and Loewe." The traveling group is to perform every Friday and Saturday through March 15 at Gregov's Dinner Theatre, 2605 Stagg Hill Road. Dinner begins at 6:30 p.m. and the show will begin at 8 p.m.

Director and cast member Linda Haynes Uthoff said the group is a diversified bunch of people as far as talent is concerned.

"We have different types of talent in the group, with lots of theater and stage experience," she said.

Uthoff, who has appeared in many K-State and Manhattan Civic Theatre productions, including "La Traviata" and "My Fair Lady," said the cast has its own specialty of music they enjoy performing.

"Marcia (McFarland) enjoys singing jazz, I have sung opera, and Jeb (Bolan) does comedy, folk, blues, and plays the guitar," she said.

The performance at Gregov's includes scenes and music from lyricist Alan Jay Lerner and composer Frederick Loewe's hit shows, "Brigadoon," a romantic, Scottish fantasy; "Paint Your Wagon" set during the California Gold Rush; and the classic Broadway smash, "My Fair Lady."

Also included in the performance are "On A Clear Day," depicting Lerner's fascination of extrasensory perception; "Gigi," the story of a young French girl and how she falls in love, and "Camelot," the 1960

Broadway hit of King Arthur's Round Table.

Other members of the "Opening Night" cast are David Thomas Atchison, who studied music and voice at Fort Hays State University and K-State. He recently won the best actor award in the United States Army Forscom, "Festival of the Arts."

Jeb Bolan, a graduate of Manhattan High School, is a delightful performer, comedian and guitarist.

Paul Brown, who once taught music at Manhattan Middle School, is currently the underwriting manager for Farm Bureau Insurance in the Crop Insurance Division. Brown has performed in MCT productions and is the choir director for the First United Methodist Church, 612 Poyntz Ave.

Marcia McFarland, professor of extension, 4-H and youth programs, sings jazz in local night clubs and has worked with the Joe Utterback Trio in Kansas City, Wichita and San Francisco.

Finally, Kathleen Pfister, senior in music theater, has appeared in K-State productions of "Cabaret," "Godspell" and "The Buck Stops Here."

Uthoff said the group will also perform for special events in the surrounding Manhattan area. They hope to have some future performances featuring the "Gay '90s," Rodgers and Hammerstein numbers or perhaps more modern musicals such as "Cats" or "Evita."

"When you're starting out it's hard to get the word out...but we'll bring our own set and lighting. All we need is a piano, a place and a little time to set up."

House to vote on malpractice award limitations

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Spurning a compromise offered by Gov. John Carlin, the House Thursday advanced to a final vote today a bill overhauling the state's medical malpractice tort system, including placing a $1 million limit on total damages victims could collect in court.

The bill was advanced on an unrecorded voice vote after House members voted 49-74 against the Carlin compromise.

It would have removed the $1 million cap on damage awards but retained a $350,000 ceiling on non-economic damages, commonly known as pain and suffering damages. As the bill stands, it has a $250,000 cap on pain and suffering as well as the $1 million limit on total damages.

The measure is aimed at reducing premiums doctors pay for medical malpractice insurance. Those premiums have more than tripled in recent years, with some physicians threatening to leave Kansas or give up high-risk procedures such as delivering babies.

Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, who guided the bill through the House Judiciary Committee which he heads as chairman, said actuaries have reported the measure has the potential of lowering premiums 8 percent to 12 percent.

But that can't be accomplished without putting the $1 million ceiling on total damages, Knopp said, pinpointing the most controversial aspect of the legislation.

"If you eliminate caps, forget the bill," Knopp told the House during a 3½-hour debate Thursday. "Without caps you can't reduce premiums. We have to balance it. The cost of having everyone totally compensated is high premiums and potential loss of doctors."

However, Senate Democratic Leader Marvin Barkis, who offered the Carlin compromise, said the price was too high. "We're solving the problem on the backs of the most severely injured," Barkis said. "I believe premiums will go up even if we pass this."

Strength of the votes rejecting four amendments indicated the bill is likely to win approval Friday when it comes up for a final House roll call. It will take 63 votes to pass it, and each amendment offered had at least 71 votes against it by those who support the bill as the committee endorsed it.

However, those votes were not strong enough to override a gubernatorial veto, meaning the lawmakers may eventually have to reach accommodation with Carlin on the issue of caps. The governor has indicated he will veto a bill which sets limits on total damages a malpractice victim can collect.

Approval Friday would send the measure to the Senate, where it must go through another round of committee hearings and debate. Sen. Robert Frey, R-Liberal, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said his panel would hold hearings on it after March 12.

Barkis said the compromise on damage caps had been arrived at in discussions involving Carlin and Democratic legislators.

"We discussed the whole situation," Barkis said. "The governor said he could compromise on pain and suffering but not on compensation for total damages."

Mike Swenson, Carlin's press secretary, said the governor was encouraged by the 49 votes for the compromise, and the fact supporters of the $1 million cap fell 10 votes short of having the two-thirds majority required to override a veto in the House.

Frey said there is sentiment in the Senate for a compromise similar to the one proposed by Carlin and the House Democrats, but said he didn't know if there was enough support to get it adopted.

'Cats to face Nebraska; Coleman ineligible

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

If retiring K-State Coach Jack Hartman is going to win his last game (barring possible post-season play) at Ahearn Field House, he will have to do so without the services of star forward Norris Coleman.

Coleman, the team's leading scorer and rebounder, was declared ineligible for the remainder of the season because of a discrepancy in his high school transcript.

Coleman was averaging 21.9 points and 7.9 rebounds per game.

"We'll have to rally together and go out and give it a good team effort for the last home game," K-State forward Ben Mitchell said.

Nebraska was faced with a similar situation earlier this year with the loss of star center Dave Hoppen to a knee injury.

But the Cornhuskers were able to come back from Hoppen's loss and have won four Big Eight games since, including victories over Oklahoma and Missouri.

Mitchell said he hopes K-State can respond as well.

"I look at it like Nebraska losing Hoppen. He was their leading scorer and an integral part of their team. We'll just have to adjust well and play as a team."

K-State Coach Jack Hartman credits Nebraska Coach Moe Iba for the Cornhuskers' recovery.

"Yes, they've been somewhat of a surprise," Hartman said. "I think that is a tribute to Coach Iba and the job he's done."

Also lost to the Wildcats for the season is starting center Ron Meyer, who hyperextended his knee in Wednesday's 84-69 loss to Missouri. There is also a possibility Meyer may have torn ligaments.

"I could wake up Saturday with a brace for eight weeks or wake up and have nothing much be wrong," Meyer said.

Meyer underwent knee surgery while a high school senior at Campus High School in Haysville, but the current injury has nothing to do with the high school injury.

After playing well in a win over Oklahoma State and a loss to Kansas, K-State appeared to have turned the corner, only to suffer a 84-69 setback to Missouri at Columbia.

"We played a great first half (against Missouri)," Hartman said. "Of course, Missouri shot an unbelievable percentage — they made 22 of 28 shots. It was just one of those games. If you catch Missouri when they're playing well, they're as good as any team in the country."

Mitchell led K-State in scoring against Missouri with 18 points and has been one of the Wildcats' best players in recent games.

"He's (Mitchell) been playing well. He just made up his mind he was going to do it," Hartman said.

Hartman says he hasn't given the "last game" aspect much thought.

"I haven't really stopped to think about it. My thoughts are going to be with trying to get the basketball team ready," Hartman said.

With the injury to Meyer and the ineligibility of Coleman, Hartman, who has started a number of different lineups so far this season, will start yet another against Nebraska.

"We've never gotten our lineup set. That's not good," Hartman said.

GAME NOTES: Game time is set for 1:10 Saturday afternoon...A special presentation is scheduled for Hartman before the game...Hoppen's Nebraska jersey was retired in a ceremony prior to the Cornhuskers' win over Colorado Wednesday night...Iba owns a 6-6 career record against Hartman.

Track team to compete for league title

By DARIN RUSSELL
Sports Writer

Both the men's and women's track teams are picked to finish in the top four in the Big Eight Indoor Championships this weekend at the Devaney Sports Center in Lincoln, Neb.

Big Eight coaches picked the women's team to finish second and the men's team to finish fourth in the meet, which is scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. Friday.

Head Coach Steve Miller views the conference meet as the culmination of the indoor season rather than the National Collegiate Athletic Association Indoor Championships scheduled for March 14 and 15 in Oklahoma City.

"I really view the Big Eight meet as the highlight of our season. It is what we are working toward," Miller said. "The NCAA's (Championship meet) are kind of a gift. I think that most would agree that nationals is not a real team competition. The Big Eight meet is what I consider the true test of a team."

The women are picked to finish second behind Nebraska. Miller said he agrees the Cornhuskers look tough.

"We have an outside chance of beating the Huskers. Although it truly is a longshot, it is a possibility," Miller said. "Our goal is to finish no worse than second and to score at least 100 points. If we accomplish that, we will all be pleased."

"I feel like our women's team is really solid right now. We don't have any injuries and everyone is performing well," he said. "I feel like we are at 100 percent."

Last year at the Big Eight Indoor, Rita Graves won the high jump and Jacques Struckhoff won the two-mile run. Miller is counting on Graves in the high jump and Struckhoff in the two-mile and three-mile to be competitors for individual championships.

Miller also counts on Chris Vanatta in the two- and three-mile runs, Anne Stadler in the mile and 1,000-yard run and Michelle Maxey in the 600-yard run to be competitors for individual championships this weekend.

The men's team is picked fourth behind Nebraska, Iowa State and Oklahoma State. The men's hopes for individual championships will center on Kenny Harrison, who is the returning champion in the long jump and the triple jump, and Brad Speer, who is entered in the high jump.

Sprinter Melran Leach will see limited action this weekend after suffering a hamstring injury at last weekend's Kansas State Metric Meet. Leach will be entered in the 440-yard dash, but will scratch from the 300- and 60-yard dashes, which have been his strongest events this season.

Miller said the men's team hasn't shown the consistency he had expected this season.

"I feel like we are capable. I'm just not that confident," Miller said. "I would really like to see our men finish third."

There may be some added incentive for the Wildcat teams as this will be the last time Miller will coach at the Big Eight Indoor Championships.

"There is a very, very small degree of melancholy at the thought of this being my last Big Eight Indoor. I always wondered what it would feel like to leave coaching and, as it comes nearer, I find it hasn't affected me that much," Miller said. "I have been very happy and contented in my decision to leave coaching. I don't feel like it will be a factor this weekend."

Miller said he believes Nebraska is a good place to compete.

"It is a great track," Miller said. "They always have great crowds and we always look forward to competing there."

K-State to meet Nebraska women

By DARAN NEUSCHAFER
Sports Writer

K-State's women's basketball team will conclude its regular season schedule Saturday afternoon, entertaining Nebraska in Ahearn Field House.

The Lady Cats will be looking to clinch a sixth place finish in the Big Eight Conference with a win over the Cornhuskers. A Nebraska win would give the Cornhuskers sixth place by virtue of having beaten K-State twice during the regular season. Nebraska defeated the Lady Cats, 73-70, in Lincoln, Neb., on Feb. 5.

K-State brings a 14-12 overall and 5-8 conference record into the game. Nebraska stands at 11-15 and 4-9 in the Big Eight.

Lady Cat Coach Matilda Mossman, for one of the few times this season, likes the way her team matches up against the opposition. Mossman even thinks K-State has a slight advantage in that area.

"Size-wise, we have the advantage," Mossman said. "And for once, we are kind of hoping for a physical type of game. Before, we have tried to stay out of those types of games, but I think we would have a definite advantage in a physical game."

Nebraska relies heavily on the outside shooting of starting guards Maurice Ivy and Amy Stephens. The backcourt duo is averaging over 31 points per game with Ivy leading the team with a 19.5 point average.

"She (Ivy) shoots from everywhere," Mossman said. "She will take the most shots of anyone on the team without a doubt. But she can score...we found that out when we played them up there (Lincoln)."

Ivy led all scorers in that Cornhusker victory with 24 points, while center Angie Miller added 22.

Ivy, a 5-foot-9 sophomore, is also leading the team in rebounding, averaging nine per game.

The game is an important one for the Lady Cats in that a sixth place finish in the standings would put K-State in a slightly more favorable position come post-season tournament time.

A K-State victory, combined with a Kansas win over Iowa State tomorrow would match the two Kansas schools together for a first round game in the tournament.

Mossman said that of all of the possibilities that remain with the pairings for the tournament, she favors another rematch with KU, which has defeated K-State in both of their earlier games this year.

"I would just as soon play KU again," Mossman said. "It would make things a lot easier on us as far as traveling and time are concerned."

"Besides, we would have something to play for if we played KU, since we haven't beaten them this year. But we just have to beat Nebraska to ensure a sixth place finish."

GAME NOTES: The women's game will follow the men's game. Game time is approximately 3:30 p.m., and admission is free...The game will be broadcast live, beginning at 3 p.m. by WIBW (580 AM)...First round contests for the Big Eight Post-Season Tournament will be played on Tuesday night at designated campus sites. The tournament semifinals and finals will be played at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., March 6 and 8.

Briefly in Sports

Thomas regains eligibility

K-State Athletic Director Larry Travis took the law into his own hands last week and it has paid off.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association told Travis over the phone Lady Cat basketball player Carlisa Thomas would be eligible pending some further investigation to play despite having played outside "organized" competition over the summer.

Travis decided it would be best to sit Thomas on the bench until K-State received the final word from the NCAA. It turned out to be a smart decision. When the NCAA notified Travis with its official decision, Thomas had been ruled ineligible.

"They reversed their decision. They told us one thing on the phone and then they went on to higher ground (authorities)," Travis said.

The NCAA decided, however, that Travis had penalized Thomas enough for her illegal "participation" by making her sit out when the Lady Cats played Kansas last Saturday.

Baseball team to host Friends

The K-State baseball team will open its home schedule Saturday at Frank Meyers Field by hosting Friends University. The first game of the double header will begin at 1 p.m.

Sunday K-State will host Northwestern Oklahoma at Meyers Field, first pitch will also be at 1 p.m.

K-State opened its season on the road last week by defeating No. 18 Arkansas and taking three-out-of-four from Lamar University.

Brewers' clubhouse explodes

By The Associated Press

CHANDLER, Ariz. — A natural gas explosion sent a ball of flame through the Milwaukee Brewers' new spring training clubhouse Thursday, injuring 10 people including Manager George Bamberger and General Manager Harry Dalton.

Bamberger, Dalton and others were hurt trying to douse the burning clothes of third base coach Tony Muser and Jeff Sutton, a plumber.

Sutton and Muser were seriously burned.

Sports Letter

Saying farewell

Sports Editor,

I would like to encourage everyone to attend the last home basketball game of the season. K-State will play Nebraska on Saturday at 1 p.m. This will be Jack Hartman's last game as a coach in Ahearn Field House.

Last week, in Allen Field House, I was quite impressed as the standing-room-only Kansas crowd honored Coach Hartman with gifts and a very respectful standing ovation.

Even though K-State does not have a nationally ranked team this season, Jack Hartman has given K-State fans many things to cheer about over the past several years.

It would be sad to see him retire to a less-than-full Ahearn Field House this Saturday. I strongly urge your presence and support at the game. Thank you.

Patients to receive transportation to Topeka hospitals for treatment

By The Collegian Staff

Patients in the Manhattan area requiring radiation therapy treatments now have an easier method of transportation to Topeka.

Because of the need for treatments to be spread over several days or weeks at a time, and the lack of similar medical facilities in Manhattan, patients have had trouble with transportation needs.

In order to find a solution to patient's needs, St. Francis Hospital and Medical Center in Topeka applied to the Kansas Department of Transportation in 1984 for a van to be used to transport such patients. St. Francis received its van, made available through the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964, in late December.

The first phase of the transportation project will focus on the needs of patients in the Manhattan and Junction City areas.

The van's point of origination will be in Junction City, proceeding to Manhattan, Wamego and St. Marys, with a destination point of St. Francis in Topeka.

The service is to begin March 3, with John Washburne, a former ambulance driver and current emergency medical technician doing the driving.

The pickup point for the Manhattan area will be The St. Mary Hospital, 1823 College Ave., with a tentative time of 8:40 a.m.

Other pickup locations and times are Junction City — Geary County Hospital at 8 a.m. and The Wamego City Hospital, 9:20 a.m. St. Francis spokesman Don Abdallah said a site for St. Marys had not been selected as of Thursday afternoon.

Persons desiring more information on the service are urged to contact Abdallah or Henriette Area at 1-800-332-0041.

cedure at the time of Coleman's graduation — Coleman's GPA fell below the 2.0 eligibility requirement. "We didn't question a certified transcript — we had no reason to question it," Travis said. Since Coleman's graduation, the rules for determining grade point averages for Paxton have been changed allow for an eight-semester GPA to be used. Coleman said he thought the decision would be harder to take emotionally than it was, but he had prepared himself for it. "I'm kind of glad it's over. They (NCAA) felt it was the right thing to do. I'll probably stick it out (at K-State). I hope the team fares well. Who's to say it was the right decision?" Coleman said. "We are very disappointed with this ruling," Travis said. "We feel Kansas State acted in good faith in certifying Coleman's eligibility to participate in our basketball program. We feel we have cooperated in every manner possible to give the NCAA the information to make a fair and just decision. Coleman said he thought the success he has had in the Big Eight was one of the reasons he has been so closely scrutinized. If he hadn't been older and from the Army, Coleman said he believes no one would have spent the time investigating his background. "I took the Big Eight by storm. It wasn't like a juco or high school player — everybody wanted to know where I was from. I've enjoyed the year and the fans' support," Coleman said. Despite his not being able to play basketball for the rest of the year, Coleman said he is at K-State for more than just basketball. "I want to continue my education," he said. Coleman said he plans to remain at K-State if the NCAA decides he has any remaining eligibility and will support the team through the remainder of the season. "If they take away all of my collegiate eligibility, I won't have any choice (but declare himself eligible for the National Basketball Association draft). I don't think I'm ready. If I can't make it there, there is always Europe and the CBA (Continental Basketball Association)," Coleman said. Travis said K-State will appeal the ruling to the NCAA, but until then has no other choice than to abide by the ruling. "We will appeal the ruling — we have that right," Travis said. "We won't play someone the NCAA declared ineligible for financial aid." Travis is planning on Coleman being eligible for next season because he is making adequate grades at K-State. "If he has a 2.0 (grade point) average — and he has a 2.66 — he will be eligible for aid next year. We figure he'll have three years left. They (NCAA) could take eligibility away from him, though," Travis said. Travis said the story which appeared last Saturday in the Kansas City Times questioning Coleman's participation on an Army post team in Schweinfurt, West Germany, was lacking some information. Coleman's participation on the teams in West Germany would have allegedly exhausted his first semester eligibility. After Thursday's ruling however, Travis said Coleman's playing in West Germany was no longer an issue. Coleman has been K-State's leading scorer and rebounder for most of the season, averaging 21.9 points and 7.9 rebounds per game. Coleman said there was nothing he could do now except take the decision in stride and deal with it. "Life goes on — it has its ups and downs. This is one of those downs."

Architecture students design memorial plaza

By KELLY HODGE Collegian Reporter

It is supposed to be a nice, outside place to sit between classes, to have lunch or meet with a friend. The "Bayer Memorial Geology Plaza" is a proposal going through the approval process at the University, said G.V. Salts, fifth-year senior in architecture and student member of the Advisory Committee on Campus Development. The proposed location for the geology plaza is northeast of Thompson Hall, Salts said. The plaza will be used as a focal point to draw people into Thompson and may also be used for a meeting place, Salts said. Some classroom instruction may also take place on the plaza. The proposed plaza will be constructed around a large Prairie Allen Tree (Dutch Elm) northeast of Thompson, he said. Three or four types of Kansas limestone will surround the tree in the shape of the state of Kansas. The limestone will be donated by the Bayer Stone Company of St. Marys. The Bayers are donating the stone as a memorial for their parents, Salts said. The Bayer family is paying for construction of the plaza. The K-State Grounds Department will be in charge of maintenance, Salts said. The estimated cost of the construction by the Bayers is $50,000. The proposed construction date for the plaza is this spring with the completion date set for fall, Salts said. James Underwood Jr., professor of geology, originally proposed the idea for the plaza, said Rich Busch, assistant professor of geology. Underwood has been working on this project since 1982. The aim of the proposal is to "turn students onto science a little more," Busch said, and should be of interest to students who are nonscientists as well. He said the "whole thing is made out of rock types — building materials — from Kansas" and will be a possible "teaching tool" as well. The plaza was designed last year by a class of juniors in landscape architecture under the instruction of Patrick Mooney, temporary assistant professor of landscape architecture. Twenty designs were submitted by the students, Mooney said, and he combined three of the students' preliminary designs into a semifinal design. Some small changes will still need to be made, he said. Mooney gives most of the credit for this project to Underwood. "He's piloted the idea through," Mooney said. "Without him the idea would have faded." The plaza will be open to everyone. "It will give people a place to go that's sheltered and will be a good place to eat lunch as long as people take care of it. It would give people a good getaway place," Busch said. "I think it's an excellent idea." Busch said that "overall everyone has seemed positive about the proposal."

Aquino

Saturday by a civilian-military rebellion. Hundreds of thousands of Filipinos poured into the streets in a mass demonstration of support for the rebels that its leaders called "people power." Washington insisted that Marcos step down in a peaceful transfer of power and, on Tuesday night, American helicopters took him and his entourage to Clark Air Base and the flight to Hawaii. Member's of the Cabinet announced by Aquino on Wednesday assumed their posts Thursday, meeting with their predecessors and staff. Aquino's executive secretary, Joker Arroyo, ordered heads of government offices to preserve all records and make inventories of their assets and finances. A government announcement said he issued the directive in response to reports of "deliberate destruction and pilferage" of records at several ministries and agencies. Among them were Human Settlements, a heavily funded ministry headed by Imelda Marcos, the former president's wife; the Government Corporate Counsel; and a gambling regulatory board. The Marcoses often were accused of corruption and transferring public funds abroad. Aquino's official spokesman, Rene Saguisag, told a news conference that a five-member committee was reviewing lists of political prisoners and decisions on release were being made on a case-to-case basis. He said the committee would meet again Saturday, and "we would hope to be able to announce by then the release of maybe hundreds of political detainees." Saguisag is a lawyer who, with Arroyo and several human rights groups, led a campaign under the Marcos government for release of prisoners. Former Sen. Jovito Salonga is chairman of the committee, which includes Saguisag, Arroyo, Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, the armed forces commander. Enrile and Ramos led the rebellion that precipitated Marcos' fall. Enrile also was defense minister in the Marcos government, and Ramos was deputy commander of the armed forces. Saguisag said the military showed "very strong resistance" to releasing some prisoners, but had not defied the supremacy of civilian authority. He did not name the prisoners in question, but they presumably include Jose Maria Sison, former chairman of the outlawed Communist Party of the Philippines, and Bernabe Buscayno, commander of the party's military arm, the New People's Army. Both were captured in 1977. The Philippine communist insurgency has been growing, and the United States had urged Marcos to reorganize the military to fight it more effectively. One obstacle to that was Gen. Fabian C. Ver, the former military commander, who fled with Marcos. Not much guerrilla activity has been reported since the disputed election. Aquino said Wednesday she would seek a cease-fire with the New People's Army.

they regularly deal with the issue and are charged with (upholding) the statute," he said. "But the (open meetings) law is very unclear." Carpenter said he is "certainly glad the meetings are open because I think they were doing a disservice by keeping them closed. It's a matter of extreme public interest, and there shouldn't be anything to hide." The intent in filing the complaint, Adams said, was to get a ruling from the attorney general as to whether advisory committees are subject to the act. "You can choose to be informed or choose not to be informed, but the point is, with an open meeting, the public has that choice," Adams said. "It just amazes me that here we are at a publicly funded institution and there are people on this campus who are determined to make sure the public's business is not conducted in public."

the opinion." Miller said this suggestion is "under review at the present time." The three complainants said they do not plan to take further legal action against the committee because the members have cooperated in keeping the meetings open since the complaint was filed. "I'm very pleased with (the opinion), because it is very hard to get into meetings sometimes," Saylor said. "And while I may not benefit from all these meetings being open from now on, I think it will be very beneficial for beginning journalism students who often times aren't familiar with the open meetings law to know how far they can go with it. "Ensuring that these students don't have to go through the time-consuming process of getting an attorney general's decision is the greatest benefit I see from it," she said. Seaton said he thought it was "interesting" that Southard wrote the letter rather than Attorney General Robert Stephan. However, Southard said he is speaking for Stephan. "Everything that I do has to be approved by Bob first. It was discussed with him and he gave his approval," Southard said. "That's our standard operating procedure. I am speaking for the attorney general. I wrote the letter because I was responsible for the investigation." Seaton said although he "wasn't surprised" with the decision, he's "not 100 percent sure" it is correct. "I respect his opinion, and I realize direct contribution of up to 2 percentage points. "I urge all agriculture lenders to participate. This program should strengthen their agriculture portfolios and give a much-needed boost to our farm economy," he said. In 1985, bank failures in the state reached an all-time high — 13, placing Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska in a three-way tie for the most bank failures in the country. That is also as many bank failures as Kansas had in the previous decade. The problems of farm bankers — lenders who have at least 25 percent of their loans to farmers — are made up of the same list of woes that beset all of agriculture. Land values, the collateral holding up most agriculture loans, plunged faster last year than in the three previous years. Farm exports declined further, and commodity prices dropped, Naylor said. He said the sour rural economy is geographically oriented in the Midwest and that Kansas faces as much economic stress as any state. "Eighty to 90 percent of farmers are stable and strong. It's the 9.9 percent of operators who have heavy debt," he said. "They have had a negative cash flow in one of the three past years and carry 45 percent of the total agriculture debt." The debt-ridden farmers, who have little or no equity left in their operations, should be supported by the federal government and banking industry, Naylor said. "We must realize that there are some areas and some individuals we simply cannot help. My heart goes out to those people. But they are not alone. Many of us encouraged them to take on more debt than they should have. We all share in that responsibility." Naylor, 47, a native of Mulvane and a 1961 graduate of the University of Kansas, has served since May 1981 as undersecretary for small community and rural development programs in the USDA. Duane Acker, who plans to step down as president of K-State at the end of June, has been mentioned as a possible successor to Lyng in the USDA's No. 2 job — deputy secretary of agriculture. Also mentioned is Rep. Cooper Evans, an Iowa Republican. Naylor declined to comment on the search for a deputy secretary. Acker was in Washington, D.C., for meetings on Thursday and did not attend the bankers' meeting.

Swedish prime minister kept under surveillance by assassin, police say

By The Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — The man who killed Prime Minister Olof Palme apparently had him under surveillance for some time before he shot him with a powerful American-made revolver, police said Sunday.

Police Commissioner Hans Holmer told reporters that two bullets recovered at the scene of the late Friday night shooting, a downtown sidewalk, were fashioned from an unusual combination of metals and may have been handmade.

Police said this could make it harder to track down the source of the bullets.

Sweden's two-day-old caretaker government meanwhile held its first session and discussed arrangements for the funeral of Social Democratic leader Palme, set for March 15.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Lars Loennback said the funeral would be closed to the public, but "many foreign guests" would be invited. Palme, 59, was serving his fourth term as prime minister and was regarded as a top Western European spokesman on disarmament and socialist causes.

Social Minister Gertrud Sigurdson said there would be no official declaration of national mourning, for which Sweden has no precedent.

Sigurdson, speaking with Swedish television after the two-hour government session, said there was no need for an official declaration.

"The spontaneous reaction of mourning, how people reacted, was correct," she said.

Palme was shot once in the back while walking with his wife, Lisbet, 55, after they attended a movie. He was pronounced dead at 12:06 a.m. Saturday, less than an hour later, on a hospital operating table. Lisbet Palme was grazed by a bullet and slightly wounded.

Police had said Saturday they believed the assassin fired only one bullet, but on Sunday they reported finding a second bullet. They said one grazed Lisbet Palme and the other may have been the one that killed the prime minister.

Holmer told a news conference the couple

Area legislators uncertain of Gramm-Rudman's effect

By TOM SCHULTES
Business/Government Editor

Although the well-publicized Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction act fell Saturday, area legislators see little they can do — or say — in specific terms.

Sen. Merrill Werts, R-Junction City, told participants at the annual legislative brunch of the Manhattan-Riley County chapter of the League of Women Voters that legislators are "not quite sure of what (the state) will need in the way of finance."

He said this uncertainty, along with the actual impact of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, makes it difficult to assess the state's needs.

One proposal, submitted by Gov. John Carlin, would replace funds taken away by the federal legislation by increasing state sales tax rates 1 cent on the dollar.

During the meeting Saturday, Werts said the complicated budget process requires lawmakers to determine "the level of expenditures we think we can live with...and then find the funding."

He estimated state sales tax rates may have to increase 3 percent to 3½ percent "to provide basic, needed state services," if proposals to eliminate food items from sales tax are enacted.

Werts said dropping food items from taxation would result in a loss of $80 million to $90 million annually in state revenues. He said these losses would have to be added to any reductions from federal levels to determine tax increase percentages.

In a detailing of revenues, Werts said the state receives about 40 percent of its funds from sales taxes and 40 percent from income taxes. He said the remaining 20 percent is derived from various special taxes, such as excise taxes.

Werts said economic development authorities are warning legislators that "this is not the time to tamper with income tax rates," due to negative effects on businesses wanting to locate in the state.

Other options for raising revenues include

Signing for Jack

Patti Klenda, sophomore in interior design, and Connie Carriker, senior in graphic design, sign a sheet Saturday thanking Jack Hartman for his 16 years of coaching the Wildcats. Presidential search group picks finalists

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

The Presidential Search Committee, after nearly six months of work, selected the finalists for the University presidency this weekend and will submit the names to the Board of Regents this week, the committee chairman said Sunday.

Chairman Jerome Frieman said the committee made its final selections following a "good open discussion" which provided a "great consensus in terms of the choices."

Frieman declined to identify the finalists, but said the committee is confident each would be an outstanding president.

"I am pleased the committee was able to complete the task within the deadline given — and I think I can speak for the entire committee when I say that we're all looking forward with anticipation to the naming of the next president," he said.

The regents instructed the committee on Oct. 7 to forward to the board a list of three to five finalists by April 1. The regents will interview the finalists and make the final selection this month.

Frieman, associate professor of psychology, said the committee had planned to interview all of the candidates Feb. 22-25, but elected to convene for a final session on Sunday. The delay prevented the committee from finishing its work by a self-imposed Saturday deadline.

Frieman said some, but not all, of the eight semifinalists for the $92,000-a-year post were contacted following the committee's meeting Sunday in Topeka. The names of the finalists will not be made public by the committee or the regents, he said.

"Not all of them have been notified (about the committee's decision)," he said. "I'm going to communicate to the board the results of the committee's work. There are no plans to release names."

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the regents, said last month the regents would be meeting in closed session on March 21 and 22 at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City to interview finalists for the presidency. The regents will not alter its schedule, Frieman said.

President Duane Acker, 54, will leave the University June 30, bringing his 11-year term to an end.

On Feb. 8, the Wichita Eagle-Beacon said the field had been narrowed to nine men. Ten days later, John Slaughter, chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park and

Shultz equates rebels with non-violent acts

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George Shultz on Sunday equated anti-government rebels in Nicaragua with the Philippine non-violent opposition movement headed by now-President Corazon Aquino.

In the Philippines, Shultz said, "the forces of democracy were able to rally, organize, compete for, and eventually win power peacefully, despite the flawed election, because it was, at bottom, a pluralistic democratic political system."

Aquino was proclaimed president last week by the military leaders who broke with Marcos and demanded he step down.

"In Nicaragua, once the communist regime consolidates its power, the forces of democracy will have no such hope," the secretary continued, in remarks prepared for delivery Monday to a Veterans of Foreign Wars audience here. The State Department released the text Sunday.

Shultz argued for congressional approval of the administration's request for $100 million in aid to the Nicaragua rebels, known as Contras.

"Military help for the democratic resistance will give the Nicaraguan communists an incentive to negotiate seriously,"

Shultz said, contending that Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government has been the principal obstacle to mediating efforts by other Latin nations.

The administration is requesting $70 million in military aid for the CIA-organized Contras, and another $30 million for logistical, non-lethal aid over an 18-month period.

Shultz' speech Monday helped kick off an administration campaign to win support for the aid request.

Shultz said since the Sandinistas overthrew dictator Anastasio Somoza Debayle in 1979, "the strategic threat posed by the Nicaraguan communists has grown steadily" with "some 200 Soviet advisers, some 7,500 Cubans, and assorted personnel from East Germany, Bulgaria, Libya and the Palestine Liberation Organization."

Shultz, quoting Sandinista defector Alvaro Baldizon, charged Nicaraguan Interior Minister Tomas Borge with cocaine smuggling, and also said the Sandinistas participated in PLO hijackings and in an attack on the Colombian palace of justice by leftist guerrillas last year.

The Nicaraguan government has categorically denied those charges.

Aquino revokes no-charge detainment

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — President Corazon Aquino on Sunday abolished the government's power to detain people without charge, a practice her ousted predecessor used in an attempt to quell a growing communist insurgency.

She told more than 1 million cheering Filipinos at an outdoor rally that the practice was "not warranted" and had helped rather than hindered the guerrillas.

Aquino also said Sunday that all but four of 484 political prisoners incarcerated under Marcos "have been released or are in the process of being released," and the remaining ones will have their cases reviewed this week.

The four are Jose Maria Sison, 47, suspected of being the former leader of the outlawed Communist Party of the Philippines, and three others accused of roles in the insurgency.

Top military officers objected to their being freed without further investigation.

Aquino has ruled out any attempt to extradite Ferdinand E. Marcos, forced into exile last Wednesday in a nearly bloodless "people power" revolution, for any illegal acts committed during his 20 years as president.

But she said on Sunday that did not mean that those who committed serious crimes during his regime would escape punishment.

"Magnanimity does not mean an absence of justice," the president said. "We are gathering evidence and will set up the government structure that will try those who have committed grave crimes against the people, like human rights abuses and stealing."

Aquino ran against Marcos in a Feb. 7 presidential election. The National Assembly, dominated by Marcos' New Society Movement party, declared him winner Feb. 15, although foreign observers cited massive ballot fraud.

New Society scheduled a meeting Monday at which it was expected to nullify the assembly's proclamation declaring Marcos the winner.

The public gathering Sunday in bayside Rizal park was the largest since the 1983 funeral of Benigno Aquino, slain husband of Aquino, which attracted nearly 2 million people.

Benigno Aquino was considered

Marcos' strongest opponent for the presidency when he was shot and killed Aug. 21, 1983, at Manila airport. Aquino has repeatedly called Marcos her "No. 1 suspect" in the shooting.

Sunday's rally began with a "thanksgiving" Mass celebrated by Cardinal Jaime Sin, Roman Catholic archbishop of Manila, who joined Aquino in warning that Marcos' flight to Hawaii did not end the threat to democracy.

"There are those who want to slide back into the old and corrupt ways, those who plan to regroup the forces of the dictatorship," Sin told the crowd, estimated by police at over 1 million.

Aquino said the situation, "while stable, is not totally under control yet."

Moving U.S. bases could cost over $8 billion

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon estimates relocation of the two huge U.S. military bases in the Philippines would cost upwards of $8 billion and put American military forces a long distance from potential hot spots, sources say.

A classified report containing the estimate is to be sent to Congress on Monday, less than a week after the fall of Ferdinand Marcos and the installation of Corazon Aquino as president of the longtime U.S. ally.

The Philippines is home to Subic Bay Naval Station and Clark Air Base, the largest American bases outside the United States. The leases on those bases run out in 1991 and Aquino has refused to say whether she will let them stay.

The Pentagon report says that if those two bases are lost, the most stable potential spots to relocate would be Guam and Tinian islands, according to the sources, who spoke only on the condition they not be identified.

Both islands are under the control of the United States and are already home to U.S. military installations.

"There are other places you could move the U.S. bases to, like Japan or Australia, but you have the same potential problem there as in the Philippines — you don't know if we'll be welcome down the road," explained one source.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, while declining to discuss contents of the report, told reporters Sunday after a television taping that the United States is optimistic about the future of its bases after 1991.

"It's very important to the Philippines, it's very important for us, so we want to keep them there just as long as we can, and things look very favorable," he said.

The report also outlines ways to improve the security at Clark and Subic, which has been subject of Capitol Hill criticism in recent months, the sources said.

Clark and Subic are the main U.S. bases in the western Pacific and Indian Ocean area.

At his last news conference, President Reagan said, "one cannot minimize the importance of those bases, not only to us, but the western world and certainly to the Philippines themselves."

Both bases would be difficult to replace, partly because of their sheer size. Clark sits on 131,000 acres while Subic is within a 36,000-acre district.

Gunman kills Palestinian mayor

NABLUS, Occupied West Bank — A moderate Palestinian recently appointed by Israel as mayor of Nablus, the West Bank's largest city, was fatally shot 30 yards from City Hall on Sunday as he walked to work, authorities said.

The Israeli said the assassin escaped into a crowded market.

The killing of Mayor Zafer al-Masri was condemned by both moderate Arabs and Israelis as a setback to Middle East peace efforts.

Two Syrian-backed Palestinian factions that reject a negotiated settlement with Israel claimed responsibility.

Al-Masri, 44, known for his pro-Jordanian views, was the only Arab so far to accept Israeli appointment as a mayor in the West Bank, which Israel captured from Jordan during the 1967 Arab-Israeli War.

He took over from an Israeli military officer as head of Nablus, a city of 100,000 people, on Dec. 19 with the tacit support of Jordan's King Hussein and of Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Al-Masri was shot at 8 a.m. as he approached the front door of City Hall. Authorities said he died a short time later in a hospital.

An Israeli army officer, who insisted on anonymity, said al-Masri was shot twice in the chest and once in the thigh with a 7.65mm pistol. The army first said he was shot in the back.

The Israeli army imposed a curfew that was expected to stay in force until the funeral Monday. Black flags were hung from City Hall.

Britain ends links with Australia

CANBERRA, Australia — Queen Elizabeth II signed a proclamation Sunday severing Australia's last remaining constitutional links with Britain.

Less than two hours after arriving from New Zealand, the queen signed a royal assent to the Australia Act which ends all legislative, judicial and executive ties between the two countries.

The queen, however, retains her ceremonial position as queen of Australia.

She signed the proclamation in a ceremony at Government House and presented Prime Minister Bob Hawke with a copy of a similar bill enacted recently by the British parliament. Both acts take effect Monday.

The signing was the first official function of a 12-day Australian tour by the queen and her husband, Prince Philip.

Attorney General Lionel Bowen said the acts "reflect Australia's status as an independent and sovereign nation."

Bush to lecture at Missouri college

FULTON, Mo. — Forty years ago, British statesman Winston Churchill came to this small mid-America town and warned the world against Soviet domination, and his phrase "Iron Curtain" entered the English language.

"A shadow has fallen upon the scene so lately lighted by the Allied victory. ... From Stettin in the Baltic to Trieste in the Adriatic, an Iron Curtain has descended across the continent," the former British prime minister told a Westminster College audience on March 5, 1946.

Because the leaders of this small liberal arts college had the courage to invite such a world figure in 1946, the school has enjoyed a tradition of renowned speakers for four decades.

On Wednesday, Vice President George Bush will give the 41st lecture in a series in which former presidents, ambassadors and Nobel Prize winners have presented their views on international problems.

Churchill's Iron Curtain address was the most prestigious in the John Findley Green Foundation Series, established in 1936 in memory of a Westminster alumnus.

"Churchill put an imprint on it," said Warren Hollrah, director of Westminster's Churchill museum, which attracts an estimated 16,000 visitors a year.

Only about 300 students were enrolled at Westminster when Churchill came here, Hollrah said, and Fulton wasn't exactly the platform world leaders would choose for a major speech.

But Westminster's president, Franc McCluer, suggested taking a chance on inviting Churchill, then 71, and he accepted.

Police arrest teen-ager for murder

TOPEKA — A juvenile detention hearing was scheduled Monday for a teen-ager apprehended in connection with the death of an 86-year-old Topeka man found shot to death Friday behind his cutlery shop.

Topeka Police Lt. Bud Brooks said the 16-year-old was being held at the Topeka Youth Center following his arrest about 11:30 p.m. Saturday. The arrest was made after police received a tip from a person who called a crime information line.

Police said Cyrus Cohen of Topeka had been shot once with a small-caliber gun in the back of the head.

Train passengers solve murder case

ESSEX, Conn. — A passenger was rubbed out Saturday aboard the Essex Express but everyone else had a jolly good time.

Some witnesses thought the killer was the priest, others thought it was the Italian widow or the British diplomat.

The three were among eight character actors who staged an Agatha Christie-type murder mystery for the other passengers who paid $100 apiece for the entertainment and a chance to solve the crime.

Hotel mystery weekends have been staged around the country for some months now, but Valley Railroad Co. officials said Saturday's fantasy marked the first time such an event has been held aboard a train in Connecticut.

The murder mystery was the work of Chris Warren, a 46-year-old Middletown High School teacher and part-time radio personality. Warren wrote, produced and acted in the play, which was staged by a group he founded in his hometown of East Hampton in January.

Defense minister refuses presidency

LOS ANGELES — Philippine defense minister Juan Ponce Enrile says he refused when President Ferdinand Marcos urged him last month to seize power during the swell of popular support for Corazon Aquino.

Enrile, saying the military should be "absolutely subservient" to the civilian government, said he also rejected the urgings of his own staff who wanted to "hit the palace" while Marcos was in power, opting instead for a bloodless revolt that paved the way for Aquino's government.

"If I wanted the power or the presidency, it was being handed to me on a silver platter," Enrile said Saturday in Manila.

Enrile, 62, said at the peak of the popular uprising in support of Aquino, who charged that Marcos had stolen the presidential election from her, "Marcos asked me to take over through some sort of junta and forget about Mrs. Aquino."

The opinions of his children were the final force that led him to revolt against Marcos, Enrile said.

His son, Juan Jr., said in a letter that arrived three days before the revolt began that future generations of Filipinos may feel justified to commit despicable political acts "simply because we, when we had the chance, did not stand up for the truth."

Then his daughter came home from school crying because students, again, had jeered at her for her father's loyalty to Marcos.

Immigrants receive liberty awards

NEW YORK — Comedian Bob Hope, who came from England in 1907, former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, who was born in Germany, and composer Irving Berlin, a native of Russia, were among those honored as immigrants who have made substantial contributions to American life.

They and nine other naturalized citizens were named Saturday as the first winners of the Medal of Liberty as part of the Statue of Liberty's centennial celebration.

The announcement was made by Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee A. Iacocca, head of the Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation Inc. He was joined by Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., TV journalist Barbara Walters, authors Theodore H. White and Alex Haley, historian Arthur Schlesinger Jr., and other members of the committee that chose the winners.

The recipients "represent the beauty and hard work, the sacrifice, the perseverance of all our parents and grandparents, all 17 million of them," said Iacocca, whose parents were Italian immigrants.

The awards will be made by President Reagan aboard the carrier USS John F. Kennedy on July 3, the opening of Liberty Weekend.

The other nine are Franklin R. Chang-Diaz, a NASA astronaut originally from Costa Rica; Kenneth Clark, a psychologist from Jamaica; Hannah Holborn Gray, president of the University of Chicago, from Germany; architect I.M. Pei, from China; violinist Itzhak Perlman, from Israel; journalist James B. Reston, from Scotland; Dr. Albert B. Sabin, inventor of the oral polio vaccine, from Russia; An Wang, founder of Wang Labs Inc., from China; and author Elie Wiesel, from Romania.

Nebraskans ask singer for concert

GRAFTON, Neb. — Five communities have invited country western star Willie Nelson to stage a Farm Aid concert in Fillmore County in southeastern Nebraska.

Community improvement committees of Geneva, Fairmont, Grafton, Strang and Exeter extended the invitation.

"We're serious about this, although we're having a little fun with it, too," said Marcia Stuckey of Grafton. "Why not have it (the concert) right out where the people who need the help are living?"

Nelson recently announced his intention to combine his traditional July 4 concert with a Farm Aid II benefit.

Senate next to vote on malpractice bill

By TOM SCHULTES
Business/Government Editor

Although it's not yet law, Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, reported his committee's medical malpractice bill is on its way to Senate after a 99-24 vote by the Kansas House Friday.

Knopp, speaking at Saturday's annual legislative brunch of the Manhattan-Riley County chapter of the League of Women Voters, said although the $1 million cap on malpractice awards has received the most publicity, the proposed law has several functions.

He told the audience of more than 50 people that the bill, in the making for more than a year, would also require "more peer pressure review by doctors." This would require medical personnel to report on any activity "that is or may be below the standard of care." Knopp said if the investigating staff studies indicate improper procedures in their report to the case review board, the crime would be a Class A misdemeanor.

Another function of the bill would increase the size of the state's Board of Healing Arts by adding two laymembers, creating a total of 15 members for the board. The board is comprised primarily of other lay persons as well as members of the medical profession.

Knopp, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, said if a jury decides the cap is too low in a situation, a request for a waiver can be made to the Board of Governors of the Health Care Stabilization Fund. He said the bill would provide for long-term needs of malpractice victims by establishing an annuity fund, which could produce a steady income instead of large, one-time cash settlements.

By using the annuity system, victims "will see all future medical benefits paid," Knopp said.

"The goal is to compensate," he said, "and not to punish."

When asked why Gov. John Carlin threatened to veto the proposed bill, Knopp said Carlin may feel it is "wrong for (the state) to arbitrarily cut off entitled amounts" decided at the judicial level. But Knopp also said past support of the governor by the Kansas Trial Lawyers Association, which is against the caps, may also be a reason for the governor's threat.

If the Legislature were to override a Carlin veto, it would be the first time in 7½ sessions.

Knopp said other states with caps include Nebraska at $1 million, Indiana at $500,000 and Louisiana with a ceiling of $750,000. He said he rejected a proposed $500,000 cap because statistics show the figure to be lower than needed by the victim.

The legislator said another goal is to stabilize insurance rates in the state. Five companies are writing malpractice policies in Kansas.

The alternative to the legislation, he said, would be doctors leaving the specialized fields and rural areas, leaving Kansas residents without proper medical care. But, he added, even this legislation will not guarantee rural area health care, due to other economic pressures in the smaller markets.

"But with (the proposed bill's passage)," he said, "the Legislature can say malpractice was not the reason for doctors leaving."

Proposed bill includes many provisional issues

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Offshore oil money, cigarette taxes, a new tobacco program and dozens of other unrelated provisions are wrapped together in a single bill that promises to spark intense battle this week in Congress.

House Democrats plan to move ahead with the package, which the Congressional Budget Office says would cut $21 billion from the deficits through fiscal 1988.

But the president's Office of Management and Budget contends the savings would be about half that much and that Democrats are trying to slip through some provisions that would be too costly in the long run.

The Republican-controlled Senate has been trying to draft a compromise acceptable to the White House, but Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said the measure would move ahead even without the president's approval.

The House and Senate each passed versions of the bill in December, but Congress adjourned locked in a stalemate over whether to include a tax on large manufacturers to pay for the Superfund toxic waste cleanup program.

Although that tax has been dropped, this week could see another round of political tennis with the bill, and the Senate, House and White House do not want to be blamed for killing a bill that could help meet the targets of the new deficit-reduction law.

"It gets down to who's going to end up with the body," Dole said last week.

If the package fails, some of its politically-important provisions are expected to return in other legislation. Those include:

—Continuation of the 16-cent-a-pack tax on cigarettes. Without an extension, the tax would drop later this month to 8 cents, costing the treasury more than $1.5 billion a year.

—A new tobacco price support program. Language won by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., would give tobacco companies control over tobacco production quotas. The bill would also write off up to $1.1 billion in tobacco loans, in the form of discounts to the companies for purchasing government tobacco stocks over the next five to eight years.

—A formula for sharing between the federal government and some states the revenue from offshore oil leases. Nearly $6 billion has built up in an escrow account because of the dispute between the states and federal government over the formula. The Reagan administration opposes the formula in the bill as too generous to the states, but it also wants the money to cut the deficit.

—Sharp cutbacks in Small Business Administration loan programs. The bill would pare the SBA and save more than $2 billion over three years, but the administration plans to continue fighting to abolish the agency.

Ozark Air Lines agrees to merger

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ozark Air Lines, a St. Louis-based air carrier that earned only $636,000 last year, has agreed to be acquired by Trans World Airlines for $250 million, the companies said.

The merger agreement signed Saturday comes against a backdrop of rapid consolidation and intense competition in the U.S. airline industry, and was the second big airline merger announced in a week.

Ozark's earnings had dropped from $12.7 million in 1984. Company officials attributed the decline partly to fare wars pervading the industry.

The agreement was signed in St. Louis and is subject to approval by Ozark's shareholders and the U.S. Department of Transportation, TWA spokesman Larry Hilliard said.

TWA chairman Carl Icahn has said the proposed merger, announced Thursday, would give TWA the facilities and smaller aircraft it needs but could not have gotten any other way.

TWA, which has its base of operations in Kansas City, Mo., and executive offices in New York, owns 165 aircraft while Ozark owns 50, Hilliard said.

Under the TWA-Ozark merger agreement, Ozark stockholders would receive $19 in cash for each of 13 million outstanding shares.

TWA lost $193.1 million last year, reportedly continues to lose about $1 million a day and is facing a showdown with militant flight attendants who have threatened to strike March 7 because of major changes in work rules demanded by Icahn.

Eastern Airlines, which is $2.5 billion in debt, announced earlier last week that it had agreed to be acquired by Texas Air Corp. for $600 million.

TWA itself was the subject of a bitter acquisition struggle when it was taken over by Icahn last year after he outmaneuvered Texas Air Corp. President Frank Lorenzo to gain control of the country's fourth-largest airline.

Abortion consent bill creates new problems

A bill before the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee in Topeka would require parental consent be obtained by a physician before performing an abortion on any woman under the age of 18.

Supporters of the bill told the committee requiring parental consent would help provide more medical information about the procedure and its possible complications to the pregnant woman.

They also noted that no one under the age of 18 can have any other medical procedure performed upon them without parental consent.

Parents do need to know if their daughter is pregnant, and ideally they should be involved in the decision-making process, for the reasons stated by the supporters of this bill.

But requiring parental consent for an abortion creates new problems instead of solving those it would attempt to answer.

If lawmakers believe they must pass legislation of this kind, it should state only that parents be informed of their daughter's wish to have an abortion, not that parental consent be required. Informing parents of their daughter's decision can do much to solve the problems that go along with such a decision. Legislation mandating that parents be informed can help to generate the parental involvement needed to make this difficult decision without taking the final say from the potential parent — the daughter.

Requiring parental consent could mean a parent could force a daughter to have a child she does not want. This situation is much different from other medical procedures requiring parental consent.

The bill would state that a woman could still go to court for permission to have an abortion. If this were to be feasible the legal system would have to work with more rapidity than it currently does, or the woman would be too far along in her pregnancy to have the abortion by the time the decision was made.

If, on the other hand, parents were notified of the decision and the daughter still wanted the abortion, they would be able to help her choose a reliable physician or an abortion clinic that provided counseling. This would generate the necessary information, without taking the final decision from the mother.

University takes steps to alter accessibility

It's been a long battle for those who have been denied access to certain buildings on campus, but it's beginning to look like the battle may be almost over.

The start of construction of a chairlift for Kedzie Hall, for those confined to wheelchairs, signals the progress being made for handicapped students at the University. Plans to make more of the older buildings on campus accessible in compliance with Public Law 504 are also currently underway.

Although the law doesn't require all buildings to be handicap accessible, it does require that the University's programs be made accessible for the physically disabled. The renovation at Kedzie is one example of this.

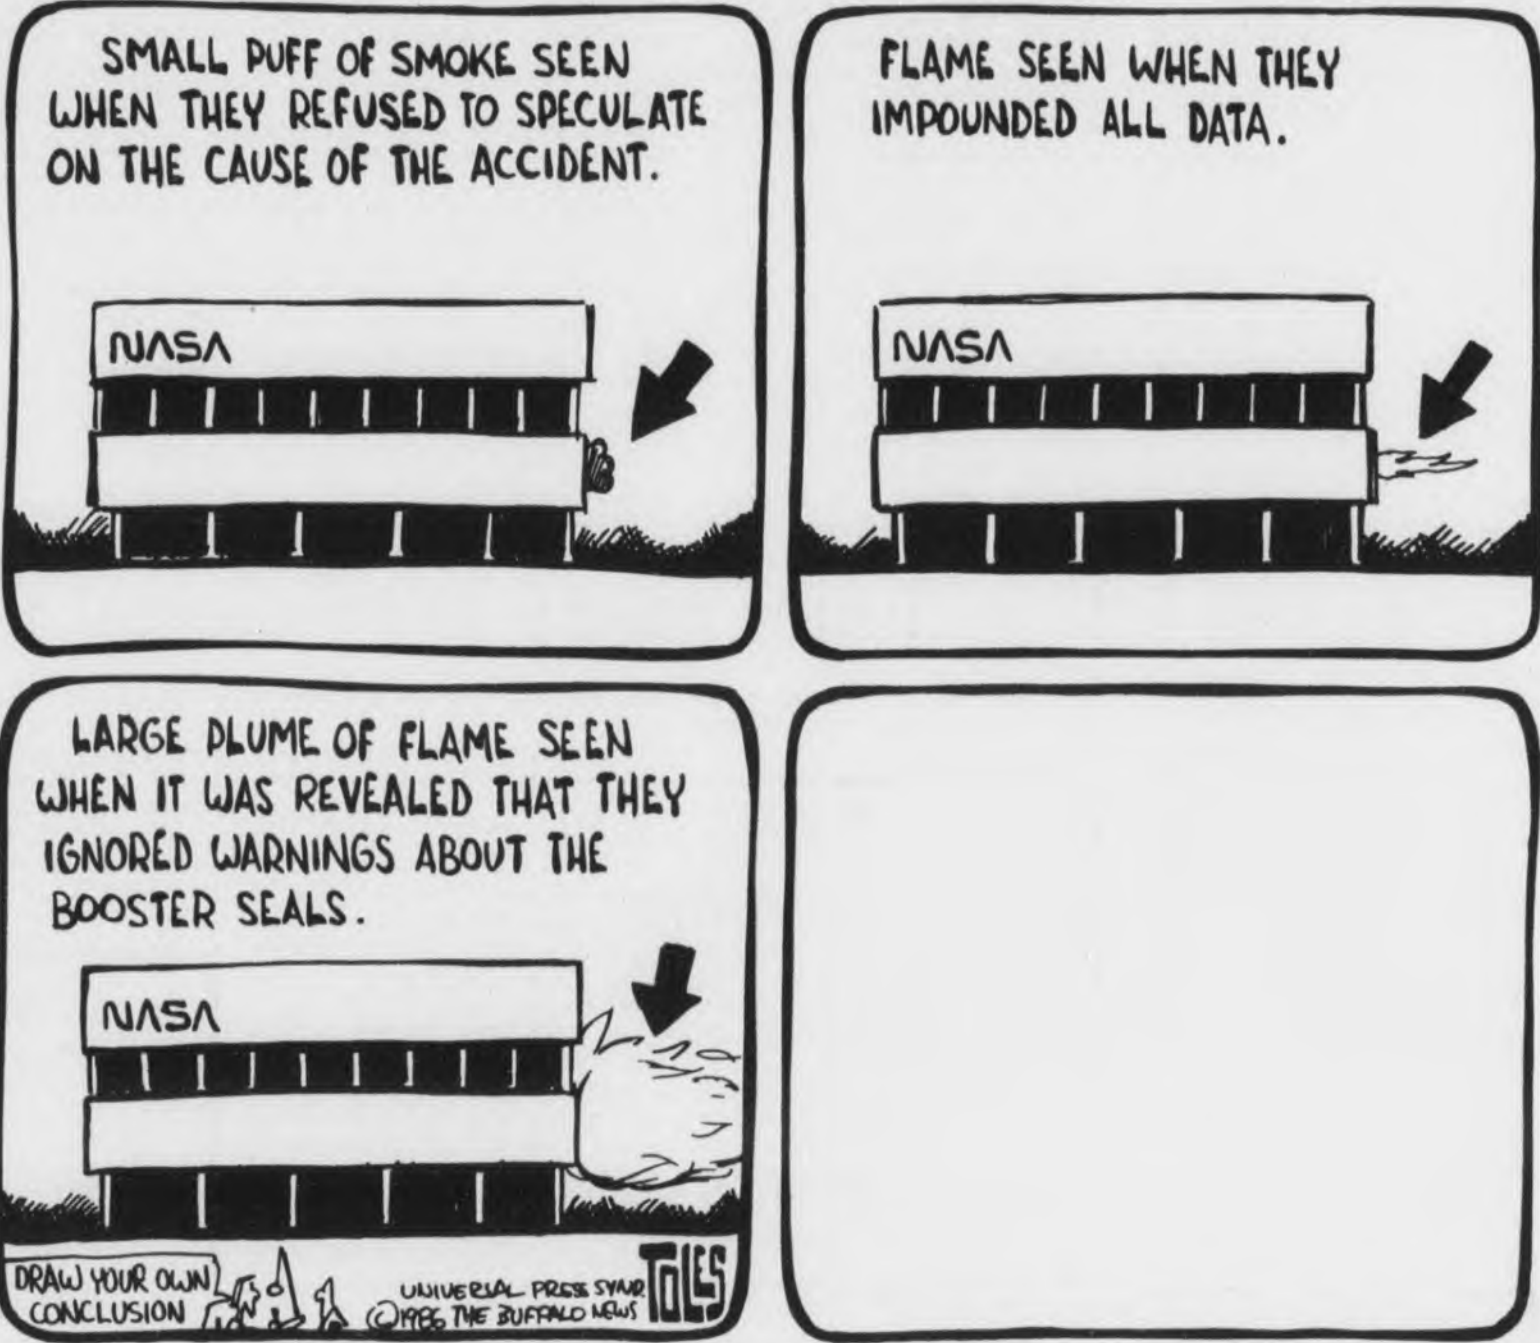

The need for these improvements is obvious. Handicapped students have long been restricted on where they can go at the University. For some, even the choice of a major depends on which buildings are accessible to them.

The benefits of improved accessibility will be noted by people other than handicapped students. Instructors will no longer have to move classes to another accessible building when they have a handicapped student in class.

Handicapped students have been fighting for improvements on campus for years. They waged a long struggle with Student Senate for funds to make Anderson Hall accessible and have lobbied for state funds. It's good that something is finally being done to serve the interests of handicapped students, as well as all students.

Library preserves work of Graves

Only in academia can poultry and poetry mix so well.

When the Farrell Library Special Collections staff boasts of its Lenora Hering Memorial Poultry Collection, which contains a variety of books, many consider the rural nature of K-State and deem pride in this collection as both appropriate and charmingly quaint.

The staff's boasting of its 900 volume Robert Graves collection, however, stirs curiosity. Why does K-State own one of the best collections of the works of the English poet, novelist and classic scholar?

The answer is just one more example of the diverse scholarly work that goes on at K-State, often with little recognition due to the overpowering image of the University as solely an agriculture college.

Retired K-State professor Fred Higginson devoted most of his life to a study of Graves. Higginson's bibliography of Graves' works still serves as a primer for any serious Gravesian scholar. In 1983, Higginson and his wife, Jeannette, donated their collection of Graves' literature to K-State.

Higginson's meticulous account of Graves' work includes documentation of the small changes Graves made from one publication of a particular work to another. The collection is composed of many publications of each work, as well as Hungarian translations of his material.

CATHERINE SAYLER
Collegian Columnist

In addition, the collection contains many supplementary works, such as novels written by others but introduced by Graves and interviews of Graves in various magazines.

Graves' literary accomplishments are phenomenal, both in volume and content. His novels include "Goodbye to All That," "I, Claudius" and "The White Goddess." Though successful as a novelist, Graves considered himself a poet, dismissing what he referred to as "prose books" as "the show dogs I breed to support my cats."

In his early adulthood, Graves wrote only poetry until he realized that poetry alone was not lucrative enough. Even in his old age he was quick to voice his resentment over the "saleability" of poetry.

Miranda goes beyond basic ruling

A recent editorial on this page, "Miranda rule protects rights of accused," once again demonstrates the triumph of myth over reality. The common analysis of the U.S. Supreme Court's June 1966, ruling on Miranda vs. Arizona deals only with the portion of the majority opinion which states:

"In the absence of other effective measures the following procedures to safeguard the Fifth Amendment privilege must be observed: The person in custody must, prior to interrogation, be clearly informed that he has the right to remain silent, and that anything he says will be used against him in court; he must be clearly informed that he has the right to consult with a lawyer, and to have a lawyer present with him during interrogation, and that, if he is indigent, a lawyer will be appointed to represent him."

In actuality the ruling is not as simple as that. Also, it is important to realize that subsequent rulings based on Miranda have added to the scope and complexity of the decision.

The original Miranda decision dealt with four cases. The issue in each was the admissibility of the defendant's confession. In addition there was no doubt as to the guilt of the accused nor was there any claim of excessive interrogation techniques on the part of the police. In fact the court did not consider the way in which the police questioned the suspects.

So from its inception Miranda served not to protect against the wrongful conviction of the innocent but to make it more difficult to bring the guilty to justice. Had Miranda entailed nothing more than the reading of rights, it would have made law enforcement more difficult, which would be perhaps justified by the greater protection of individual liberty.

However, Miranda does not end there. As anyone with even a cursory knowledge of the American judicial system knows the law is not static, but in a constant state of flux. Even what appear to be direct and clearly understandable legal principles are subject to interpretations that can vary dramatically.

This is demonstrated by the cases of Plessy vs. Ferguson (1896) and Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education (1954) in which the Court went from permitting segregation

RICHARD THORP
Collegian Columnist

— virtually mandating it "in the interest of minimizing occasions for race friction..." — to the position that segregation was unconstitutional. Both of these rulings were based on the Fourteenth Amendment.

The evolution of decisions dealing with segregation went from a position that permitted injustice to one that demanded justice. Miranda has evolved in the opposite direction. The decision has gone from a questionable implementation of Fifth Amendment rights to a morass of rules that make effective prosecution of criminals virtually impossible.

Supporters of the Miranda ruling give the impression that it is easy for law enforcement officers to comply with the Miranda requirements. This is not true. The New York City Police Department has gone as far as to create a 24-hour hotline to assist its officers in the complexities of arrest procedure, but even with this (a procedure smaller communities cannot afford) criminals are returned to the streets.

Consider the fact that a confessed murderer was released because the Miranda card used during his arrest said "anything you say may be held for or against you" meaning that his attorney would be able to use his statements in addition to the district attorney. The court held that this violated the spirit of the Miranda ruling.

Consider the case of Robert Anthony Williams, who raped a 9-year-old girl, killing her in the process. Williams surrendered to the police, was read his rights and had access to a lawyer. However, because one of the police officers mentioned in Williams' presence that the girl's parents wanted "to give their daughter a good Christian burial" the court ruled that his confession was "coerced."

Williams was tried three times, not counting appeals, because of varying interpretations of Miranda given by the different judges hearing the case. So much for the "more efficient" law enforcement cited by supporters of Miranda.

Note that the intent of the rulings is to make confessions more difficult to obtain and use. Also the expanded power of Miranda cannot feasibly protect anyone but criminals.

Attorney General Edwin Meese's desire to correct the perversion of Miranda is not an assault on the basic freedoms of American society. Instead it is an attempt to address a basic function of the criminal justice system — arresting and convicting criminals.

Finally, an ironic footnote to the Miranda case itself. Shortly after his conviction was overturned, Ernesto Miranda confessed again, this time to a friend who turned him in, and his second conviction held. After his release he made money by selling autographed copies of the Miranda cards used by the police.

In 1976, he was stabbed to death in a fight over a poker game. After the police read their Miranda cards to all the suspects everyone invoked their right to remain silent and the police were unable to solve the case.

Tanning precautions aid skin

By ANNETTE FANKHAUSER
Collegian Reporter

Spring break is less than a week away and students are planning their vacations — and chances are, planning their tans.

Regardless of the destination — Padre Island, Texas, Daytona Beach, Fla., Steamboat Springs, Colo., or Mexico — a tan may be an important factor in planning the trip.

A tanned complexion not only looks good, but also gives the person a good feeling about himself, said Cindy Culver-Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center.

When deciding whether to tan, several factors should be considered, she said.

"Most people are not concerned today, but what about the tomorrows to come?" Culver-Burke said.

Skin wrinkling and skin cancer may be the result of excessive tanning, she said. The risk of skin problems can be reduced if precautionary measures are taken, such as using some form of sunscreen or moisturizer to replenish moisture the skin loses when tanning, Culver-Burke said.

Sun screens come in five different forms and are known as SPF (sun protection factor). A pamphlet by the Food and Drug Administration states SPF two to four provides minimal protection from sunburn for those who rarely burn and who tan easily. SPF four to six provides moderate protection from sunburning for those who tan well with minimal burning.

SPF six to eight provides extra protection from sunburning and permits limited suntanning for those who burn fairly easily and tan gradually. SPF eight to 15 provides maximum protection from sunburning and is recommended for those who burn easily and tan minimally. SPF 15 or greater provides the most protection from sunburn and offers the highest protection.

Regardless of using a sun screen or lotion, Culver-Burke said she believes a base tan will not make much difference when going to a tanning salon. She said, however, a base tan helps maintain the tan.

Tanning booths have become an alternative to the sun although risks are involved with tanning booths.

Ultraviolet light in the tanning booths are known as ultraviolet "A" and ultraviolet "B." A pamphlet by Sun Industries Inc., a UVA tanning equipment company in Jonesboro, Ark., states that about 98 percent of the light is UVA and the remaining 2 percent is UVB. UVA light changes the pigment of the skin and UVB light is produced by the sun and tends to burn the skin.

"All beds have a combination of UVA and UVB. However, the majority of the light is UVA, which changes the skin tone without the risk of burning," said Bruce Slimmer, owner of Mar-Y-Sol Spa and Tanning Salon, 1214 C Moro St.

Lisa Wilkens, manager of the Sun Connection, 1126 Laramie St., stressed the importance of eye protection.

"Clients should wear goggles to protect their eyes and they should remove their contact lenses to prevent them from drying out," Wilkens said.

Time limitations should be considered when tanning, Slimmer said. He recommended starting with short tanning sessions and working up to longer sessions.

"It's best to start at a 20-minute tanning time for fair skin and work up to 30 minutes," Slimmer said.

Grant to aid University's work on memory testing procedures

By JILL LANG
Collegian Reporter

Current tests for the effects of aging on memory are complicated and redundant, and through a grant from the American Association of Retired Persons, the University is working on new testing procedures, said a University official.

The $36,256 grant has been awarded jointly to the College of Education and the Center for Aging by the Andrus Foundation of the AARP.

The grant provides funds to study the structure and assessment of memory among the aging and is awarded to one university per year. It is usually awarded through aging or gerontology centers, depending on which service a university offers.

The funds will support the testing of 100 subjects, 60 years old and older from the Manhattan area. The subjects will be selected on a non-random basis to obtain an equal distribution of the population by age, sex and ethnic background.

The research will be led by Robert Sinnett, project director and Manhattan psychologist, and Michael Holen, principal director and associate dean of the College of Education.

"The purpose of the study is to find out how memory tests interrelate through conducting various types of tests," Sinnett said. "Not much research has been done in the area of normative nature in the 60 years and over age group. The tests conducted will help show physical and mental disorders, as well as patterns of memory in the aged."

Current testing methods are time consuming and demanding on the individual, Holen said.

"It is our belief that a lot of the present methods of testing are redundant. We're looking to come up with a fairly short, less complicated means of testing," he said.

The research will be conducted by two graduate assistants trained by Sinnett. They were chosen from the administration foundation of the College of Education and will conduct the testing.

Maggie Davie and Agnes Elving, graduate students in student personnel and counseling, were selected for the program in mid-December and began work at the beginning of the spring semester.

Sinnett will also be involved in the data gathering process, while Holen's area of expertise is compiling, tabulating and drawing a conclusion after the data has been collected.

Simulated board game highlights convention

By PAT HUND
Collegian Reporter

Soviet forces have mounted a divisional offensive against NATO forces by moving across the East German border into West Germany.

Is this the start of World War III? No, it's Micro Armor, a simulated board game, said Gary Mills, coordinator of the game and Army communications sergeant at Fort Riley. Mills said he did a similar simulation for the Army while stationed in West Germany.

About 20 people representing NATO and Soviet forces participated in tactical maneuvers and in strategically moving helicopters, tanks and artillery in the game, Mills said.

The Micro Armor game was one of four competitive tournaments at Imagicon V, a convention for science fiction and fantasy enthusiasts Friday, Saturday and Sunday in the Union. This is the fifth annual convention sponsored by Star Riders, a University organization comprised of science fiction and fantasy buffs.

Mike Bradley, senior in English and committee chairman of Imagicon V, said most of the 150 people who attended are from Manhattan, but some participants also come from Junction City and Fort Riley, as well as a few from the Kansas City area. About half the people who attend are high school students, he said, but one thing most participants of Imagicon V have in common is they are "gamers."

"Gamers are people who play such tournament games as Micro Armor and Dungeons and Dragons," Bradley said.

While many people came to Imagicon V to play in the tournament games, there were other activities, he said.

Dice stacking contests, black box (a haunted house), trivia games, a costume contest, body golf and seven feature movies were also highlights at Imagicon V.

Guest authors of science fiction and fantasy books, Lee and Pat Killough, Robin Baily and Janet Fox, attended Imagicon V and judged the figurine painting and costume contests. They also participated in two author discussion panels at the convention.

"Our theme this year is to have fun," Bradley said. "We like to keep the schedule flexible and just have fun."

Bradley said some events were not scheduled but were created later because "someone decided it was time to have fun."

He was referring to an impromptu paper airplane war which was not on the original schedule but had taken place earlier to the delight of many convention goers.

One scheduled event on Saturday afternoon was body golf. In this game the participant places a small ball just below the breast bone and attempts to guide the ball to the navel with the use of stomach muscles.

Coy Kisse, sophomore at Manhattan High School, said he has attended the three previous conventions but this year's convention was the best he has seen.

"I definitely think the Car Wars tournament was the best it has ever been," he said.

In Car Wars, each player drives a heavily armed armored vehicle in combat with other armed and armored cars, Kisse said.

Bradley said he thought this year's convention was successful despite the low turnout. Last year about 200 people attended the event, which was the "biggest crowd ever."

"It's (Imagicon) made to be enjoyed, so it doesn't matter that we didn't have a great crowd," Bradley said.

David Unekis, Manhattan, pauses before attempting to place the last die on a stack during the final round of the dice stacking contest Sunday at Imagicon

V, a convention for science fiction and fantasy buffs in the Union Ballroom. The convention, which began Friday, concluded Sunday.

Americans favor lie detectors in courts

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A majority of Americans believe lie detectors should be used in the courtroom, but they don't believe they should be used by businesses in most circumstances, according to a Media General-Associated Press poll.

The nationwide telephone poll of 1,512 adult Americans found that 72 percent believed the machines should be used in court to test people accused of crimes, and 63 percent said witnesses in court should also be tested.

Such tests are not presently allowed as evidence in court, in part because their validity is open to debate.

The poll also found that eight in 10 respondents thought lie detector tests should be given to government employees who have access to classified information.

Three-quarters also thought it was appropriate for employers to test workers suspected of stealing, but most objected to the use of polygraphs by businesses in general.

Some businesses require prospective new employees to take lie detector tests. Only 37 percent of those in the poll considered it an appropriate use, and only 27 percent thought current employees should be subjected to lie detector tests.

However, two-thirds of the respondents said they would not object to taking a lie detector test if asked to do so by either a current boss or a potential employer.

"I presume that two-thirds of people are honest, so they don't have any problem taking lie detector tests," said Leonard Saxe, principal author of a 1983 study of polygraph validity for the congressional Office of Technology Assessment.

"But the problem with lie detector tests is that it's just not a valid means of figuring out if people are telling the truth or not," said Saxe, a psychology professor at Boston University. "If people recognized the validity problems ... I think they'd have a different opinion."

President Reagan issued a directive late last year that permitted the use of polygraphs for all people with access to highly classified information. But the proposal came under fire in Congress from critics who questioned the validity of polygraphs. And Secretary of State George Schulz, who questioned whether polygraphs were effective, said he would quit rather than submit to a lie detector test.

The American Civil Liberties Union also opposes the use of polygraphs in employment screening, contending it is an invasion of privacy.

In the Media General-AP poll, only 15 percent of the respondents said they had taken a polygraph test, and the majority of them said it was required when they applied for jobs.

Younger respondents were more likely than older respondents to object to lie detector tests. People with higher incomes were also more likely to object.

Group plans activities, promotes state wildlife

By The Collegian Staff

In honor of Kansas' 125th anniversary, a series of activities are being held in the state during March to recognize Kansas Wildlife Heritage Month.

"This year's theme is 'Rivers: Highways Of Our Heritage,'" said Jan Garton, coordinator of events. "We chose this theme because there is a lot of legislation in the state that pertains to rivers. This allows for the protection of stream-side habitat."

Activities planned for the month include Gov. John Carlin's dedication of the MacLennan Natural Area on the grounds of Cedar Crest, the governor's mansion in Topeka.

"This is a new creation," Garton said. "A landscape design instructor at K-State is erecting some trails in woodland areas on the grounds so people can learn about conservation."

Other activities include river and stream clean-up, wildlife information displays in Kansas libraries and a run from the Cheyenne Bottoms Wildlife Area near Great Bend to the State Capitol in Topeka.

Many local groups will host events in their communities.

Every Thursday evening during Kansas Wildlife Heritage Month, the Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society is sponsoring a wildlife film festival at the Manhattan Public Library. These films are open to the public.

Garton said the purpose of Kansas Wildlife Month is to have fun and be aware of conservation.

"I hope people will take a few minutes of their time to think about wildlife," Garton said. "Our activities will then be a success."

Derby Days' activities include games, parade

By ANNETTE FANKHAUSER
Collegian Reporter

More than $2,000 was raised by the Sigma Chi fraternity during its annual Derby Days Fund Raiser.

Derby Days, which were Wednesday through Saturday, involved eleven sororities, five more than participated last year. The group also raised $500 to $1,000 more than it had the year before, said Shawn Bracken, rush chairman of Sigma Chi and junior in management and marketing.

Derby Days take place each year to raise money for the Wallace Village for Children in Broomfield, Colo. — a village for children with minor brain damage.

It is a nationwide event sponsored by all Sigma Chi chapters and which raises about $120,000 each year for the village.

"We raised about $2,000 this year, which I thought was great," said Chuck Kneaves, chairman of Derby Days and sophomore in mechanical engineering. He said the event was a big success.

Local businesses also helped with the promotion and the fund raising. The sponsors this year were Brother's Tavern, 1120 Moro; Southern Sun, 519 N. 12th St.; and Campbell Distributors Inc., 825 Levee Drive. T-Shirt sales are also part of the fund raising.

Aside from raising money for the village, the event also gives participants a chance to show their talents. The dance contest was one of the major events, Kneaves said.

The Chi Omegas took first place in the event with a takeoff of Sonny and Cher. Dan Wagner, senior in journalism and mass communications, played Cher; Julie Waris, junior in interior design, played Sonny; and Nancy Hoffman, freshman in pre-professional business, played Chastity.

The Kappa Deltas placed second in the dance contest with a Madonna theme and the Delta Delta Deltas placed third with a theme to the song

"Ugly Women."

The volleyball games on Friday and Saturday had a high rate of participation as well as allowing for more accumulation of points. The Alpha Delta PIs placed first, the Gamma Phi Betas placed second, and the Alpha Gamma Deltas took third.

The Derby games held Saturday afternoon on the Sigma Chi lawn consisted of several events. An obstacle course and Dec-A-Sig, a skit, were just two of the events. Points were accumulated for the events and added to each sorority's score with the overall winner being the Chi Omega sorority.

"We probably had 95 percent participation from our house," Waris said. "We really get psyched up for Derby Days every year. Last year the sorority placed second overall and in 1983 the house placed first."

The sorority placed first in T-shirt sales and the dance contest. It took second in the T-shirt signing, Waris said.

In addition to participating in the events throughout the week, the Chi Omegas also had a parade Saturday before the Derby Games. Members and coaches marched down Manhattan Avenue to the Sigma Chi house.

"The parade was awesome," Waris said. "It really got everybody going for the final events."

The parade was led by two horses and the members followed behind in convertibles.

The Kappa Alpha Thetas won the Derby Days Spirit Award for the number of people who participated, enthusiasm and overall support, Bracken said.

Organization presents awards to volunteers

By RON RENO

Bill Roland was one of about 70 Big Brothers and Big Sisters honored Sunday night for doing something which allows him to "become a kid again."

Roland, sophomore in general, was one of over 130 people who attended the Big Brothers and Big Sisters skating party at the Skate Plaza Roller Rink, 400 Tuttle Creek Blvd., where certificates of appreciation were presented to volunteers.

The Manhattan chapter of the organization has 127 "matches", or pairings between big and little brothers and sisters, said Winifred Endicott, director of the Manhattan chapter. She also said about half of the volunteers are college students.

The certificates, which are given out annually, are "to show appreciation for their time and effort and dedication and commitment," Endicott said.

While the volunteers are greatly appreciated, Endicott stressed the importance of being committed to the program.

"It's a very serious commitment and the children do regard it very seriously," she said.

Endicott said the organization tries to match children, who usually come from single parent families, with sponsors according to mutual interests and the age of the child the volunteer would like to work with.

Volunteers must be 18 years of age, able to spend three to six hours a week with the child and be willing to make a yearlong time commitment, Endicott said.

Roland has been involved with the program for nearly two years. He and his little brother, Charles Black, 12, get together a couple of times each week and play basketball or football, go to the movies, or sometimes even study together.

Since Black is nearly a teen-ager, Roland said, "We talk about girls a lot."

Another volunteer, Monica Daniels, junior in public administration, said she and her little sister often get together and do "everyday stuff" such as baking cookies and washing the car.

Daniels called the benefits of the program "unbelievable."

Endicott said the organization is still in need of volunteers. There are about 40 boys and five girls who are on a list waiting to get a big brother or big sister, she said.

Planning Board to discuss Town East Subdivision

By The Collegian Staff

The Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board will consider the Final Subdivision Plat of the Town East Subdivision at its meeting tonight.

This subdivision, being developed by the partnership of Ron Bowman and Chris Curtin, is located north of U.S. Highway 24 and east of the K-Mart/Food-4-Less Planned Unit Development. The facility to be built on the site is scheduled to contain several businesses relocating for downtown mall construction.

The first scheduled public hearing will concern approval of a preliminary plan drawing of a tract of land in Ogden Township. The request will allow the creation of 10 residential building lots. The board is also scheduled to consider rezoning the tract of land from General Agricultural District to Single-Family Residential District.

Another public hearing concerns a rezoning which will allow construction of a fire station and public service building on Hunter's Island, south of Manhattan. This hearing is scheduled at the request of the Manhattan Township and Hunter's Island Community Improvement District.

A discussion will be held to consider adding home occupations as a permitted use in R-S and R, Single-Family Districts. The board will also look into adding computing as a home occupation.

The Board meets at 7 p.m. in the City Commission Room of the Manhattan City Administration building, 11th Street and Poyntz Avenue.

Symphonic ensemble to feature new twist

By JEFF STARK
Collegian Reporter

The KSU Symphonic Wind Ensemble will make music by some unconventional methods during its concert Tuesday.

On the program for the concert is "and the mountains rising nowhere," by Joseph Schwanter, a work based on a poem by Carol Adler, written for amplified piano and wind ensemble.

"Besides playing their instruments, the members of the ensemble also sing and whistle, and several play glass crystals," said Stan Finck, associate professor of music and director of bands.

"We will have an amplified piano and, in addition to playing it normally, the person will have to pluck the strings inside on some parts of the song. We will have tuned gongs that change pitch when dipped in water, and wine glasses filled with vinegar mounted on boards that make high pitched sounds," Finck said.

Finck said there are six percussionists playing 60 instruments between them on the piece.

"The percussionists don't usually get to do much (in a wind ensemble). In this piece we are playing three to four parts between us. The piece is quite exciting," said percussionist David Roth, freshman in music.

The ensemble will also host a guest band. The Clay Center Community High School Band, directed by C.L. Snodgrass and 64 members strong, will open the concert with a short program of its own.

"When I was teaching at the University of Wisconsin at Whitewater (guest bands) went real well and I think it will go well here also," Finck said.

"This will give the University students an idea of what is happening in our area public schools and it will also give the area band an idea of what a college band sounds like. It ends up being a positive educational experience for both bands," Finck said.

The Clay Center Band will play "Burst of Flame," by Richard Bowles; "Yorkshire Ballad," by James Barnes; and "Tribute to Jerome Kern," arranged by Warren Barker.

"We are quite pleased to be chosen to play in this concert. McCain Auditorium is a fine facility and the kids are excited about going down to Manhattan," Snodgrass said.

The concert is scheduled for 8 p.m. in McCain. There is no admission charge.

'Pirates' performance lacks excitement

By LAURIE FAIRBURN
Entertainment Editor

Although seasoned with a few delicious moments, "The Pirates of Penzance," performed last weekend in McCain Auditorium, was a bland effort.

Play Review

The Gilbert and Sullivan operetta, a K-State Players' production, involves a band of tender-hearted pirates and a demure group of sisters in a zany adventure during the reign of Queen Victoria.

The technical skills of scene designer Al Sheffield and lighting designer John Uthoff combined to create a truly beautiful setting. But the visual elements couldn't tell the story; and the principal members of the cast didn't live up to the responsibility.

Clay Schnittker, senior in music, as Frederic in the Thursday and Saturday performances, possesses a strong tenor voice. When untaxed by the operatic challenges of his part, his voice was pleasant and melodic; but he obviously strained his way to the peak notes and seemed tortured in doing so. The lyrics were lost, the audience left to fill the void in the story.

Veronica Caine-Victor, senior in music, was lovely as Frederic's Mabel. The most operatic voice in the ensemble, she never noticeably faltered. But it was seldom possible to understand her lyrics. And too often her voice was the only sign of life she possessed, seemingly uninterested in what she was doing.

Deni Good, graduate student in theater, played a clever and convincing Major-General. As a leader should, he commanded the stage, but whether or not his dialogue made it to the audience depended upon where he stood.

Had it not been for the fine performances of the supporting cast, the entire story may have been lost.

Eugene Thomas, graduate in music, gave a strong vocal performance and displayed a good sense of comic timing as the dashing Pirate King, the sincere, yet inept pirate leader. His performance was by far the most consistent of the principal characters.

The pirates, one and all, were fabulous. They seemed driven by a sense of comradery and spirit, and this, combined with the outstanding choreography of Luke Kahlich, brought the stage to life. The operetta was most enjoyable when the pirates raided the stage.

The daughters of the Major-General were absurdly feminine — and delightful. Beth Sherby, junior in theater, was particularly engaging as Kate. Eyes could not have missed her animated (at times hysterically funny) performance, and her voice was the icing on the cake.

The orchestra, conducted by Adrian Bryttan, should be proud of a characteristically outstanding performance. They served the music of Sir Arthur Sullivan well.

Teen-ager alleges incestuous abuse, hires killer

By The Associated Press

SELDEN, N.Y. — Classmates sometimes saw black-and-blue marks on Cheryl Pierson's body, but she told them they were nothing to worry about.

Now authorities say those bruises were the only indication that the 16-year-old cheerleader had suffered five years of incestuous abuse at the hands of her father.

The situation didn't come out into the open until her father, 42-year-old James Pierson, was shot dead in the family driveway. Cheryl Pierson and her boyfriend were arrested and accused of paying a 17-year-old schoolmate $400 to kill him. Cheryl Pierson and the schoolmate were charged with the death; the boyfriend with conspiracy.

"If a kid comes into school and is banged up, I would think it would come to somebody's attention," said John G. Ehrlich, chief of the family crime bureau of the Suffolk County district attorney's office.

But Cheryl Pierson had never been mentioned in any complaint to his office. Ehrlich's staff has increased from two to six in the past four years, while the number of child abuse complaints increased tenfold.

Work in recent years to uncover cases of child abuse "makes this all the more troubling. There is an avenue. They don't have to kill their father," said Arthur Dermer, principal at the school Cheryl Pierson attended, Newfield High School in Coram.

"There were a lot of ways she could have avoided the problems with her father," agreed Assistant District Attorney Edward Jablonski.

Cheryl Pierson's lawyer, Paul Gianelli, said she now realizes there were alternatives, and regrets her father's death.

At the arraignment, Gianelli wiped tears from Cheryl Pierson's face as she sat with her hands cuffed behind her. He vowed to prove the killing resulted from five years of "terrible, terrible abuses" that culminated a year ago, after her mother's death, when she became her father's "surrogate wife."

Police say the destruction of Cheryl Pierson's home life intensified when her mother got sick several years ago with kidney disease.

Gianelli said Cheryl Pierson considered leaving home, but remained for the sake of her 8-year-old sister. Then one day she saw her father "roughhousing" with her sister and feared that he had found another prey.

According to police, Cheryl Pierson planned the shooting over several months, and asked friends at school if anyone would kill her father for a fee. Officers say 17-year-old Sean Pica agreed, and Cheryl Pierson's boyfriend, Robert Cuccio, 19, paid him $400.

On Feb. 5, as James Pierson left his home in this Long Island community to go to his job as an electrician, he was shot five times with a .22-caliber rifle.

Police who interviewed Cheryl Pierson said they found inconsistencies in her story, and that she confessed eight days later.

Cheryl Pierson and Pica pleaded innocent to second-degree murder, while Cuccio pleaded innocent to conspiracy.

Commission concludes MOVE seige reckless

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — A special commission probing the fiery MOVE siege that left 11 people dead and 61 homes destroyed in a black neighborhood has concluded that a white neighborhood likely would not have been bombed, a newspaper reported Sunday.

Mayor W. Wilson Goode and other officials showed a "reckless disregard for life and property" in the confrontation with the radical group, according to the final draft of a report by the Philadelphia Special Investigation Commission, cited in Sunday editions of The Philadelphia Inquirer.

Eleven occupants of the MOVE house died and the homes were destroyed May 13 in a fire that started after police dropped a bomb in an attempt to dislodge a rooftop bunker.

The decision to drop the bomb on the fortified MOVE rowhouse "would not likely have been made had the MOVE residence been situated in a comparable white neighborhood," the Inquirer reported the commission as having concluded.

One member dissented on that point, saying Goode and then-Managing Director Leo Brooks — both black — "were responsible for the city's operation against a black terrorist group holding a black neighborhood hostage."

"The tragic events of that day were caused, purely and simply, by incompetence, bad judgment and other errors," former state Supreme Court Justice Bruce W. Kauffman wrote in his dissent, the Inquirer reported.

According to the newspaper, the 11-member panel appointed by Goode said the plan to drop the bomb was "reckless, ill-conceived and hastily approved."

"Dropping a bomb on an occupied rowhouse should have been rejected out-of-hand by the mayor, the managing director, the police commissioner and the fire commissioner," the report said, according to the Inquirer.

The report also calls for a grand jury investigation, saying the deaths of five children inside the MOVE home appeared to be "unjustified homicide."

District Attorney Ronald Castille said he would be willing to call a grand jury if the evidence in the final report, which he said he had not seen, warranted it.

The final draft calls for no resignations or firings, saying any such decisions "should only be exercised by the electorate."

Top stars earning millions, magazine reports

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Barbra Streisand has earned nearly $100 million during her life, but Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev makes a more modest salary of $18,700 a year, People magazine reports.

Some stars earn huge salaries for little work, while others toil for every penny, the magazine says in its March 10 issue.

One example of the hard workers, People says, is broadcaster Larry King, who earns $600,000 a year.

King airs a nightly four-hour talk show on Mutual Radio, does five interviews a week on the Cable News Network, makes weekly appearances during football season for NBC Sports and writes regular columns for USA Today and The Sporting News.

People compares hard-worker King with Marlon Brando, who earned $8.4 million for 13 scenes totaling less than 50 minutes in three movies, "Superman," "The Formula," and "Apocalypse Now."

Top grossers in films were Sylvester Stallone, who commands $12 million per picture and spends a lot of it buying art; and Streisand, who charges more than $5 million a film.

Miami vice detectives earn about $29,000 a year, People reports, but "Miami Vice" detectives Don Johnson and Philip Michael Thomas earn a bit more.

In the first year of their series,

Johnson and Thomas pulled down $29,000 a week and $22,000 a week respectively, but those fees have since been raised by unreported amounts.

Joan Collins got a raise from $42,000 to $47,000 for each "Dynasty" episode, but that's pin money for her.

She earned more than $750,000 for pitching Scoundrel perfume for Revlon, about the same for Sanyo and Canada Dry, $1 million from her miniseries "Sins," and a reported $125,000 for a five-hour stop in West Germany.

The Grateful Dead, performing for 21 years, haven't released a studio album in six years but ticket sales for their 71 concerts in 1985 grossed $10.8 million.

Higher on the rock 'n' roll cash parade sits Madonna, who raked in $8 million from her album, "Like a Virgin."

The easiest money may have been made by novelist Kurt Vonnegut.

He spoke eight words in a walk-on for Rodney Dangerfield's new movie, "Back to School," for a fee of $25,000, or $3,125 a word.

But communist leaders earn much less capitalistic salaries. Besides Gorbachev, Cuba's Fidel Castro brings home $9,600 a year and Deng Xiaoping of China earns $2,200 a year.

Resource aiding research of topics on women

By TERESA TEMME
Collegian Reporter

A new resource at Farrell Library will aid oral communications students in researching topics on women, Kate Anderson, assistant professor of speech, said during Friday Focus on Women.

The topic of Friday Focus was "Curriculum Development in Oral Communication Classes: Focus on Women."

The program was funded by a $3,000 grant from Women's Studies program to create a resource unit comprised of modules relating to women, Anderson said. The purpose of this unit is to encourage students to prepare thoughtful and informed speeches on issues relating to women.

Each module contains 12 to 20 articles on specific topics which help students define and limit speech topics. A library pathfinder is included at the end of each module to lead students to additional resources.

Anderson said she applied for and received the grant last spring and had time to talk with faculty members and look for articles for the modules.

Last summer she started working with graduate teaching assistants and they were able to make the modules relating to women available this spring.

Katherine Parker, assistant director of the Women's Resource Center, also worked on the modules.

"I found a lot of modules by asking faculty members for suggestions. All of the faculty members were very helpful," she said.

However, Parker said care was taken to avoid heavy research material which would turn off predominantly first- and second-year students.

Sensitizing the graduate teaching assistants in oral communications to gender, sex and ethnic bias is also part of the program.

Because they also used material relating to different ethnic groups, Minority Affairs was helpful, Parker said.

"We almost put the minorities in their own special module," Parker said.

However, she said they realized it was a mistake to separate material on minorities because minorities would not have been treated as part of a group which encounters the same problems in society. They decided to integrate the material on minorities into each module.

Parker said they included men in the issues by adding a male perspective. For example, violence towards women and children was looked at from a male perspective.

"We wanted the men to recognize the importance of these things."

"We wanted the modules to be pretty mainstream," she said.

Parker added they included controversial issues such as issues dealing with lesbians, but they were careful with these issues to avoid bombarding the students with radical views.

Cocaine from Florida could cause leukemia

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Half of the cocaine seized in Florida late last year contained benzene, a carcinogen that has been banned from consumer products because it has been shown to cause leukemia, a federal official said Sunday.

"We see the potential as extremely dangerous for lung damage or worse," said Robert H. Feldkamp, a spokesman for the Drug Enforcement Administration.

The agency in January asked the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta to evaluate the possible effects of benzene used in manufacturing cocaine "before we put all the red flags out that people who use cocaine may be in danger. We have not yet determined that," Feldkamp said in a telephone interview.

The CDC study is expected in April or May, he said.

Benzene began to show up in cocaine in early 1985 after the agency took steps to prevent illegal drug manufacturers from obtaining ether, previously a key chemical in making cocaine, Feldkamp said.

Six years ago, DEA officials determined that 98 percent of the ether being shipped to Colombia, one of the primary cocaine exporting countries, was going to drug traffickers, and only 2 percent to legitimate users.

Cocaine is processed with ether and other substances to make cocaine hydrochloride, the product reaching most users.

"It was unheard of to manufacture cocaine without ether,"

Feldkamp said.

The DEA, however, in its campaign to curb drug abuse, obtained the cooperation of ether manufacturers to limit the flow of the substance to cocaine makers.

"We do know that despite the campaign, the supply of cocaine has not diminished. So it was necessary to find out what was being used instead," Feldkamp said.

In January 1985, DEA officials began testing confiscated cocaine to determine what was being used as a substitute, and test results increasingly showed benzene.

By last November and December, half of the cocaine seized in Florida contained benzene. Other samples had been processed with toluene, methyl ethyl ketone, and methylene chloride, which are not thought to be as harmful as benzene.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission has banned the use of benzene in consumer products. It is used primarily in gasoline and in laboratories.

Dr. James L. Luke, former medical examiner for the District of Columbia, said studies have linked benzene to leukemia and other hematological disorders as well as birth defects.

Worker exposure to benzene and five other chemicals — arsenic, asbestos, chlorine, nickel and petroleum distillates — are believed responsible for 20 to 38 percent of the more than 600,000 cases of cancer diagnosed in the United States every year, according to a National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health study cited in Sunday editions of The Washington Post.

Trip aids in recovery of dissident

By The Associated Press

NEWTON, Mass. — Yelena Bonner, the wife of fellow Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov, has returned to her daughter's home tanned and feeling better after a trip to New York, Florida and California, a relative said Sunday.

"She seems much better than when she left," said her son-in-law, Efram Yankelevich.

Bonner, 63, underwent a heart bypass operation in January at Massachusetts General Hospital and recuperated at her daughter's home. She returned from the three-week trip Saturday, Yankelevich said.

She visited family friends in Florida and California, he said, adding that she also attended a meeting of the Committee of Concerned Scientists in New York City.

A post card from Sakharov arrived Saturday, and it said "basically, everything's all right in Gorky," Yankelevich said.

Union leader calls for unity

By The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — For Lynn R. Williams, president of the United Steelworkers of America, the Depression-era images of hungry, idle workers remain as vivid today as when he was growing up in Canada.

"Dad was a minister with a working-class congregation, and as a preacher's family..., there were Christmas Eves I can remember taking food baskets to families," Williams said in a recent interview at the union's international headquarters.

"It sounds corny, but I thought this isn't the way things should be," Williams said.

On Saturday, 40 years after he joined the labor movement in Toronto, he took the oath of office there for his first full term as the union's president.

"If there ever was a time, just as there was 50 years ago, when working people need the voice in their future that only a strong union can provide, that time is now," he said in his inauguration speech.

The Toronto ceremony underlined that the 61-year-old Williams is the first Canadian ever to head the USW, and the first non-U.S. citizen to lead a major U.S. union.

Williams was appointed acting president of the union in November 1983 upon the death of Lloyd McBride, the union's fourth president. Williams won a bitter election in March 1984 over union Treasurer Frank McKee to finish McBride's term. He was declared president without opposition late last year.

The college-educated Williams, who is recognized as an articulate spokesman for organized labor, breaks the mold of traditional leaders of major manufacturing unions. He rose to the top of his union not from the rank-and-file but from the ranks of union organizers.

Williams came to power at a time when low-priced steel imports and an economic recession were ending the USW's tradition of fatter and fatter contracts.

Active membership in the USW has fallen to about 700,000 workers, half the number of the early 1970s. Fewer than 200,000 of the union's members hold jobs in the shrinking U.S. steel industry. Two years ago the union decided to broaden its organizing efforts outside the steel industry.

Eight months before Williams replaced McBride, the union had signed a national steel contract that reduced wages and benefits for the first time in its history.

More concessions followed when union members settled a 98-day strike early this year against Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp., and union bargainers at six other major steelmakers continue to backpedal in negotiations to replace the 1983 pact, which expires on July 31.

Nonetheless, Williams, who has spent nearly a decade on the international union's staff in Pittsburgh, says the role of organized labor is equally important in tough times and good times.

"Think what would have happened if we didn't have a union," he said. "...Whatever difficulties we face today, unions have kept things from getting much, much worse."

Williams, born in Springfield, Ontario, became a social worker for the YMCA after his family moved to Hamilton in 1938 and he attended college on a YMCA scholarship.

He became involved in a strike against a Hamilton steel maker in 1946, and began his career as a Steelworkers organizer the next year.

"This was people doing real things for themselves," Williams said. "This wasn't do-gooder stuff, charity, handing out alms."

Hartman Bids Farewell

By TONY CARBAJO
Sports Writer

Proclaiming himself "K-State's No. 1 fan," Jack Hartman bid a farewell to 10,748 fans Saturday afternoon in his last regular season appearance in Ahearn Field House.

Hartman, the Wildcats' court boss for the past 16 seasons, has decided to call it quits at the conclusion of this season, principally because of his disgust with the present state of college athletics.

On a day when Hartman wanted to put all that talk behind him and concentrate on his final foe, the Nebraska Cornhuskers, he couldn't quite escape his battle with the National Collegiate Athletic Association. Sitting at the end of the bench in suit and tie was his team's star forward, Norris Coleman.

Coleman was sitting out his first game of this season because the University proclaimed him to be ineligible after a ruling by an NCAA council. Coleman's ruling capped Hartman's longstanding ire with the collegiate athletic governing body.

Even in a day of defeat for his Wildcats, Hartman was himself.

When the question was asked following the game if he thought K-State could have won if Coleman had been playing, Hartman told the press that that was a moot point, and the question had no validity to it. He could have used that question to clear his mind on the subject and lambaste the NCAA decision, but instead he chose his words carefully and without discord.

"I'm disappointed and I'm disgusted," Hartman said. "We didn't do anything wrong and the school didn't do anything wrong. I feel very, very comfortable about that. Because of that we feel badly about it."

Before the game, Hartman was presented with a plaque honoring "Jack Hartman Day" at K-State and also in the state of Kansas by proclamation of Gov. John Carlin. He was given a banner that read "Thanks Jack" that was signed by students and game attendants. His wife, Pat, was also presented with a painted portrait of herself at halftime of the game.

The gifts didn't stop there. Hartman was also given the usage of a golf cart at Manhattan Country Club and was furnished with a golf bag.

"You really appreciate it — it is touching," Hartman said of the pregame ceremonies honoring his last game. "You are really grateful people will respond like that — it is tremendous."

"But, it is a little bit of a stress. I don't want to sound like I am not appreciative, but I would have saved that announcement (resignation) for the end of the season if I would have known this (presents and ovations) was going to happen everywhere we went."

Hartman said he would remember the effort his players made in his last game. He also said that the ovations were "tremendous."

Hartman was asked what he would do with all the golf equipment he has received this season at various stops.

"I got some good deals, boys," Hartman quipped about the extra golf clubs and bags he has received. "And in spite of what people around the league think, I am not a bad putter."

Loss of Coleman proves too much as 'Huskers down K-State, 64-60

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

Losing your leading scorer and rebounder two days before a game is bound to put a wrench into the plans of any coach.

Still, K-State Coach Jack Hartman said he believed his team had a chance to win in Saturday afternoon's 64-60 loss to Nebraska at Ahearn Field House, even without star forward Norris Coleman.

Coleman was declared ineligible Thursday because he didn't have a high enough grade point average in high school to qualify for financial aid under NCAA rules.

"There's always hope. You've got to think positive," Hartman, who was coaching his last regular-season game at Ahearn, said. "You've always got to see some way that you can win, recognizing realistically that offensively, we were hurting."

"We've been hurting offensively all year long. We've had to rely so much on Coleman and (Joe) Wright. We lose Coleman, we're pretty naked."

Wright, who was under extra pressure to produce offensively in Coleman's absence, did so, scoring 26 points on 11 of 20 shooting.

"You've got to be understanding if Joe hurries one up every now and then — and that's what he did on occasion," Hartman said. "He's got a lot of responsibility to score for us."

"I didn't know for sure how they would guard us," Wright said. "I thought they might run a box and one. Then when they didn't, I just went on and played my game."

Ben Mitchell, who has been playing his best basketball of the season in recent games, picked up his offensive production, scoring 20 points.

"Ben has played very well recently," Hartman said. "I thought he had a great, great game — probably his best of the year. Nine for 12 (field goal shooting), two for two from the line — that's a great ball game."

"I felt I had to step up," Mitchell said. "I didn't press myself and take a lot of bad shots just because we need more scoring punch."

"I felt like I had to be an integral part of the offense and I tried to be."

It wasn't just Coleman's scoring that was missed, either. In addition to being the Big Eight Conference's leading scorer at 21.8 points per game, he was second in conference rebounding at eight per game.

In the end, it may have been Nebraska's decisive edge on the boards that beat the Wildcats. The Cornhuskers outrebounded K-State, 37-23 overall and led 18-7 in offensive rebounds.

"And you have to credit Nebraska," Mitchell said. "They got every loose ball and long rebound and then set it up and scored."

Percy Eddie picked up some of the slack for the Wildcats with 10 rebounds, including four on the offensive boards. Mitchell was next with five.

In addition to playing without Coleman, K-State was missing starting center Ron Meyer as well. Meyer, who injured his knee in the loss at Missouri Wednesday, underwent exploratory arthroscopic surgery Saturday.

Realizing that he was playing shorthanded, Hartman had words of praise for his team.

"Like I always tell them, if they play hard and give good effort, they're not going to get any dissatisfaction out of me," he said. "I thought they tried. They really played hard. We were a little short of firepower, obviously."

For now, K-State is hoping it can recover as well after the loss of Coleman as Nebraska did after losing star center Dave Hoppen to a knee injury.

In the Huskers' first game without Hoppen, Nebraska played perhaps its worst game of the season, losing at Lincoln to K-State, 64-54. Since that game, however, Nebraska has won five of seven Big Eight games, including wins over second-place Oklahoma and fourth-place Missouri.

"It's a big distraction with any team (to lose a top player)," Wright said. "Nebraska started out their first game without Hoppen and we beat them. In our first game without our main player (Coleman), we lost."

"It's going to take some adjustment. Nebraska went out and won five or six without him (Hoppen). We can do the same thing."

With the loss, K-State falls to 16-13 overall and concludes the Big Eight regular season

Hot shooting leads Lady Cats to 101-63 rout of Nebraska

By DARAN NEUSCHAFER
Sports Writer

The K-State women's basketball team accomplished something Saturday that had only been accomplished ten other times by the Lady Cats in the history of the program. The team scored over 100 points in a victory over the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

In what was probably the Lady Cats' best effort of the year, K-State defeated Nebraska 101-63 in each team's last regular season game.

K-State's effort saw six Lady Cats score 14 or more points, as the team shot 55 percent from the field, including 65 percent in the first half. K-State also dominated the boards, as they gathered 48 rebounds to Nebraska's 29.

Lady Cat coach Matilda Mossman felt her team was ready to play the game but said she never expected the kind of output she received.

"Any time you score 101 points, you have to be happy with the way the team plays," Mossman said. "I thought we were well prepared, but you never expect to score that many points."

The victory gave K-State a sixth-place finish in the final Big Eight Conference standings and matches them up against the University of Kansas in the first round of the Big Eight Post-Season Tournament.

K-State will travel to Lawrence on Tuesday night for that match-up, with the winner advancing to the semifinals to be played in Kansas City on Thursday night at Kemper Arena.

On Saturday, it appeared the Lady Cats were ready for the tournament, as they shut down Nebraska. K-State, who jumped to an early 9-0 lead, never trailed and led by as many as 42 points, 95-53, with 3:55 remaining.

K-State guard Cindy Durham, who scored the basket that put the Lady Cats over the century mark with a 15-foot jumper from the wing, felt if the team kept up its current pace, they could play with anyone.

"We have been working so well together lately," Durham said. "And if we play like we did today, nobody will beat us."

Nebraska Coach Kelly Hill, obviously disappointed with her team's effort, said she felt this was the wrong time of the season to have a game like this.

"This is pretty devastating, especially at this time of year — heading into the tournament and everything," Hill said. "K-State was ready to play and we weren't. That is the whole thing."

"I've said all along, and I still think that K-State has the best talent of anybody in the conference, position by position."

K-State took advantage of a little bit of an inside size advantage in the first half and built a commanding 49-26 halftime lead. Nebraska, meanwhile, was forced to do most of its scoring from the perimeter.

In the second half, Nebraska applied more pressure on the ball with a full-court press, but K-State was able to get its transition game going — especially late in the game, when the Lady Cats ran off 14 unanswered points to put the Cornhuskers away for good.

Hill stated nothing that the Cornhuskers attempted seemed to work.

"We threw everything at them, and they just kept playing well. We pressed, we even zoned, and nothing seemed to do any good," Hill said.

"K-State just played a real good game."

Carlisa Thomas led a balanced K-State scoring attack with 17 points. Thomas also pulled down 11 rebounds, which moved her into fifth place on the all-time rebound list.

Amanda Holley and Cindy Durham, playing in the last home game of their careers, each scored 16 points. Holley also grabbed 10 rebounds.

Junior guard Theza Fitzpatrick came off the bench to add 16 points, a new career high. Fitzpatrick's former career best was also against Nebraska, when she scored 15 points in the two teams' previous meeting this year in Lincoln, Neb.

Sue Leidig and Susan Green chipped in 15 and 14 points respectively in the win, which was the highest point output and largest margin of victory for the Lady Cats this season.

The Cornhuskers were led by Angie Miller, who scored 19 points.

Baseball team runs current streak to 7 with weekend wins

By DOUG SCHEIBE
Sports Writer

The K-State baseball team is showing signs of becoming a bonafide winner.

Although they played less than Big Eight Conference-caliber competition Saturday and Sunday, the Wildcats beat their opposition convincingly. K-State scored 58 runs in four weekend victories, running its current winning streak to seven games.

"Wins are wins," K-State Coach Gary Vaught said. "It's hard to push an athlete when you're that far ahead. These are the kinds of games where everybody gets to play. They're good to get your swings in."

After beating Friends University of Wichita, 8-5, in the first game Saturday, K-State exploded with 18 runs in the first inning of the second game.

"I was upset with them after the first game Saturday because I didn't think they were giving it everything," Vaught said. "And then they come out with the big inning in the second game."

The "big inning" included 18 runs on eight hits and three Friends errors. Three Friends pitchers shared duties in the first inning, combining to allow eight walks.

The inning started ominously for Friends when Wildcat designated hitter Otto Kaifes knocked a one-out, two-run home run off the lights in left field. Of the eight hits in the inning, six were for extra bases.

K-State went on to win the game 28-3, falling one run short of a K-State record for most runs in a game. The record of 29 has stood since 1917, when K-State scored 29 runs against Benedictine College in Atchison.

The game was called after seven innings due to a National Collegiate Athletic Association rule that stops a game if there is a lead of 10 or more after seven innings.

Four K-State players had three RBIs in the second game, and centerfielder Tom Parsons had four RBIs. Parsons went 3-for-4 with two doubles and a triple.

"This weekend was the first time at K-State that I really enjoyed coming out and playing in front of a home crowd," Vaught said.

"(In the first game) There was a group of about five guys sitting right behind the screen that may have won a game for us. They got on the (Friends) pitcher and got him going crazy. He gave up five runs in a couple of innings," Vaught said. "They were great."

The first game on Saturday lasted the full nine innings as Paul Iseman got the win in relief. Iseman struck out nine and allowed one hit in five and two thirds innings of work.

Sunday, the 'Cats beat Northwestern Oklahoma of Alba, Okla., 13-3 and 9-2 in two seven inning games.

Scott Lichlyter got the win in the first game, and Robbie Guinn got the win in the second. Guinn's streak of 11 innings without allowing an earned run ended in the fifth inning of the second game when David Frietas knocked in Jeff Allen for the Rangers.

Third baseman Eric Haines went 2-for-3 in the second game, and finished the weekend with five runs scored and four RBIs in the two games he played.

K-State starts an 18-game road trip Wednesday when they travel to play Memphis State. From there they go to Mississippi, Mississippi State, Northeast Louisiana, Louisiana Tech, New Orleans, Louisiana and Louisiana State.

"If we can come back with 15 or 16 wins, we'll be nationally ranked," Vaught said. "People may laugh at us now, but we'll see after this road trip."

"We'll be playing teams that have been beating other nationally ranked teams on this road trip," Haines said. "It will be a tough road trip, but we'll win all the games we can."

Vaught said continued fan support would be a key to future Wildcat successes.

"If we keep winning and doing our part, I hope we can keep getting the fans out here. I want to see the students out here enjoying themselves. We'll rise to the occasion," Vaught said.

Women second in conference indoor

Jacque Struckhoff won both the two-mile and three-mile runs to lead the K-State women's track and field team to second place at the Big Eight Conference Indoor Track and Field Championships Friday and Saturday at Lincoln, Neb.

The men's team placed sixth and was led by Kenny Harrison, who won both the long jump and triple jump.

Nebraska won the women's meet while Iowa State took the men's team title.

Struckhoff was edged for the meet women's Most Valuable Performer award by Angela Thacker of Nebraska, who won the 60-yard dash, 300-yard dash and was a part of the Cornhuskers' winning mile relay team.

"It would have been nice (to win the MVP), but Thacker is a great athlete," Struckhoff said. "That's not the kind of thing I'm going to worry about."

Struckhoff's winning times were a national qualifying and Big Eight record mark of 9:45.85 in the two mile and 15:40.80 in the three mile.

"What can I say about Jacque? God had the thought of making a young lady and broke the mold after making Jacque," K-State Coach Steve Miller said.

Harrison was one of the meet's top competitors, winning with national qualifying leaps of 25-10 1/4 in the long jump and 54-0 in the triple jump.

"I feel really happy, being fortunate enough to win both," Harrison said. "I knew it would be tough coming in because there are some good jumpers in this conference."

Also placing high for the K-State men were Bryan Carroll, second in the three-mile run (13:35.03) and fifth in the two mile (8:56.00); Brad Speer, fourth in the high jump (6-9 1/2); Mike Rogers, fifth in the mile run (4:12.86); and Aaron Roberson, fifth in the 60-yard hurdles.

Other first-place finishers for the Wildcat women were Anne Stadler in the mile run (4:46.95) and Michelle Maxey in the 600-yard run with a national qualifying time (1:19.70).

Remaining women's high placers include Stadler, second with a national qualifying time in the 1,000-yard run (2:30.79); Rita Graves, second in the high jump with a national qualifying leap (5-11 1/4); Anita Isom, second in the 60-yard dash (6.96) and fourth in the 300-yard dash (35.87); Karen Brown, fifth in the 300-yard dash (35.97); and Chris Vanatta, third in both the two mile (10:18.89) and three mile (16:11.56).

Pairings for tourney to be decided off court

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Athletes have played all but one of the Big Eight Conference's regular season games. Now middle-aged men in business suits will decide who won a few of the games.

Only tonight's game between Oklahoma State and Oklahoma remains.

A few things, however, are certain, most notably that Kansas has unseated Oklahoma as the regular-season champion with a 13-1 mark.

The second-ranked Jayhawks will be the No. 1 seed in the post-season Big Eight tourney beginning Friday in Kansas City. Iowa State, 9-5 in the conference season, is the No. 2 seed.

But such matters as KU's opponent in the first round and whether Colorado becomes the only team ever to go 0-14 in the conference season must await the men in coats and ties.

Whether or not K-State has to forfeit each of its four conference victories because of the use of ineligible player Norris Coleman will determine pairings in the conference tournament.

KU seniors Ron Kellogg, Calvin Thompson and Greg Dreiling arrived at Allen Fieldhouse for their final home game Saturday wearing tuxedos because, they said, they "wanted to go out in style." And go out in style they did, winning 90-70.

Kellogg had 20 points and Danny Manning had 19 for KU, 28-3 overall. Jeff Grayer, playing with four fouls much of the second half, hit 26 points

Duke wins ACC title by beating Tar Heels

By The Associated Press

Duke held its emotions — and third-ranked North Carolina — in check Sunday and virtually clinched a fistful of Number Ones Sunday with an 82-74 victory over the Tar Heels.

The Blue Devils finished alone in first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference for the first time in 20 years, secured the No. 1 seed in the ACC tournament and all but locked up first place in the final regular-season Associated Press college basketball poll.

Brad Daugherty led North Carolina with 24 points and 16 rebounds. Starting guard Steve Hale, who scored 28 points in the Tar Heels' victory over Duke earlier this season, missed his third straight game due to a collapsed lung. And Warren Martin, their top shot blocker, was out with a foot injury.

at 4-10, finishing in seventh place.

Pending a ruling on whether the Wildcats will have to forfeit each of its wins in games Coleman participated in, K-State will meet Iowa State in the first round of the Big Eight Post-Season Tournament Friday at Kemper Arena in Kansas City. In the event the games are forfeited, the Wildcats will meet conference champion Kansas.

for Iowa State, 18-9.

Oklahoma came from behind Saturday to whip No. 18 North Carolina State at home, 72-69.

Oklahoma fell behind by as many as 11 points early against the Wolfpack, but won it on Tim McCalister's jump with 34 seconds to play.

Jeff Strong scored 28 points to lead Missouri past Colorado, 94-86.

Derrick Chievous added 22 points and Dan Bingenheimer 21 for the Tigers, who finished the regular season 21-12 overall and 8-6 in the conference. It was Colorado's 16th straight loss, making the Buffs, pending possible K-State forfeits, 8-19 and 0-14.

decided on the spur of the moment to attend the movie, leading police to believe the assassin must have been keeping the prime minister under surveillance.

"Everything indicates that the perpetrator shadowed the (Palme) to the movie theater, all the way from their home," Holmer said.

The police commissioner said the Palme traveled to the cinema by subway. He asked anyone who may have seen a man trailing the couple to come forward.

Holmer said the two lead bullets police found did not match any of the 500 comparison bullets investigators keep on file.

Remarking on the first bullet, before the second was found, he said, "What makes this bullet rare is the combination of metals and the proportion between the metals."

He said it was copper-coated, and that a brass coating was more common.

Police Superintendent Rolf Fredriksson said police had taken three men into custody for questioning by Sunday morning, but had released all three as having nothing to do with the shooting.

An anonymous caller to a news agency in London claimed Saturday that the assassination was carried out by a leftist West German terrorist group, the Holger Meins Commando. Both Swedish and West German officials were evaluating the claim.

UPC lecture to cover job hunting tactics

By The Collegian Staff

Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas Committee is sponsoring "Guerilla Tactics in the Job Market" at 8 tonight in the Union Forum Hall.

Tom Jackson, founder of the Career Development Team Inc. and the Employment Training Corporation of New York, will deliver the lecture, which will cover the procedures of employment searching.

Jackson has emerged as one of the nation's leading authorities and commentators on the nature and quality of people's worklives. In his work on college campuses and in industry, he is developing a revolutionary approach which involves how people deal with their careers.

Jackson's method of dealing with the dynamics of finding jobs is also described in his four books: "Guerilla Tactics in the Job Market;" "The Hidden Job Market;" "The Perfect Resume;" and "Get the Job You Want in 28 Days."

A news conference will precede the lecture beginning at 6:30 p.m. in the Conference Room of the Union, where Jackson will discuss the topic of his lecture and some of his past achievements.

Bases

A key problem in moving the bases to Guam and Tinian would be the loss of a large, highly skilled work force. Relocation also would put American forces farther away from the Indian Ocean and western Pacific.

About 17,000 Filipinos work at Clark and 28,000 are employed at Subic. Many of the local workers at the naval base are third generation and they are able to provide almost any repairs that can be done at a U.S. yard, meaning Navy ships don't have to be sent all the way back to the United States for work.

At Guam, the United States maintains Andersen Air Force Base, which dates back to World War II. Some of the missions from Clark could be shifted there, but the island is 1,500 miles east of the Philippines and major and costly construction would be needed before the base could be the center of large operations, the sources said.

On Tinian, about 120 miles from Guam, the United States leases almost 20,000 acres, but development there would also require costly construction. The island was the launching point of the B-29 raids that dropped atomic bombs on Japan in August 1945.

While Aquino has refused to say flatly that she will permit the U.S. bases to remain, American officials are hopeful an agreement can be worked out.

One of those is Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the ranking Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee and one of Capitol Hill's most respected defense experts.

"I am now cautiously optimistic about the future of those bases," he said late last week. "We are in a lot better position than we were before Mrs. Aquino took over."

However, he added that "alternatives are certainly something we need to look closely at."

reportedly one of the semifinalists, withdrew his name from consideration.

The three to five finalists will be drawn from the remaining eight candidates. They are: John Campbell, dean of the College of Agriculture at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana; Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering at K-State; Robert Rutherford, president of the University of Texas at Dallas; Greg O'Brien, provost at the University of South Florida in Tampa; Charles Sidman, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Florida in Gainesville; John La Tourette, provost and vice president for academic affairs at Northern Illinois University in DeKalb; Jon Wefald, chancellor of the Minnesota seven-school state university system; and William Mobley, dean of the College of Business Administration at Texas A&M University at College Station.

The committee is composed of three students, three faculty, six alumni, and one representative from the regents, University administration and dean's council.

increases in gasoline taxes with funds funneled to the state's general funds and the removal of tax exemptions on interstate, long-distance telephone calls, Werts said.

On the local level, he said school districts have the option of imposing income taxes, but not for the generation of new monies. That option is to replace lost funding.

Werts said another problem in state financing is the decreasing levels of oil severance tax income, due to falling petroleum prices.

In support of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, Werts said "we must get on top of this deficit" to be competitive in world trade markets.

He said questions which must now be asked are "do we want to continue these (social services) programs and how do we want to fund them?"

The senator said the Great Society social service programs, originated in the mid-60s, led to a policy of "We are going to do a lot more for the people."

"But we cannot continue to do everything for everybody," he said. "We must set our priorities."

Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, said, "I'll react to the cuts when I see it."

He said although legislators need to "start making priority decisions...it's premature and (a) wasteful effort to guess the impacts."

Knopp said both he and the people of Kansas are "ready to meet that challenge," adding he usually saw more sense coming out of state tax funds sent to Topeka than federal tax revenues sent to Washington, D.C.

Knopp said it is difficult for state legislators to respond to the federal cuts after budgets are prepared a year ahead of the legislative season.

Marcos' party backs Aquino

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Leaders of Ferdinand E. Marcos' political party pledged on Monday to cooperate with Corazon Aquino and to have her presidency confirmed by the National Assembly, in which they held two-thirds of the seats.

The nation's central bank said it was taking legal action to recover documents and money Marcos took with him last Wednesday when he fled the country he had ruled for 20 years.

Demonstrations were reported in two Manila suburbs and a province north of the capital against Aquino's decision to replace some local officials before their terms expire.

In another development, guerrillas of the communist New People's Army killed 15 policemen and four civilians in an ambush in the Bicol region of southern Luzon Island, the Philippine Constabulary said. At least 23 people have been killed in rebel attacks that began at the weekend.

After a daylong caucus of the Marcos party, the New Society Movement, its leaders said they recognized the legitimacy of Aquino's government and were ready to have the National Assembly confirm "this fact that cannot be denied."

The National Assembly proclamation that Marcos had defeated Aquino in the Feb. 7 presidential election led to a military rebellion and civil uprising that forced the 68-year-old former president to flee. Charges of fraud came from independent observers, the nation's Roman Catholic bishops and foreign governments, including that of the United States.

Jose Rono, secretary-general of the party, said: "We will extend all kinds of cooperation to have this government operate under the constitution and the laws without preempting (Aquino's) right and authority as president. We are not going to set any conditions or preconditions."

Blas Ople, who was labor minister under Marcos, said: "If Mrs. Aquino seeks constitutional legitimacy, then she's entitled to that. We... genuinely welcome that."

The caucus also drafted a resolution asking Aquino to stop dismissing pro-Marcos mayors and provincial governors whose terms expire June 30.

She and Local Government Minister Aquilino Pimentel have been criticized, even by some supporters, for canceling local elections scheduled for May and replacing incumbent officials before their terms expire.

Jose Fernandez, director of the central bank, said government lawyers were applying in Hawaii for a court order stopping further movement of a plane load of possessions Marcos took along when the U.S. Air Force flew his entourage to Hawaii.

Fernandez did not mention Marcos by name, but said he had orders to "recover assets that have been delivered (to Hawaii) which we consider to be in clear violation of existing central bank regulations."

Fernandez did not say what Marcos took with him besides money, but news reports from Washington have quoted U.S. officials as saying the cargo included boxes of documents believed to contain information about his business dealings. They also were quoted as saying Marcos

Reagan calls for aid to Nicaraguan rebels

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan called on Congress Monday to support $100 million in assistance to anti-communist rebels in Nicaragua, saying those who resist will be held "fully accountable by history."

Reagan said that if the Sandinista government achieves final victory, it would "open up the possibility of Soviet military bases on America's doorstep, threaten the security of the Panama Canal and inaugurate a vast migration march to the United States by hundreds of thousands of refugees."

The president issued his statement in the Cabinet Room as he was flanked by the top leadership of the resistance forces, known as the Contras, and by more than two dozen U.S. business supporters of the rebel cause.

Reagan spoke a few hours after Secretary of State George P. Shultz outlined the stakes in Nicaragua in similar terms during a speech to the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

If the United States fails to back the Contras, "our worry will then be a Soviet and Cuban base on the mainland of Latin America, a regime whose consolidated power will allow it to spread subversion

Irish strike; riot results in injuries

By The Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Protestant militants hurled gasoline bombs and stones in a rampage Monday through central Belfast, and violent protests hit Londonderry and other towns during a general strike to demonstrate opposition to the Anglo-Irish accord.

At least 10 people were injured, eight vehicles were set on fire, and a clothing factory went up in flames in the most violent and widespread protest against the Nov. 15 accord that gives the Catholic Irish Republic a role in running the province.

In Londonderry, Protestant and Roman Catholic youths battled and police fired plastic bullets when one of its vans was attacked.

The Protestants left under police escort to protect them from a mob of pickets.

A crowd of more than 5,000 protesters gathered at City Hall, and militants in the crowd broke away to start burning cars and breaking windows in the main business district.

The strike kept an estimated 85 percent of the work force away from Northern Ireland's three biggest employers. Some supported the Palme's assassination remains mystery

By The Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — The acting prime minister said Monday he will tolerate bodyguards until Olof Palme's murder is solved, but called the ability of leaders to go unguarded an essential element of Sweden's "open, democratic society."

Prime Minister Palme, 59, and his wife Lisbet were strolling without guards in downtown Stockholm when a man shot him Friday night. Palme had dismissed the security men earlier in the day.

Police were reported to be making little progress in solving the murder. The Foreign Ministry confirmed that a claim was made that the Red Army Faction, a West German terrorist group, was responsible, but West German officials discounted it.

Ingvar Carlsson, who had been deputy premier and now is acting prime minister, was chosen unanimously as new leader of Palme's party, the Social Democrats. Palme had held the post since 1969.

He pledged to continue his predecessor's policies and keep neutral Sweden active in international affairs.

"It has been the Swedish attitude that it is not only up to the superpowers to influence (international events)," Carlsson told reporters.

"Olof Palme's work will not disappear with Olof Palme. We cannot go back to the isolated way of life we once led."

Carlsson said he would accept being surrounded by bodyguards, but reluctantly, "until this murder is cleared up." He said he preferred privacy, as Palme had.

The ability of leaders to move about unguarded, he said, is a significant part of "an open, democratic society, which is such an important part of Swedish society."

Palme and his wife had gone to a movie premiere and were walking home when he was shot. Mrs. Palme, 55, was grazed by a bullet but not seriously hurt.

The national news agency TT said Police Inspector Jan Winner reported little progress in the case, and quoted him as saying: "We stand about where we were at the beginning."

Foreign Ministry spokesman Lars

Loennback said a person who telephoned the Swedish Embassy in Bonn, capital of West Germany, a few hours after the shooting claimed responsibility on behalf of the Red Army Faction. He said the ministry and Stockholm police were informed of the call later Saturday.

West Germany's chief government spokesman, Friedhelm Ost, said security officials in Bonn had no indication of involvement by West German terrorists, but were willing to help with the investigation if asked.

The radical-leftist Red Army Faction, formerly known as the Baader-Meinhof Gang, has carried out assassinations, bomb attacks and robberies for nearly 15 years, but operates almost exclusively within West Germany.

Astronauts say crew not told about boosters

By The Associated Press

SPACE CENTER, Houston — NASA's astronauts were not informed that engineers had been concerned for more than two years about the safety of the space shuttles' solid-fuel rocket boosters, four veteran shuttle commanders said Monday.

Astronaut Henry Hartsfield, one of four astronauts who broke a month-long silence to talk to reporters, said he learned about a potential hazard involving gaskets that seal joints on the boosters only after the shuttle Challenger exploded Jan. 28.

"I was angry about it. Still am," he said. Challenger blew up 73 seconds after launch and after flame was seen shooting from the side of one of the two boosters.

Hartsfield, Vance Brand, Gordon Fullerton and Joe Engle said they were never made aware of all the many parts of the shuttle that are called "criticality 1," parts whose failure would mean a catastrophic loss.

The space agency allowed the four astronauts to be interviewed at Johnson Space Center.

Fullerton said the astronauts did not have time to examine each system aboard the complex shuttles and "there's an implied trust (in the engineers) in flying on the shuttle."

All four said astronaut morale was high and that they would fly again once the cause of Challenger's loss is found and fixed. "I'd like to be the first guy to take it up again," Brand said.

None of the four would agree that there was a flaw in NASA's launch decision process, as has been charged by the presidential commission investigating Challenger's explosion.

Hartsfield said he felt such a decision was premature, but that he was concerned about reports that critical engineering questions about the boosters never reached the top levels of NASA.

"If it did happen that way, I am troubled," he said.

Brand said he believes the astronaut corps "should have been advised" about the engineers' concerns about the boosters.

"Normally we are informed about such safety issues," he said. "It was an oversight that none of us know about this."

Brand said that if he had heard of such a safety issue, he would have

Judge allows FmHA to foreclose on loans

By The Associated Press

BISMARCK, N.D. — A federal judge Monday refused to block the Farmers Home Administration from resuming foreclosure procedures, meaning the federal agency could begin foreclosures for the first time since the judge ordered new rules in 1984.

The agency, a lender of last resort for farmers, began sending notices to some 65,000 borrowers nationwide in February after having revamped its repayment and foreclosure rules to conform with U.S. District Judge Bruce Van Sickle's earlier order.

The government argued that the FmHA would lose more than $1 billion if it is prevented from taking action on delinquent accounts for another year.

Sarah Vogel, who represented the farmers before becoming an assistant North Dakota attorney general, said the ruling means the agency's two-year moratorium on foreclosures is over. Vogel remains involved in the case through the attorney general's office, one of seven farm state attorney general's offices to argue on behalf of the farmers.

Late last year, the FmHA published the new rules that resulted from Van Sickle's 1984 ruling and announced that it was preparing to resume taking action against delinquent borrowers.

Stern warnings were being sent to those borrowers who had not made a payment in at least three years, notifying them that they were in danger of foreclosure and outlining steps they could take to avoid that.

Attorneys for the farmers argued that vagueness in parts of the new rules would give the agency the power to "starve out" some borrowers by refusing to return to them money for living and operating expenses.

FmHA borrowers are required to hand over to the agency the money they get from the sale of crops. The sales money serves as the agency's security for the loan, and the agency returns some of that money for expenses.

Van Sickle's ruling Monday forbids the agency from refusing to release money to farmers without first granting a hearing. In addition, the judge ordered the FmHA to allow farmers to appeal decisions when they dispute the amount of money to be released.

The attorneys general of North Dakota, Minnesota, Texas, Iowa, Illinois, Kansas and Oklahoma had argued on behalf of the farmers at a hearing last month.

11 die in Chilean embassy fire

CARACAS, Venezuela — Two Chilean embassy employees jumped 14 floors to their deaths, and nine other people were killed when fire broke out Monday in an office building in downtown Caracas, according to state television.

"Thank God we're alive," said Mariela Luque, a receptionist who was on the 10th floor of the 14-story building when the fire broke out at 4 p.m. She told Venezolana de Television (VTV) there was first a momentary power outage, and then someone began running through the hall yelling "Get out, get out!"

Officials said the fire was under control, but the number of dead and injured remained uncertain.

VTV said 11 people had died. An unidentified police official interviewed by VTV said at least eight of the victims died from smoke inhalation.

Chile's ambassador, Carlos de Costa Nora, was still inside the building which houses the Chilean embassy, when the fire broke out, according to the Chilean consul general, Aquiles Gallardo.

Dole invites Gorbachev to Kansas

WASHINGTON — Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole threw his support on Monday behind an invitation by Garden City, Kan., to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to visit the western Kansas community.

A visit to Garden City, Dole said, would provide Gorbachev an "unparalleled opportunity to experience many aspects of life in our American towns and cities."

The Kansas Republican asked Soviet Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin in a letter to convey his "wholehearted support" to Gorbachev for the invitation which Garden City officials extended last month.

Garden City Mayor Duane W. Hays sent a letter to Gorbachev in mid-February inviting the Soviet leader to visit the community.

Girl Scouts to sell two area camps

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — The Santa Fe Trail Council of the Girl Scouts will sell two of its three Kansas camps because fewer girls are willing to devote time for weekend retreats and summer camps.

The council, which has 5,000 to 6,000 members in a seven-county area, will close the 260-acre Camp Kivawood near Ottawa and the five-acre Camp Tzigane in Lansing. Camp Tongawood at Tonganoxie will remain open.

"The girls still might want to go camping, but they have competing interests, like music, athletics and boys," said Dianne Schultz-Gard, executive director of the council based in Kansas City, Kan.

The decision to close the camps was based on a three-year study by the council's board of directors. The board decided the money could be better spent on a wider range of programs.

Supreme Court rejects Craft's case

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court rejected Monday the appeal of Christine Craft, the television newscaster who, despite two jury verdicts in her favor, lost a legal struggle against her former employer over alleged sex bias and fraud.

Craft, 41, contended she was demoted from her job as a news anchorwoman for station KMBC-TV in Kansas City after being told she was "too old, too unattractive and not deferential enough to men."

Now a television news anchorwoman in Sacramento, Calif., Craft said she was disappointed by the Supreme Court's action. But, she said, "my battle has done a lot" for women reporters in the workplace, "even if only news directors and editors are more cautious in their wording."

Naval surgeon gets prison sentence

WASHINGTON — Heart surgeon Donal M. Billig, convicted of involuntary manslaughter and homicide in the deaths of three patients at Bethesda Naval Hospital, was sentenced Monday to four years in prison and ordered dismissed from the service.

The court-martial jury of nine naval officers also ordered Billig, a Navy commander who served as chief of heart surgery at Bethesda, to forfeit all future pay and allowances.

The jury foreman, Rear Adm. Harry S. Quast, read the sentence as Billig stood and showed no emotion. The jury had deliberated 90 minutes and could have returned a sentence of up to 11½ years.

Defense attorneys said they would ask for a delay in imposing the prison sentence, a request that under military law goes to the naval command that convened the court-martial.

Billig, 55, was taken into custody by Naval Investigative Service personnel. Under military law, he would be eligible for parole after serving one-third of his sentence.

His conviction is subject to automatic review by the Navy-Marine Corps Court of Military Review, and may be appealed to the Court of Military Appeals and ultimately the U.S. Supreme Court.

Billig, nearly sightless in one eye, was found guilty last Thursday of causing the deaths through gross surgical errors during operations in 1983 and 1984.

Drugs found to help stop strokes

BOSTON — The controversial practice of using drugs to treat mild and moderate high blood pressure saves lives and is especially effective for preventing strokes, a new analysis concludes.

An estimated 58 million Americans have high blood pressure — what doctors call hypertension — and the condition is a major underlying cause of heart disease, strokes and kidney failure. However, doctors disagree over how high blood pressure must be before it should be lowered with drugs.

The new report suggests that treating even relatively mild high blood pressure of between 90 and 114 diastolic, which is the second of a pair of numbers given for blood pressure readings, significantly reduces the risk of death.

The results were compiled by Dr. Charles H. Hennekens and colleagues at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston and Oxford University and were submitted for presentation Monday at a meeting in San Francisco sponsored by the American Heart Association.

Murder, violent crime rates jump

TOPEKA — The incidence of violent crime increased 6.6 percent in Kansas between 1984 and 1985, with the murder rate jumping 35 percent, the Kansas Bureau of Investigation reported Monday.

While the number of so-called property crimes — burglary, larceny and automobile theft — remained about the same between the two years, the number of murders, rapes, robberies and aggravated assaults rose by 540 statewide, or 6.6 percent, the annual report showed.

The KBI compiles the figures based on reports from some 260 local law enforcement agencies throughout the state.

The number of murders in the state rose from 89 in 1984 to 120 in 1985, an increase of 35 percent.

Rapes went up 7.8 percent, from 665 to 717; robberies increased 10.5 percent, from 1,742 to 1,924, and aggravated assaults rose 4.9 percent, from 5,642 to 5,917, between the two years.

On the property crime side, burglaries increased 4.8 percent, from 25,505 to 26,730, and motor vehicle thefts went up 4.8 percent, from 6,032 to 6,271, but larcenies declined 1.2 percent, from 66,969 to 66,153. Over-all, property crimes dropped .7 of 1 percent.

East Manhattan site for store relocations passes board review

By STEPHANIE HAUGHTON
Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board approved the Final Subdivision Plat of the Town East Subdivision at its meeting Monday night.

The subdivision, located north of U.S. Highway 24 and east of Food-4-Less, is to be the site of a facility to contain several businesses relocating for downtown mall construction.

In other action, zoning variances for Hunter's Island were approved, after the board was informed that one of the projects was done, and the second nearly completed.

County Planner Monty Wedel told the board a request for zoning variances on Hunter's Island was "somewhat after the fact."

He said two projects prompting the request — a fire station and a public service building — were either completed or nearly finished. The board approved the request unanimously.

Another public hearing was held concerning adding group day care centers as acceptable businesses in C-1, General Business Districts. The center's proposed location is in the Nautilus Towers, 11th and Moro streets in Aggieville.

One concern of board members involved traffic problems caused by the loading and unloading of children attending the center. After deliberations, the board approved sending a conditional use recommendation to the Board of Zoning Appeals. A conditional zoning requires each rezoning case be considered individually.

Terry DeWeese, park and recreation director, presented a summary on what his department has done in the past two months on the proposed "Quality of Life" bond issue.

He said the department has held 10 public meetings, using the first four meetings to break down the project and the last six to look over those breakdowns.

DeWeese said the bond has been separated into eight projects at a proposed cost of $3.7 million. He said this estimate is as accurate as possible at the planning stage of the bond.

A rezoning request which would have added 10 residential lots near the Manhattan Municipal Airport was tabled pending development of a master plan.

Survival in job market topic of UPC lecture

By The Collegian Staff

Informing students about finding jobs and career development was the focus of Tom Jackson's lecture Monday night, "Guerilla Tactics in the Job Market," sponsored by the Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas Committee.

Jackson, founder of the Career Development Team Inc. and the Employment Training Corporation of New York, spoke to about 200 people.

His story of how job seeking efforts can succeed included five steps: getting a clear job target; finding potential employers; finding what employers are looking for; putting together information or a demonstration of how employers' needs can be filled; and communicating with the people who do the hiring.

"No one cares about your crummy resume. The resume is essentially corporate junk mail. It is of interest to the person who sent it and of marginal interest to the person who receives it," he said.

"A resume will never get you a job. The best a resume can do is one, it might get you an interview and two, it might stay out of the way, because it might not keep you from getting a job," Jackson said.

Although he doubted the importance of a resume, he said it is a valuable tool for obtaining an interview.

"Even though it won't do magic, you need to have a perfect resume so that it will accelerate the number of interviews you get," he said.

He said the writing style for a resume should include active verbs and not list duties but accomplishments.

Jackson gave two rules for interviewing: whenever possible let the employer name the salary value first and whenever a salary value range is given, verbalize the top range.

Permitting Marcos to retire in U.S. proper

The United States' fowl are coming home to roost. For at least the third time in the last 10 years, the United States is faced with the choice of either accepting or rejecting an overthrown dictator.

In the late 1970s, the country faced two other instances where U.S.-supported right-wing dictators were overthrown by popular uprisings. By offering asylum to Anastasio Somoza and the Shah of Iran, the U.S. government positioned itself in a no-win situation and made it difficult to achieve normal relations with the new governments.

With the transition of power last week in the Philippines, the government must again evaluate the political repercussions and decide whether to allow deposed President Ferdinand Marcos to remain in the United States.

Marcos is currently resting in Hawaii at Hickam Air Force Base and is expected to move into one of his luxurious estates in Makiki Heights near Honolulu.

The movement which brought Corazon Aquino to power in the Philippines was more moderate than those in Nicaragua or Iran, and the United States has moved to cement ties with the new government.

Phillip Habib, U.S. special envoy, on Thursday extended greetings to Aquino from President Reagan and said the revolution, which forced Marcos to flee the republic, had deeply moved U.S. officials and the American people.

Given this tone of conciliation between the United States and the Philippines, it is proper that we grant him permanent residence. Since Marcos' health is in question, he is not likely to embarrass us by using the United States as a political platform to regain the presidency. Though he was a ruler who stood for anything but democracy, as long as Marcos resides quietly in the United States, he is not likely to suffer ill will from the American people, as Somoza and the Shah did.

His presence in the country is not likely to precipitate an event as traumatic as the Iranian hostage crisis since Aquino has elected not to extradite Marcos. Given the current state of affairs, the United States' decision to permit Marcos to stay in Hawaii is proper.

Sunshine law breaks through cloud cover

The recent decision by the Kansas Attorney General's office to require meetings held by committees on campus to abide by the Kansas Open Meetings Act is a step forward in making "government in the sunshine" a reality at K-State.

A complaint was filed after Collegian staff members were denied entrance to a meeting of the Coliseum Program Committee for Dec. 17, 1985. The decision was delivered Feb. 27.

Open meetings are requisite for fair government. One of the traditional roles of the press is to be a watchdog of government, and strive to keep the actions of public officials known. When anyone is denied the right to attend a meeting of public officials, their right to know is abridged.

There are instances when meetings may be closed. Personnel matters related to non-elected personnel, legal consultations, employer-employee negotiations, discussion of trade secrets and confidential financial matters, disciplinary actions and preliminary discussions relating to acquisition of property are exceptions to the Open Meetings Act. These matters may be discussed in "executive session."

The coliseum committee did not claim one of these exceptions as reason for closing the meeting. The committee believes that its "advisory" function made its meetings except from the Act. The Feb. 27 opinion stated the committee is not exempt.

Many K-State agencies meet the test of using public funds in the conduct of business, which would make them subject to the Act. The opinion delivered by the attorney general will make K-State administration more accessible for all.

Contra funds cannot reduce regional stress

President Reagan is beginning a campaign to convince Congress of the need to provide $100 million in military and economic assistance to rebels opposed to the Sandinista government in Nicaragua. During this brief era of Gramm-Rudman fiscal responsibility, the president proposes to spend millions of dollars on a problem that cannot be solved militarily.

The administration is requesting $70 million in direct military assistance for the 6,000 CIA-organized Nicaraguan rebels, known as Contras, and $30 million in humanitarian aid.

U.S. assistance to the Contras now is limited to $27 million. Money and guns will not cure the ills of Nicaragua. Economic support from the United States and attempts to moderate repressive governments — without bloodshed — will go a long way toward normalizing relations in the region.

Nicaragua is not without faults. The Sandinistas have made mistakes and will continue to make them, just as the United States has done during its history. We should not expect the Sandinistas to cooperate with us if we do not cooperate with them.

Bombs just as evil

Editor,
Re: Harry Marsh's letter, "Distortion of facts," in the Feb. 26 Collegian:

Marsh justifies the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki by saying, "a million Americans might have died in an invasion of Japan; many, many millions of Japanese would have chosen to die. The bombs convinced the emperor that his reservations about the war were correct." In short, according to Marsh, the use of the atomic bombs was "the lesser of two evils."

This view, although widely held by Americans, is not supported by the historical record.

We know that more than a month before the bombs were dropped, Emperor Hirohito and top civilian authorities in the Japanese government had firmly decided to negotiate a surrender with the most minimal conditions. Furthermore, President Truman knew of their urgent desire to end the war, which was revealed in intercepted messages sent by high Japanese officials to the Soviet government. The only remaining question for the United States was whether Japan's military leadership would comply.

It is important to note that when Hiroshima was bombed on Aug. 6 the war was in a period of quiet. Japan had been largely destroyed and was incapable of any offensive military action, while U.S. forces were busy preparing for the invasion planned for mid-November. In other words, the Truman administration had over three months to negotiate Japan's surrender, without any cost in American lives.

Although this was the course favored by most of our top commanders, including Eisenhower, Leahy and MacArthur, our civilian authorities did not even make the attempt.

It is impossible to know whether the Japanese military would have rebelled against a negotiated surrender. We simply cannot be sure that the atomic bombs were needed to end the war without an invasion. What we do know is that President Truman, against the advice of some of his most trusted commanders, did not make the slightest effort to find out.

Apparently for reasons other than military necessity, Truman was determined to carry out one of the most gruesome slaughters inflicted on a civilian population in the second world war.

Fluff is appropriate

Editor,
Re: Cynthia Lund's letter, "Too much fluff," in the Feb. 27 Collegian:

I couldn't resist responding to the letter by Cynthia Lund. I wonder if Cynthia has read too many depressing stories of murder, war and politics. Has she become so hardened by all of this that a somewhat engaging (OK, maybe a little corny) story upsets her?

Come on Cynthia, lighten up a little. We all get tired of the "bad" news. Let's see a few success (fluffy, if you prefer) stories now and then.

Editor,
Re: Eric Rhodenbaugh's editorial, "Policy banning pets should be maintained," in the Feb. 28 Collegian:

I am shocked that an editorial board member of the Collegian would write with such a lack of knowledge. His editorial on banning pets in Jardine Terrace showed how little he knew about the proposed pet policy.

I worked very hard with Sue Nelson, freshman in veterinary medicine, on the new policy and I know that it answers all concerns, including those minor items Rhodenbaugh listed, as well as answer problems that currently bother Jardine residents.

We have taken the time to come up with a policy that works for all Jardine residents and the maintenance personnel and does not burden the housing department. We are also willing to work out any problems that may come up at a later date.

I fail to see why so many people are quick to come out against an issue for such small, petty reasons — many times on an issue that does not concern them and they have not studied.

We need to look at the important issues. How do the residents of Jardine feel? Does the new policy answer problems? Is it workable? What do we have to lose by trying the new policy? What do we have to gain by trying the new policy?

I only hope that all people who look at this issue will stop and care enough to research the issue and its positive and negative elements before they speak out. Especially if it does not directly concern them.

Faculty must unite to alter search

"Dartmouth professors blast their businessman-president," is the headline above a recent article in Time magazine.

President David McLaughlin has come under fire by Dartmouth faculty for being "insensitive to and not knowledgeable about education concerns and (the faculty's) proper and necessary role in the governance of the college."

The discontent at Dartmouth parallels faculty discontent at K-State last semester. At K-State complaints were directed toward the Kansas Board of Regents instead of President Duane Acker.

Faculty Senate's unanimous decision last October to oppose the composition of the 15-member Presidential Search Committee showed both strength of conviction and concern for K-State's future. Although attempts to persuade the regents to appoint an equal number of faculty, student and alumni representatives to the committee were unsuccessful, faculty have remained concerned about the private negotiations of the search committee.

When the names of the nine semifinalists were disclosed to the Wichita Eagle-Beacon last month, faculty and students were suddenly given the opportunity to influence the committee and the regents.

The disclosure caused the loss of one of the best candidates, alumnus John Slaughter, chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park and former director of the National Science Foundation in Washington, D.C. The disclosure also may have tainted the search process by allowing for widespread political maneuvering.

Faculty and students aren't the only ones

CATHERINE SAYLER
Collegian
Columnist

who may try to influence the regents in the coming weeks. Anyone may launch a lobbying campaign for a particular candidate now that the candidates' names are public. Such campaigns may already be underway.

The result of such lobbying is that midwestern candidates have an advantage over those from more distant regions since they probably know more Kansans who could successfully influence the committee and the regents. It is doubtful, for example, that candidate Greg O'Brien, provost at the University of South Florida in Tampa, can muster a sizeable group of Floridians who would be effective lobbyists in Kansas.

Because of the potential for political manipulation, disclosure of the candidates' identities demands that the faculty respond in a unified way. In the political arena each must look out for his or her own interests. If the faculty fails to respond, their concerns may be overlooked.

Developing a unified response is a difficult task. Many faculty believe the regents are not concerned with faculty opinion, as evidenced by the board's refusal to allow more faculty on the search committee. Also, it is difficult for each faculty member to gather enough information about the candidates to make an informed choice.

The only way faculty can unite is through Faculty Senate. If Faculty Senate took a secret-ballot vote asking its members to rank the three to five finalists in order of preference, the results could provide a fairly accurate gauge of faculty opinion.

A secret ballot would alleviate the fear some faculty have about individually showing public support for a certain candidate. With Faculty Senate conducting the vote, its legitimacy would not be questioned. The ballot could also provide a place for comments. Depending on how ambitious Faculty Senate is, it might conduct a survey of the faculty, instead of gathering input from senators.

The task would be a monumental undertaking in either case. Faculty Senate would have to wait until the media uncovers the names of the finalists and then it would have to gather supplemental information about each finalist so the voters could make an informed decision.

Since the regents will select the new president March 22, the work would have to be done in a relatively short period of time and might require a special session of Faculty Senate.

Dartmouth's "old-boy" system allows its faculty to oust a president at any time by giving him or her a vote of no confidence. K-State has no such system.

The only system Kansas has is a "good-old-boy" system which allows individuals to influence the regents' decision. Now is the time for the faculty to make their collective voice heard.

Fuel prices continue winter drop

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — As the price of crude oil has tumbled, the average price of gasoline has declined 29 cents a gallon in Kansas since December, the Corporation Commission's fuel allocation analyst said Monday.

The price of gasoline dropped 14 cents a gallon and the price of diesel fuel declined 16 cents in February to reach their lowest levels in Kansas since July of 1979, Lyle Goltz said.

The KCC's monthly survey of 72 retail stations statewide showed leaded regular gasoline averaged 89 cents a gallon, unleaded regular 93 cents and unleaded premium $1.12 at self-service outlets. At full-service pumps, the prices averaged 18 cents a gallon more, Goltz said.

In a trend which he has said he expects to continue, Goltz reported 20 of the stations surveyed now are selling leaded and unleaded regular for the same price. A year ago, there was an average seven cents difference, he said.

"The immediate future for petroleum product retail prices seems to be very favorable for motorists," Goltz said.

Aggieville merchants to ask city for improvement funds

By JEFFREY J. BIELSER
Collegian Reporter

A request for additional funds for business improvement in Aggieville is scheduled for discussion at tonight's Manhattan City Commission meeting.

The Aggieville Merchants Association is asking for $7,000 for its Business Improvement Plan to cover half of what the Riley County Commission couldn't give the association, said Jim Schottler, president of the association.

The association had originally asked the city for $14,000 and the same amount from Riley County. However, he said, the county commissioners couldn't support the improvement plan "in any way, shape or form."

Aggieville "merchants dug a lot deeper into their own pockets for 50 percent of what the county couldn't give (to the association)," Schottler said.

He said Aggieville merchants have already committed themselves for $12,000 so the additional $7,000 is more money they have to commit.

"We're asking the city to invest in Aggieville to get a return on their money through sales taxes and property taxes," Schottler said.

The money is to be used to improve the appearance of Aggieville and to hire an executive director for public relations between Aggieville and downtown, he said.

Signs identifying Aggieville, seasonal banners and the improvement of Triangle Park are among projects planned by the association, he said.

"Aggieville couldn't survive as a shopping center without being more competitive," Schottler said.

Commissioners are to also consider several actions concerning the Manhattan Town Center project.

Among the actions will be the review of bids for demolition work for phase two of the downtown and Southern Arterial projects. The commission will also consider authorizing funds be deposited with Riley County District Court for condemnation awards on property for the downtown redevelopment project.

In a related matter, the commission will consider accepting rights-of-way and easements for the Towne East development project.

The development, located north of U.S. Highway 24 and east of the K-Mart/Food-4-Less Planned Unit Development, will create four commercial lots on 7.2 acres of land.

In other action, two ordinances concerning zoning in Manhattan will receive second readings.

One ordinance will rezone a large section of Manhattan, generally east of K-State and north of Poyntz Avenue, from R-3, multiple family residential, to R-M, four family residential zonings.

The second ordinance is an amendment to the text of the current zoning ordinance allowing for the rebuilding of non-conforming structures.

Daytona's popularity boosts competition for vacationers

By JANELL BERROTH
Collegian Reporter

Students and campus organizations which have arranged spring break trips to Daytona Beach, Fla., have faced tough competition in getting students to sign up for the trips this semester. Some of the organizations have cancelled their trips due to a lack of student interest.

Union Program Council's Travel Committee had to cancel its trip to Daytona because only six of the required 40 people had signed up. Janice Kiser, UPC program adviser, said the committee had two buses and 24 rooms reserved and took a $500 loss on the trip.

Due to past problems with travel agencies, the committee thought they could do a better job by organizing the trip themselves, Kiser said.

"It's easier to go through an agency but due to problems in the past, the committee thought it was worth it," she said.

The cost of the trip was $279 for seven nights and they tried to keep it as low as possible, Kiser said. The hotel they chose was in a good location, close to downtown, but the disadvantage they had, compared to competitors, was not being able to get accommodations at a lower price.

The committee offered the same things as competitors except the option that students can drive themselves. This possibly affected the sign up, she said.

Kiser said the travel committee hasn't made any decisions about future spring break trips.

"We'll probably keep plugging away and try some other place besides Daytona where there is not as much competition," she said. The committee is looking into more mini-trips and is confident it will have better luck.

Greg Clure, senior in marketing and member of Pi Sigma Epsilon marketing club, is promoting a spring break trip to Daytona.

Seventy-five people have signed up and Clure is expecting more. The trip cost is $234 if students choose to take the bus or $147 if they drive themselves.

He said the Pi Sigma Epsilon marketing club is going through Echo Travel Agency from Illinois.

"Basically Echo provides a certain amount of advertising and we do the rest. They offer discount cards good for eating and drinking establishments which we sell to students," he said.

The trip includes seven nights lodging in a hotel located in a major area of the two-mile strip. The advantages of the trip is the location of accommodations, Clure said. They are charging an extra $25 because students won't have to pay for taxis.

Melissa Snider, senior in marketing, is promoting a spring break trip to Daytona for the travel agency, Campus Marketing Inc.

The cost of the trip is $209 by bus and $119 if students drive their own cars. She said about 100 students have signed up including 30 who are driving themselves. The accommodations are located on the beach — four miles from downtown.

"I think it's a nice location because it's not so wild. I feel real comfortable with it," she said.

The travel agency handles all of the budgeting and the advertising and pays her as a representative to promote the trip, Snider said. She also sells tickets to excursions such as deep sea fishing and party cruise ships.

Snider said sign up is a little slower this year because it hasn't been as cold here as compared to last year.

Students providing their own transportation must sign an agreement relieving either agency and its campus promoter from any liability.

Architect exhibits, discusses works

By The Collegian Staff

An award-winning architect will exhibit his works and discuss design concepts as part of the Architecture from the Plains program. The exhibit began Monday and will run through Friday in Seaton 205.

Edward R. Frenette, director of Design and Planning at Setter Leach & Lindstrom of Minneapolis, is hosting the exhibit, which is a part of a yearlong series of presentations by leading firms in the region.

"Attending the exhibits gives students a good opportunity to see what's going on in the western region and engineers can sometimes find employment," said David Seamon, assistant professor of architecture.

Frenette will discuss the design concepts and processes which give form to the projects his firm has designed in a lecture titled "Design, After the Master Builders." The lecture is scheduled for at 8 p.m. Wednesday in Durland 173.

The lecture provides valuable and practical experience for students to see what is going on in the field, Seamon said. Students sometimes forget about the works done in the Midwest. These works are important for students to be aware of because K-State is a major Midwestern design school, he said.

Frenette bears design responsibilities for all Setter, Leach & Lindstrom's commissions in architecture, interior design and landscape. He also supervises a 35 person architectural staff, oversees computer-aided design and participates in marketing.

Frenette serves as the chairman of the editorial board of Architecture Minnesota magazine and has won design awards for completed architecture and urban design projects.

Frenette, a 1984-85 Loeb Fellow at the Harvard Graduate School of Design, has had recent works on display at Harvard's Loeb Gallery; the Walker Art Center; the Minnesota Institute of Art; the Chicago Public Library; the Blaffer Gallery in Houston; and the Newberger Museum in Purchase, New York.

The Department of Architecture is sponsoring Architecture from the Plains with the cooperation of the Kansas State University Chapter of the American Institute of Architecture Students and is offering it to the public without charge.

Ag college to sponsor conference

By The Collegian Staff

On Wednesday and Thursday, the College of Agriculture will sponsor its third annual "Water and the Future of Kansas" conference. This year's theme is "Water Conservation: Quantity and Quality," said Hyde Jacobs, assistant director of extension agricultural programs.

The conference will be broken into two parts. Wednesday's schedule includes speakers on various water issues including a report on implementing the state water plan.

Mike Hayden, R-Atwood, speaker of the House of Representatives, will speak about financing the state water plan at a banquet Wednesday night, Jacobs said.

"There are three objectives for the conference," he said. "It provides a forum for specialists, scientists and government leaders to report developments in water resources, project water resource needs and to consider programs which will provide workable solutions."

Water quality is one of the main topics of the conference.

"To insure water quality you have to be concerned with all sources of pollution," Jacobs said.

Water quality can be affected by point and non-point pollution.

Point pollution can be attributed to a specific source, such as a factory. Non-point pollution comes from land-diffuse sources not readily identifiable, such as water running into streams, he said.

"Water resource planning includes development of water resources, such as dams and water sheds, and management of those resources; planning for water conservation; and quality of water for fish, wildlife and recreation," he said.

"The annual conference began because the College of Agriculture conducts water-resource research and thought it would be a good opportunity to report results and provide a forum for discussion of state water resource issues," Jacobs said.

Preparation can help in interviews

By STEPHANIE HAUGHTON
Collegian Reporter

With the right educational experiences and help from the Career Planning and Placement Center in Holtz Hall, interviewing for prospective jobs can be a breeze.

Roger Dykmann, senior in electrical engineering, said he felt prepared for his interviews on campus thanks to the classes offered through the College of Engineering.

"The engineering college offers two classes that I have found helpful in making me comfortable in interviews," Dykmann said.

The classes are Written Communication for Engineers and Electrical Engineering Seminar.

Dykmann said through these classes students are given information about companies, check companies' backgrounds and go through mock interviews. This gives them the feeling of what a real interview would be like.

"The mock interviews put pressure on the class members to prepare for questions interviewers routinely ask and gives the students a chance to think of questions to ask the interviewers," he said.

The interviewer is trying to determine if the student is interested in the company and qualified for a particular job in a particular location. The interviewer's job is not to hire applicants, it is to screen them for referral for jobs, he said.

"To interview well you have to know yourself. The interviewer already knows your educational background. They want to get to know your personality and interest to see if you will fit into their company. An interview is a test of communication skills," Dykmann said.

"It is best to think about questions before going into an interview so that you will be ready to answer anything that might come up," said Doug Poyser, senior in finance. "If I know some background about the company I will be more confident when I'm in an interview."

"The placement center has helpful files on the companies that interview on campus. They have most of the information you would want to know about a company you are interviewing with. If they don't have the information you are looking for, they will be happy to help you contact someone who has the information," Poyser said.

Toni Oglesby, senior in journalism and mass communications, said the files she has used in the placement center have been helpful and current.

"Some files contain data sheets on the companies," she said. "This helps me decide if I'm interested in signing up for an interview with a company. This information is especially helpful because there are not too many interviews set up for journalism majors on campus."

"A company file can tell you about the location, product, advancement, employee benefits and growth of the company," Oglesby said.

"The more I know about a company the more relaxed I am during an interview and I get more comfortable with every interview," she said.

"The key to interviewing is to remember that an interview is nothing more than a conversation between two people," Oglesby said.

Piven to talk about politics

By The Collegian Staff

As part of Women's History Week, Frances Fox Piven, professor of political science at City University of New York, will deliver the second Lou Douglas Lecture at 7:30 tonight in Forum Hall.

Piven, who is also co-founder of the voter registration organization Human Serve, will speak about "Women, Politics and Public Policy."

The Lou Douglas Lecture Series was established to commemorate Lou Douglas, former professor of political science. This year's series topic is "U.S. 1986: Myth and Reality." Piven is the second in a series of four scheduled speakers examining the performance of the United States as a society and as a world citizen.

Police investigate theft of items from Ackert

By The Collegian Staff

Police are investigating a theft at Ackert Hall laboratories which occurred Thursday, but no suspects have been named in the case, according to campus police reports.

"We haven't had any recent break-ins in years," said Jerry Weis, associate professor of biology. "It's not unusual for this to happen at the beginning or end of the year, but why in the middle of the semester I don't know."

Several items were taken from the laboratories, including balance scales and a pocket calculator. Police do not have an estimate of the value of the items taken.

The investigation is continuing by campus police for possible information leading to any suspects. Meanwhile security will be increased at Ackert, Weis said. He said several officers have been patrolling the area since the break-in.

No signs of forced entry were reported. The campus police have not released any names of possible suspects.

Professor to give 'last lecture' tonight

By The Collegian Staff

In recognition of the affection bestowed upon him by his students and the respect others hold for him, Richard Coleman, professor of marketing, will step behind the podium at 7 tonight in Nichols Theatre to deliver his "final" words.

No, he's not retiring. His oration is by virtue of his being the second professor designated to speak in the Last Lecture Series, said Don Smith, assistant to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and coordinator of the series.

The premise of the series is to allow instructors to share their thoughts that transcend course-related material, specifically, what observations they would share with the world if they knew they were to die the next day — their last words — Smith said.

Coleman's speech "Destiny in America," will trace the post-graduation achievements of the more than 2,000 students comprising the 1945 senior class of Tulsa

High School, Coleman said.

Coleman, the Volume Shoe Corp. professor of marketing, was chosen to be a Last lecturer under two criteria; being a popular speaker before students and being someone widely respected for his efforts, Smith said. Coleman has been with the Department of Marketing since the summer of 1981 and is the only professor outside the College of Arts and Sciences scheduled to speak in the series this semester.

"We want to be ecumenical," Smith said about the series. "We'll have at least one person from outside arts and sciences to keep this a University-wide thing."

Coleman has spent many years conducting research about various social concerns including motivation and status symbolism. Prior to his arrival at K-State, Coleman worked at the MIT-Harvard Joint Center for Urban Studies in Cambridge, Mass.

All of the lectures will be videotaped for later presentation, Smith said.

Duke retains top position in rankings

By The Associated Press

Duke, the top seed in this week's Atlantic Coast Conference tournament, remained No. 1 in The Associated Press college basketball Monday and missed being a unanimous selection by one vote.

The Blue Devils, 29-2, received 62 first-place votes and 1,259 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters. Kansas, 28-3 and champions of the Big Eight Conference, received the other first-place vote and 1,195 points to hold second for the second consecutive week.

Duke held the top spot by winning the ACC regular-season title with an 82-74 victory over then-No. 3 North Carolina, which dropped one spot in the poll.

Kentucky, 26-3, jumped from fifth to third with 1,080 points, 35 more than the Tar Heels, 26-4, who held the No. 1 spot for 13 weeks before being dethroned by Duke in last week's balloting.

St. John's, 27-4, moved from eighth to fifth with 938 points, 12 more than Georgia Tech, 23-5, which finished between Duke and North Carolina in the ACC standings. Georgia Tech was the only other team to hold the top spot besides the Tar Heels and the Blue Devils.

Michigan, 25-4 and currently tied for first place with Indiana in the Big Ten, improved from 10th to seventh with 829 points after victories over Wisconsin and Northwestern last week.

Bradley, with 719 points, became just the second team this season — along with St. John's — to crack the Top Ten after not being ranked in the preseason poll. The Braves, 30-1, jumped from 11th to ninth after finishing as regular-season champions of the Missouri Valley Conference.

The Top Ten was rounded out by Memphis State, 25-4, which fell three spots from last week's poll after falling to No. 11 Louisville 70-69 in the game that decided the Metro Conference regular-season title. The Cardinals, 24-7, finished with 604 points.

Following Louisville in the Second Ten are Notre Dame, Nevada-Las Vegas, Georgetown, Oklahoma, Indiana, Michigan State, Navy, Illinois and North Carolina State.

Illinois, 20-8, rejoins the Top Twenty after a seven-week absence. The Fighting Illini beat Purdue, the only team to fall from the rankings, 81-72, before registering an impressive road victory over Georgia Tech, 59-57.

Up and over

Gregg Plank, a member of "The Team," goes up for a shot over a "U No Da Kine" member during co-recreational intramural basketball action Monday in the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. "U No Da Kine" defeated "The Team," 71-50.

One writer's selections for All-Big Eight team

The ever improving Big Eight Conference is in the midst of what could be its best basketball season ever.

Kansas has one of the nation's best teams and has as good a chance as anybody to win the national championship.

Oklahoma may not be as strong as last year's Wayman Tisdale-led team, but is still a shoo-in for a seeded position in the NCAA tournament.

Iowa State is a virtual lock for the NCAA field as well. And who knows, Missouri or Nebraska might be able to sneak into the NCAA as well.

Talent? The Big Eight is loaded with it. Picking an All-Big Eight team this year is perhaps the toughest task of all.

But, what the heck? Let's try it anyway.

Remember, though, this is only one writer's opinion about who the top five players in the conference are, regardless of position.

No need to storm the Collegian newsroom, weapon in hand, if you don't like what you read. A letter would serve the purpose just fine.

DANNY MANNING, KU forward — This was the easiest choice to make on the first team. Manning is, without a doubt, the Big Eight's finest player and one of the nation's best as well. A superb scorer, passer, rebounder and ballhandler, the 6-foot-11 Manning is the conference's most complete player. Jayhawk fans need only worry about the possibility Manning, a sophomore, might turn professional before his senior season.

DARRYL KENNEDY, Oklahoma forward — As hard a job as this may be, Kennedy has come very close to filling the shoes of the departed Tisdale for the Sooners. Averaging over 21 points per game and leading the conference in rebounding, Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs couldn't ask for much more than the 6-5 junior has given him this year.

JEFF GRAYER, Iowa State forward — Grayer has emerged in only his sophomore year as one of the rising stars of the conference. Grayer is the conference's second leading scorer at 21.2 points per game in a balanced Cyclone attack. Grayer's consistent point production has helped Iowa State rise to second place in the Big Eight with a 9-5 record including wins over KU and Oklahoma.

RON KELLOGG, KU forward — While Kellogg's scoring statistics have dropped off slightly from his standout junior season, this is deceptive, taking the Jayhawks balanced offense into consideration. Still, Kellogg is averaging 16.7 points per game and is probably the Big Eight's best all-around defensive player. In addition, Kellogg has improved his all-around game — assists, ball handling, etc. — over a year ago.

TOM PERRIN

Sports Editor

DERRICK CHIEVOUS, Missouri forward — A very difficult choice over such talents as K-State forward Norris Coleman, Iowa State guard Jeff Hornacek and Oklahoma guard Tim McCalister, any of whom would make worthy members of any all-conference team. Chievous has been a consistent, all-around player throughout the season, averaging 18.7 points and 7.8 rebounds per game in leading the Tigers to a fourth place tie in the conference. A sophomore, Chievous should expect first-team honors in years to come as well.

Wait a minute, you ask, where's the "Sarge" on the first team? Well, Wildcat fans may not like it, but Coleman, great player that he has become, would not have gotten the statistics he has on a better team.

K-State has relied more on Coleman than any other team has any other player in the conference. Chievous, for example, has played in four more games than Coleman, but has taken 82 fewer shots.

Coleman is a cinch for Newcomer of the Year honors, however, and that isn't a bad prize to settle for.

An honorary first team selection goes to high-scoring Nebraska center Dave Hoppen, a first team selection the last two years who injured his knee midway through the Big Eight season. Hoppen would have been a lock for the first team had he not been injured.

The second five includes Coleman, Hornacek, McCalister, Oklahoma guard Anthony Bowie and Missouri guard Jeff Strong.

That the second team is as talented as it is should serve as a tribute to how strong a basketball conference the Big Eight has become recently.

And while we're rolling, why not name a third team of K-State guard Joe Wright, KU guards Calvin Thompson and Cedric Hunter, KU center Greg Dreiling and Oklahoma center David Johnson.

Not a bad third team either.

Lady Cats to meet Kansas in Big Eight post-season opener

By DARAN NEUSCHAFER
Sports Writer

Throw out all the records, it is Big Eight Post-Season Tournament time for women's basketball, and K-State Lady Cat Coach Matilda Mossman thinks that with the way the regular season went, there is no one team who is the team to beat.

"I think that there are about six teams who have real good chances of winning the tournament, including us," Mossman said. "We are playing real well right now, and I think we have the potential to beat any of the teams in the tournament."

K-State, after finishing in sixth place in the final conference standings, will travel to Lawrence tonight to take on Kansas, the tournament's number three seed. KU has defeated K-State in both of the two teams earlier contests of the year, something Lady Cat guard Cindy Durham thinks will help K-State this time around.

"It is awfully tough to beat a team three times during the same season, and we owe them," Durham said.

Mossman also pointed out that in the two earlier contests, K-State blew a 15-point lead in Manhattan to lose 69-66, and in the 81-70 loss in Lawrence, the Lady Cats played without the services of their leading rebounder and second leading scorer, Carlisa Thomas.

Thomas was named second team All-Big Eight Monday in a vote of conference coaches.

The Lady Cats gained what Mossman termed "much needed confidence" Saturday afternoon when they routed Nebraska 101-63 in Ahearn Field House. K-State had six players score 14 or more points, and outrebounded the Cornhuskers, 48-29.

"It (the Nebraska game) was a real morale builder. Our kids have a lot of confidence in themselves right now, probably more than they have ever had," Mossman said. "I think if that confidence continues, we have a real good chance of pulling off the upset in Lawrence."

There will be a little added pressure on the Lady Cats tonight, as K-State has never lost its first-round game in the history of the tourney. K-State last won the post-season tournament in 1984, beating Missouri in the finals.

The Lady Jayhawks finished the regular season with an 18-9 overall record, and a 9-5 conference record. K-State, meanwhile, brings a 15-12 and 6-8 record into the contest.

KU is led by All-Big Eight forward Vickie Adkins, who is averaging 21.7 points per game and pulling down 9.2 rebounds a game.

K-State is being led in scoring by senior Amanda Holley, who is averaging 12.3 points per game. Thomas is second in scoring at 11.6 and leads the team in rebounding with 8.2 per game.

Game time is set for 7:30 p.m. in Allen Field House.

GAME NOTES: The game will be broadcast live beginning at 7 p.m. by WIBW (580 AM)...The winner of tonight's game will meet the winner of the Nebraska-Colorado game Thursday night at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo....Tournament finals will be played at 7 p.m., Saturday at Kemper.

asked for a briefing and, if he determined it was not safe to fly, he would have asked that the problem be fixed.

Asked if that meant he would have refused to fly until a correction was made, he replied: "The first thing to say is how are we going to get this fixed. No one likes to stand down from flying (refuse to go). Very probably it would have been a question, after I had got all that information, about how I felt about it."

Brand said it was understandable why the Challenger crew was not informed about concerns that some engineers had about the effects of the launch day's cold weather on the booster seals.

"The crew should have been aware of it, but there's a reluctance at the last minute to get the crew involved in engineering controversies," he said.

Hartsfield said he felt NASA was under no extraordinary pressure to launch any of the shuttle missions. He said that before one of his flights he was given a choice of proceeding in spite of a computer problem, or waiting for the problem to be fixed. He decided to delay the flight and said there was no pressure to change his decision.

But Brand said that pressure to launch "could have played" into the decision to fly Challenger.

"As long as I have been here we've had pressure from the schedule," although for the crew most of that pressure is to get trained in time for the mission.

"We assume that the hardware is marching on down a schedule and when launch day comes it will be ready," he said.

All the astronauts said they would like some type of launch escape system.

took the equivalent of $1.1 million in Philippine currency.

Taking national currency out of the country without central bank approval is illegal, and Fernandez said there was no such authorization.

Communist insurgents had been relatively inactive since the election. Vice President Salvador Laurel had predicted most of them would lay down their arms when a new government took over. Aquino said when she was sworn in that some rebel commanders told her they were prepared to surrender to her.

Col. Jovencio Sales, Philippine Constabulary chief of staff in Albay province, said that in addition to those killed, 10 policemen and seven civilians were wounded in Monday's ambush of a military truck.

He said about 200 guerrillas waiting on both sides of the road fired on the truck as it drove onto a bridge in the town of Guinobatan, 210 miles southeast of Manila. The civilian casualties were on a minibus that was caught in the crossfire, he said.

and terrorism throughout the hemisphere," Shultz said.

Reagan said that if Congress rejects his request for $70 million in direct military assistance and $30 million in non-lethal humanitarian aid, it would mean "consolidation of a privileged sanctuary for terrorists and subversives just two days' driving time from Harlingen, Texas."

U.S. assistance to the Contras now is limited to $27 million in non-lethal aid, which expires at the end of March. Reagan is asking Congress to approve around $100 million over the next 18 months. A House vote is expected in about two weeks.

Reagan said the Soviet Union has provided the Sandinistas with $500 million in assistance and that withholding aid from the Contras could lead to a "strategic disaster."

He said the rebel Contras need more than humanitarian aid to confront the helicopters and tanks now in the Sandinista arsenal.

In his speech to the war veterans, Shultz said the alternative to democratic rule in Nicaragua is a Latin America comprised of "two, three, many Nicaraguas — a hemisphere of burning churches, suppressed newspapers and crushed opposition."

Later, Elliott Abrams, assistant secretary of state for Inter-American Affairs, predicted that if the Contras receive full funding from the Congress, the administration will have achieved its objectives in Nicaragua in about three years. He said there are 6,000 Contras fighting in Nicaragua, down 2,000 from a few months ago. He attributed the reduction to supply problems and the superior firepower of the Sandinista Army.

strike but others complained of intimidation and roadblocks that included oil and nails strewn across the main highway south of Belfast.

Protestant leaders had called for a peaceful 24-hour strike in this British province to protest the Anglo-Irish agreement, but violence broke out shortly after the strike began at midnight Sunday.

"There has been very significant disruption to the province today and it has done great damage to the image of the province," said Tom King, Britain's Northern Ireland secretary.

Protestants accuse Thatcher of ignoring their special election vote on Jan. 23 in favor of scrapping the accord, which gives the Catholic Republic of Ireland a consultative role in the province. The Protestants maintain this is the first step in a process that will eventually put them under Dublin's rule.

K-State to appeal ineligibility ruling to NCAA in April

By LEANNE STOWE
Campus Editor

The University will appeal to the National Collegiate Athletic Association at its April meeting regarding men's basketball standout Norris Coleman's eligibility for the years ahead, University President Duane Acker said Tuesday during a press conference.

"Though the written ruling has not yet been received from NCAA, our Athletic Director Larry Travis, our University Attorney Richard Seaton, and Dr. Bob Snell, our faculty representative to the NCAA, are now gathering the relevant material, information and evidence that the University will need to appeal," Acker said.

Acker said the issue is not that the Big Eight declared Coleman ineligible and forfeited the team's 4-10 conference record for purposes of this weekend's conference post-season tournament but whether or not Coleman will be eligible next season.

"The big issue is Norris Coleman's eligibility next season and the years ahead," Acker said. "He has established a good academic record at K-State along with his fantastic skill."

"Our attention is directed solely to establish his future eligibility and his opportunity to continue to be a valuable player for Kansas State," he said.

Acker said the Big Eight ruling was made in order to complete a list of pairings for the tournament, and to do so the Big Eight administrators had to make an assumption.

"The Big Eight has made a decision as it relates to the pairings for this week's tournament; for the sake of the pairings, they assume that K-State would have forfeited the Big Eight games," he said.

"The Big Eight pairings are not the issue. Coleman's eligibility and his value to Kansas State in the years ahead are the big issues and that's what we are directing our attention to."

Acker also said about the Fred Bramlage Coliseum that he's "just pleased that it's on the road." He said he was confident the project can be built within the revised $17.5 million budget.

"I'm certainly confident that it will be built and we have a good level of confidence that the architectural issues were thoroughly reviewed," he said. "I have a high level of confidence that all issues have been taken into account."

Acker said because of higher projected enrollments and a "re-funding" of some debts, student fee contributions to the coliseum project may be reduced.

"We are considering lowering the student fees for the coliseum project. Though enrollment has gone down, enrollment is higher today than we projected seven or eight years ago it would be when we mapped out what the dollar and the fee need would be," Acker said.

"Under the leadership of Vice President (George) Miller, we have gone through what we call a 're-funding' operation of a good many of our indebtedness bonds for several projects," he said. "This has freed some dollars so that we are confident we can reduce student fees and still provide the $7 million worth of investment that was pledged by the student body for the project."

Acker said there were no estimates yet on the amount of the possible reduction.

Acker said although he visited Washington, D.C., last week, he would not comment on speculation he was there to talk about future job possibilities. Acker announced June 27, 1985, he would resign his post on June 30, 1986.

"My visit to Washington last week was an agriculture meeting and in regard to anything beyond that I wouldn't have a comment to make."

He said he is looking at several opportunities.

"We want to continue our relationship with Kansas State and there are several opportunities we are looking at. We are working hard to avoid making a move too soon," Acker said.

Francis Fox Piven, professor of political science at the City University of New York, speaks to more than 200 people Tuesday in Union Forum Hall in the semester's second Lou Douglas Lecture. Piven examined conservative and liberal ideological differences in the social welfare system.

Market, welfare clash, professor says

By VICKI REYNOLDS
Campus Editor

Before the American social welfare system can be defended, the basic prevailing idea that the marketplace organizes society must be addressed, said Frances Fox Piven, professor of political science at the Graduate School of the City University of New York.

Piven spoke to more than 200 people about "Women, Politics and Public Policy" during the second Lou Douglas Lecture Tuesday in Union Forum Hall.

The battle which has broken out about social programs is "more than political," Piven said.

"It is in a very significant sense an ideological contest," she said.

Conservatives argue high levels of social welfare spending are a drag on economic growth; welfare programs destroy the incentive to work; they erode the stable family by destroying the incentive for men and women to remain in relationships; and they have a corrosive effect on the capabilities of people, Piven said.

She said conservatives claim most "upstanding folk" are angered by the programs and are leading the charges against them.

"This is a lie," Piven said, and added conservatives' arguments are not backed by studies.

She also said most of the debate between the liberal and conservative sides has been in empirical terms, which are "oddly inconclusive."

"The numbers are just ammunition in an ideological war which is not going to be fought by numbers," she said.

Piven called the area of the consequences of social programs "tangled" and said liberals are defending programs by countering with numbers of their own, which are only "somewhat useful."

"What liberals have not been willing to do is to address the ideological underpinnings," she said. "Because they don't address the ideological underpinnings, they give away too much — they concede the ideological assumptions — and once they concede them, a bold defense of the welfare state becomes impossible."

Piven said she believes there is a powerful, unifying idea about the market and its relation to society in the conviction of the market as the natural, proper and pre-eminent way of organizing social life.

Piven said liberals are not ready to challenge the basic idea of the market's influence.

Rutford drops crusade for presidency

By TIM CARPENTER

A Texas educator, one of the eight candidates reportedly being considered for the presidency at K-State, is no longer in the running for the job.

Robert Rutford, president of the University of Texas at Dallas, announced Tuesday "it is clear that now is not the time for me to continue as a candidate."

The chairman of the Presidential Search Committee — a 15-member group charged with searching for three to five finalists for the post — would not elaborate on Rutford's announcement.

"I'm not going to verify it (Rutford's statement). I'm not going to say if he is or isn't a candidate, or a finalist — or if he ever was a candidate," said Chairman Jerome Frieman, associate professor of psychology.

However, in a prepared statement, Rutford said he has withdrawn his name from consideration for the job, which currently pays $92,000 a year, because it is in his own best interest to remain at UT.

"The position of president of Kansas State University is one of great opportunity. However, it is clear that now is not the time for me to continue as a candidate. The excitement and anticipation that should be a part of the candidacy are not there, and I do have those emotions about the present possibilities at the University of Texas-Dallas.

"I have, therefore, asked that my name be withdrawn from further consideration by the search committee."

Rutford said his interest in developing a new engineering program at the 7,400-student urban university is the main reason for withdrawing.

Duncan Manning, vice president for university affairs at UT, said the university will launch an ambitious electrical engineering program this fall. The school admits only juniors, seniors and graduate students to its programs.

The search committee met in Topeka on Sunday to narrow its list of eight semifinalists and voted to forward a "short" list of finalists for the presidency to the Kansas Board of Regents, Frieman said.

The regents instructed the search committee on Oct. 7 to nominate a group of finalists by April 1. The regents will interview the finalists and make a selection this month.

Aquino claims Marcos stole up to $10 billion

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — The government of Corazon Aquino said Tuesday it has new evidence that ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos and his family and friends may have plundered up to $10 billion of the nation's wealth.

Former Sen. Jovito Salonga told a news conference that documents found at the presidential palace after Marcos hurriedly abandoned it Feb. 25 link Marcos to purported illegal purchases of property in United States.

Salonga is chairman of a five-member commission Aquino created last week to recover "all ill-gotten wealth" that the Marcos family and its associates allegedly accumulated and secreted under dummy names during Marcos' 20-year rule.

Asked how much money was involved, Salonga replied, "maybe $5 billion to $10 billion." He did not elaborate.

The estimate was the largest yet. The 1985 national budget of the financially strapped Philippines was $3.3 billion.

The nation's foreign debt is $26 billion and, according to the Marcos government, the average per capita income of the 55.5 million Filipinos last year was $136.

Rep. Stephen J. Salazar, D-N.Y., told a news conference at Manila airport Tuesday he believes the U.S.

government "ought to be doing everything we can to facilitate the recovery of these assets" because they were "stolen and swindled from the pockets of the Filipino people."

Solarz, chairman of the House subcommittee on Asian affairs that recently conducted hearings on Marcos' alleged holdings in the United States, said there was "persuasive documentary and direct evidence that the Marcoses control a real estate empire in the New York City area alone of up to $350 million."

Lawyers for the new government obtained a court injunction in New York on Sunday barring sale of five New York properties allegedly owned or controlled by Marcos.

Meanwhile, most members of the Philippines' highest courts resigned Tuesday to give Aquino's week-old government a free hand in revamping the judicial system. The system is composed of Marcos appointees and has been viewed by the public with distrust.

Among those resigning was senior Associate Justice Claudio Teehankee, who swore in Aquino as president hours before Marcos fled for Hawaii. It is widely believed she will name Teehankee chief justice.

Marcos twice bypassed Teehankee, who had ruled or written opinions against Marcos, by naming supporters to the top judicial post.

Swedish police offer $70,000 for clue to killer

By The Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Authorities said Tuesday that a cab driver saw Olof Palme's assassin leap into a car and speed away with at least one accomplice seconds before police arrived at the scene of the murder.

They offered a reward of $70,000 in hopes of tempting an accomplice to betray the man who shot the 59-year-old prime minister in the back Friday night on a well-lit street in downtown Stockholm.

"There was at least one person in the (getaway) car," Stockholm

Police Chief Sune Sandstrom told The Associated Press. He said police arrived seconds after the assassin's car raced away on the snow-covered street.

A witness to the shooting said earlier that he chased Palme's killer on foot, but lost him.

Police Commissioner Hans Holmer told a news conference about the taxi driver's report. He said the cabbie noted only part of the license number, and police would not describe the vehicle.

"I hope there are people sheltering or who have sheltered this man who are willing to turn him in," Holmer said in announcing the reward.

The commissioner rejected growing public criticism of the way police have handled the investigation.

Critics say Stockholm authorities were too slow in sealing off the murder site and escape routes, and in deploying police patrols. They also said police did not provide enough protection for the prime minister, but Palme often dismissed his bodyguards and had done so earlier Friday.

Palme and his wife, Lisbet, were walking home from a movie premiere when the assassin attacked.

"We did (all that) one could possibly expect of us," Holmer said.

Sandstrom said, "We have some ideas we are working on," but would not elaborate.

Holmer told the conference investigators had received 4,000 tips about the case and questioned 600 people.

He said 100 were interrogated extensively, and arrests in unrelated cases had resulted.

Police have said they were advised of several claims of responsibility for the murder made by callers claiming to represent West Germany's terrorist Red Army Faction.

Soviet says U.S. difficult in talks

GENEVA — The fourth round of U.S.-Soviet arms talks ended Tuesday after six weeks of negotiations. The chief Soviet envoy said the United States was uncooperative, and the top U.S. delegate blamed the Soviets for slow progress.

"We introduced a lot of proposals here...and we regret that there was no positive response by the American side," said Viktor Karpov. "We still hope for a cooperative spirit but we regretfully don't have it," he said. "We hope that maybe next time there will be more progress."

The fifth round of talks is scheduled to start May 8, said the head of the U.S. delegation, Max Kampelman.

In an unusual public criticism of his negotiating partners, Kampelman said the reason for slow progress was "that the Soviet delegation has not acted to fulfill the commitments undertaken by" President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev at their November summit in Geneva.

"The round ended with less accomplished than we had hoped," Kampelman said. He said, however, that positive factors included a commitment by both sides to speed up work toward an agreement on medium-range nuclear forces.

Kampelman, reading a prepared statement, said the United States began the fourth round Jan. 16 "determined to carry on the program" agreed at the summit. "Our determination, we regret to say, was not matched."

State of emergency may be lifted

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — President P.W. Botha announced that the 195-day-old state of emergency imposed to fight anti-apartheid turmoil in South Africa probably would be lifted on Friday.

His announcement Tuesday was praised by the United States and was given a cautious welcome from some South African liberals. But it provoked expressions of concern from the largest anti-apartheid grouping, the United Democratic Front, that the emergency would be supplanted by repressive legislation.

Botha also made a new offer of statehood for Namibia, proposing an Aug. 1 target date for starting moves toward the territory's independence. He made it conditional on a withdrawal of Cuban troops from neighboring Angola.

Police reported two blacks were killed by security officers. They said police shot a man in the western Transvaal province and a youth died of injuries suffered when police quelled a riot in Potchefstroom, southwest of Johannesburg.

They also reported that two whites were seriously hurt when their car was stoned in the south of the country.

Botha made his announcements to a packed parliamentary chamber in the country's legislative capital.

He claimed the level of violence had dropped sufficiently to enable him to issue a proclamation, "most probably this coming Friday," to lift the state of emergency.

Abortion measure meets delay

TOPEKA — The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee Tuesday delayed action on a bill that would require physicians to get parental consent before performing an abortion on a girl under 18, voting to have the measure studied over the summer.

Members of the committee said the issue is too complex and they need more information before they could endorse a parental consent bill. Other said they want time to study other states' laws and the larger problem of teen-age pregnancy.

But Sen. Ed Reilly, the committee's chairman, acknowledged that interim studies historically are used by lawmakers to avoid dealing with tough issues.

"I think we have avoided the issue," said Reilly, R-Leavenworth.

The bill would require physicians to get written consent from both parents of a minor before performing an abortion on a girl under 18. If the parents are divorced, consent from one parent or a guardian would be sufficient in some cases. Also, a girl who no longer lives with a parent or guardian would not be affected by the law.

In addition, a girl could go to court to get permission for an abortion, and a physician could perform an abortion without parental consent in a medical emergency.

Sen. Jeanne Hoferer, R-Topeka, said the bill needs to be studied before the committee takes action. The committee had two days of hearings on the bill last week.

"We've only given this thing two hours," Hoferer said. "We could give it three months."

In addition, Hoferer said she wants lawmakers to study the broader issue of teen-age pregnancy, perhaps considering programs aimed at preventing pregnancy in girls under age 18.

Senators send Reagan taxing letter

WASHINGTON — Seeking to build pressure for an early budget compromise, 50 senators on Tuesday signed a blunt letter to President Reagan, saying tax overhaul legislation should be set aside "until a firm, definite budget agreement has been reached between Congress and the White House."

The latest evidence of flagging interest in the tax bill — which the president has called his top domestic legislative priority — came a day before the Senate Budget Committee was scheduled to begin drafting a budget for fiscal 1987, which begins Oct. 1.

Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., the Budget Committee chairman, said meeting a $144 billion deficit target required by a new balanced budget law will require $12 billion to $20 billion in new revenues as well as domestic spending cuts and less military spending than the administration is requesting.

Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., who initiated the letter to Reagan, denied the effort was aimed at either derailing the tax overhaul effort or putting senators on record as favoring a tax increase to shrink the budget deficit. Instead, he said, the letter reflected the Senate's primary concern this year.

Religious leaders form live cross

WASHINGTON — Nearly 200 religious leaders formed a human cross on the Capitol steps Tuesday, commemorating people who have died in Nicaragua, and accused the Reagan administration of preferring "terrorism to the pursuit of peace."

"A scaffold of deception is being constructed around Nicaragua," Catholic, Protestant and Jewish leaders said in formally declaring they will fight President Reagan over new congressional aid for Nicaraguan rebels.

"The government's distortion campaign is to prepare the American people for further U.S. military action in Nicaragua," said a declaration signed by the religious leaders and read by Roman Catholic Bishop Thomas Gumbleton of Detroit.

Episcopal Bishop Paul Moore of New York said the leaders were "representing literally millions of people — Protestant, Catholic and Jewish people of good will throughout this country who have not yet been heard" on the subject of U.S. involvement in Nicaragua.

Friends honor legendary performer

NEW YORK — Spencer Tracy was a man "whose values fired his passion" but "who didn't like to get into the sticky side of any relationship or talk," his friends said at a Broadway tribute.

Katharine Hepburn, Frank Sinatra and other stars and friends of the late actor reminisced Monday at the Majestic Theater in a benefit for the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. They were joined on stage by actors Sidney Poitier and Robert Wagner and director Stanley Kramer.

Tracy's daughter, Susie, stood next to Hepburn as she accepted a lifetime achievement award on her father's behalf from Wagner.

Hepburn, the actor's longtime companion, starred in nine films with Tracy, beginning with "Woman of the Year" in 1942.

Tracy died in 1967, shortly after completing the Kramer film "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?" with Hepburn and Poitier.

Musicians gain Hall of Fame status

NEW YORK — Hard-driving rock 'n' roll led the ceremonies at the Songwriters Hall of Fame, but the evening was wrapped up with a tuneless rendition of "Stardust" by its lyricist, now in a wheelchair.

The National Academy of Popular Music inducted rock 'n' roll pioneers Chuck Berry and Buddy Holly, pop composers Jimmy Webb and Marvin Hamlisch, and Felice and Boudleaux Bryant into their Hall of Fame on Monday.

Lyricist Mitchell Parish, 85, who penned the words to Hoagy Carmichael's "Stardust," received the Johnny Mercer Award and composer Jule Styne, 80, best known for "Funny Girl" and "Gypsy," was given the Board of Directors Award.

Master of ceremonies Ben Vereen said Berry, 59, "gave rock 'n' roll the beat." Berry's hits included "Johnny B. Goode," "Roll Over Beethoven" and "Sweet Little Sixteen."

Holly had seven hits in 1957 and 1958, including "Peggy Sue," "That'll Be the Day" and "Oh Boy!" He died in a plane crash in 1959 at age 22.

Hamlisch, 41, won three Academy Awards for music in "The Sting" and "The Way We Were."

Four K-State faculty members are working to develop uniform criteria for the evaluation of nuclear reactor core and shielding designs. The criteria are needed because the designs are difficult to assess, said Walter Meyer, professor of nuclear engineering.

The 1971 K-State Quiz has died of a lack of interest and cooperation, said Kelly Palmer, senior in social sciences and chairman of the seven-member Quiz Bowl steering committee.

R.D. Harmon, student body president, is attending the President to President Conference in Washington, D.C., this weekend. The conference will allow student body presidents from about 150 colleges to meet with presidential advisers and Congressional leaders.

An apartment building owned and operated by K-State Endowment and Development Association was razed last week leaving 12 students homeless. Tenant concerns about trash in the attic led to an inspection by city officials in December. The apartments, 1605 Anderson Ave., were subsequently declared substandard and the association was told to make repairs or vacate the building.

Faculty Senate president and president-elect were denied membership to Student Senate last night. In a roll-call vote, student senators defeated a bill, 32-12, to change the Student Governing Association constitution to allow the president and president-elect non-voting status in Student Senate.

5 Years Ago — 1981

About 150 people, some dressed in stocking caps, brown bags and turned-up overcoats and sunglasses, attended a meeting last night to learn the rules of the game ASSASSIN. The meeting was originally set for last week but questions raised by Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs, postponed the game so its rules could be reviewed.

Hungarian journalist realizes writing limits

By KAREN MEIS
Staff Writer

Gyorgy Nonn said he accepts the fact he is a journalist of the government, but at the same time he enjoys his freedom as a Hungarian writer.

Nonn, a foreign journalist for the Magyar Hirlap, a daily newspaper in Budapest, Hungary, is a visitor to the University. His visit is sponsored by the Department of Architecture, the Department of Regional and Community Planning, the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, the Department of Political Science and the Department of History.

He said he knows his limits and realizes overstepping them would lead to his unemployment. Despite the Magyar Hirlap being a semi-official paper of the Hungarian government, Nonn said he has "free selection" as far as his writing is concerned.

"Journalism in the United States and in Hungary is all the same," Nonn said. "An editor asks if someone wants to do a story, and someone then undertakes it. Everyone is a specialist in some subject."

Nonn said there is no censorship of the written articles. They are edited by the head of the department and then sent to the printing press. He said each copy of the Magyar Hirlap has two main editorials.

"These (editorials) are read by the chief editor because the article explains the standpoint of the paper," Nonn said. "We don't write against our government's principles. If that is done, the article would never be published. I do know my borders and limitations, so there is no need for censorship."

As a journalist for a semi-official government paper, Nonn said he must accept and understand it is natural for the view of the newspaper to be determined by its owner.

"The owner is the government, yet that does not mean that we cannot criticize the situation in Hungary," Nonn said.

He cited the example of a concept proposed in 1971 concerning the development of Hungarian villages and small towns. Regional planners said small societies would not survive due to industrialization, but the concept was changed because of critics of the proposal.

During his stay in Manhattan, Nonn said he has experienced that the "man of the street" knows very little about Hungary.

"I can accept that because Hungary has no influence on the world, neither politically nor economically. In a university, though, I cannot understand why people do not better understand the different ways of life," Nonn said.

"In one class I visited, a student asked me if Hungary had bars. We do, and Levi Strauss jeans are made in Hungary, too. We are a civilized nation just like the United States," he said.

Nonn said he believes the difference in the television mediums plays an important role in the way the two countries view each other. For example, Hungary has one television station with only two channels.

"Both channels are very informative and commercial-free, similar to public channels in the United States. I was surprised that Americans don't watch public channels. They seem to mostly watch commercial television. I don't understand why. It is a funny thing for me," Nonn said.

"In Hungary it is important to give a real, true picture of the United States, so I was not surprised of the high living standards here because it was shown on Hungarian television," Nonn said.

The American formation of information concerning socialist countries is often made by such movies as "Rambo: First Blood Part II" and "Rocky IV," he said.

"Why are such stupid films necessary?" he said. "It's better to know the basic facts. Only then can you choose your opinion or impression."

Nonn, who received a home economics degree from the Karl Marx University of Economical Status in Budapest, plans to write about his impressions of the United States when he returns to Hungary. He plans to leave Manhattan Thursday and will stop in New York enroute home.

"It is up to me what to write and what I experience here," he said. "My job is to inform the public about the facts. There is no need to write opinion. The facts state themselves — that is the art of being a journalist."

Professor shares views on peers' lives

By JILL HUMMELS
Staff Writer

Sharing his observations of the successes and failures marking the most notable lives of the 1945 Class of the Tulsa high schools, a University professor stood behind the podium Tuesday night to deliver a Last Lecture.

Richard P. Coleman, professor of marketing, revealed through vivid description, to about 80 listeners, his perceptions of destiny in the laboratory experiment called human life, using his graduating class of 2,445 students for his study sample and illustrations.

Having spent many years studying social motivation, both formally and informally, Coleman felt his first desire to understand destiny while reading "Presidents of the United States" in the first grade, he said. Thereafter, he made a point of noticing which classmates were popular, which ones were not and what kind of life they led: what neighborhood they lived in, what their houses were like, which grade school social circles they ran in, and what their parents did for a living.

Destiny, Coleman said, is more or less predictable. His observations of these people from 6 years of age furnished him with some basic truths as to why some classmates failed and some succeeded.

Before delving too deeply into his topic and illustrations Coleman asserted that yes, indeed, good high school study habits correlate best with success. The grade school youngsters who won the spelling bees and the math quizzes and who landed the part of the Snow Queen in the Christmas pageant would translate into successes in high school and expand from there to successes in the rest of their lives.

But success has additional facets which allow those not blessed with parents who hold the "right" job to attain prosperity. Included in those aspects are drive, dreams, determination, personality — white teeth and fresh breath included — and luck.

"Everyone always liked him," Coleman said of Preston Carruthers, who achieved his successes through his personality and drive. And Carruthers' ferocious hatred of the poverty of his widowed mother drove him to leave Tulsa to find a different life.

Patti Page, another Tulsa student, made her success through talent and luck. Luck — being in the right place at the right time — turned a 14-year-old girl who attended the "lowest status white high school" in the city into a national singing sensation after being given a chance to sing on local radio.

Another basic truth Coleman found was that success was more readily achieved by those who left Tulsa to pursue their ambitions. Leaving town helped shed the stereotypes and social class structure with which one is labeled, he said.

But failure can often intercept destiny. The horrible luck factor — problems of physical health — can stop success in its tracks.

Committee asks for lowering of fuel economy standards

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House Transportation Committee endorsed a measure Tuesday that asks federal officials to lower the fuel economy standards automobile manufacturers would be required to meet in 1987 and 1988.

The committee took the action on an unrecorded voice vote, without discussion, after spokesmen for new vehicle dealers across the state and General Motors Corp. warned that manufacturers may be forced to limit the availability of larger cars if the proposed standards are allowed to stand.

"If the demand for large cars becomes big enough, the only alternative the manufacturer will have is to cease production of the large vehicles and thereby limit availability," said Jim Sullins, executive vice president of the Kansas Motor Car Dealers Association. "At that point, the franchised dealers will not be able to supply the vehicles their customers want and desire."

Sullins said the American automobile industry is now in a healthy financial condition but requiring higher gas mileage standards "will have a detrimental effect on the automobile business in general, the consuming public and the overall economy of the United States."

The resolution would put Kansas on the same side with Ford Motor Co. and GM in asking the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration to lower average fuel standards from 27.5 miles per gallon in 1987 and 1988 to 26.0 mpg.

Churchill's '46 speech remains viable in '86

Forty years ago today, British statesman Winston Churchill came to rural Fulton, Mo., to warn the world about the threat of Soviet domination, and the phrase "iron curtain" entered the English language.

During that speech at Westminster College on March 5, 1946, the former prime minister — in a typical display of powerful oratory — established a cold war boundary with the words: "A shadow has fallen upon the scene so lately lighted by the Allied victory. From Stettin in the Baltic to Trieste in the Adriatic, an iron curtain descended across the continent."

Though Churchill was not the first to use the phrase, his speech gave it a new currency and its usage has persisted. His speech remains the most memorable address at the college.

Today, Vice President George Bush, who is on the campaign trail and wants to become the biggest greased pig in the field game of American politics in 1988, will give the 41st lecture in the series made famous by Churchill.

The warning expressed by the aging prime minister shortly after the conclusion of World War II is a favorite theme of politicians today. Churchill's anti-communist rhetoric of the '40s is much like Bush's anti-communist rhetoric of the '80s.

We have a worrisome state of hostility between rival blocs, specifically the Western and the Soviet, involving economic and political action. This conflict need not exist.

Responsibility for the condition of cold war is attributed to various sources; however, it is clear that it could not exist without there being two immensely powerful antagonists, each of whom wants to exercise a power that the other seeks to deny them. Apparently, not much has changed in 40 years, for we remain in the grips of a cold war that is unproductive.

It is time that we shed our inordinate fear of communism and time for the Soviets to rid themselves of their fear of capitalism.

Perhaps Bush can deliver a speech today that expresses a new willingness to cooperate with presumed adversaries. Capitalist- and communist-bashing politicians do little to ease international tensions. Cooperation between the United States and the Soviet Union could set a precedent that other nations can emulate. If Bush takes the initiative maybe his speech will be remembered in 2026.

Halleck makes mark on future of country

A model for young turks harboring visions of a political future in Washington should review the past of Charles Halleck, a Republican who served 16 terms in the U.S. House of Representatives. His work in Congress amplifies what is good about this nation.

Halleck, who died Monday following a lengthy illness, served two terms as House majority leader before retiring in 1968. He was majority leader in 1946-48 and 1952-54 and served as minority leader until he was defeated in 1965 by Gerald Ford.

Perhaps Halleck's crowning achievement came in 1964 when he lined up the necessary votes in Congress to pass the historic Civil Rights Act of 1964.

The Act is the most far-reaching civil rights legislation since Reconstruction. It forbids discrimination based on race, color, religion, national origin and, in the case of employment, sex.

Many people depend upon compliance with the Act's provisions, which were designed to erase racial discrimination in most areas of American life, for their livelihood. Our nation would not be what it is today without the work of Halleck and others. His commitment to equality should not be forgotten.

DUI violation just around a corner

I have done it; you've probably done it, too. Almost anyone who drives, and is old enough to drink, has, at one time or another, driven while their faculties were impaired. You may not have blown a .10 on the breath test — maybe not even .05 — but your driving was impaired, yes indeed.

I spent Friday and Saturday nights with the police. I was on the other side of the radar gun, on the other side of the .357 Magnum, on the other side of the "Whaddido, Officer?"

During those two nights I saw how it is to be a law enforcement officer, wondering every time you approach a vehicle "Is this the guy who's going to kill me? Is this when my number comes up?" And during those two nights — a span of 13 hours actually on patrol — we caught three drunks. Three drunks, I have been led to understand, is a pretty good roundup for a weekend.

Friday night I rode with the Kansas Highway Patrol. At the end of the shift, we caught our drunk. He was speeding, one of the signs (along with unusually slow speed) that perk a policeman's interest. He was arrested and booked for Driving Under the Influence of Drugs and/or Alcohol. He blew a .085 on the ol' lungometer, not quite legally blotto but enough to hold for DUI. Don't bank on your score to beat the rap just because it's under .10.

RICH HARRIS
Collegian
Columnist

Saturday night I rode with the Riley County Police Department. While chasing one drunk (who got away from us, but was immediately picked up by another unit after our call so I count him as one of ours) we happened on a wreck. The car was stopped at the intersection of 17th Street and Poyntz Avenue, and both passenger-side tires were flat.

The officer approached the car, asked a few questions, and then asked the driver to get out of the car. The driver weaved as he walked, and it didn't take the trained eye of a policeman to know this bozo was polluted. He was cuffed, Miranda-ed, booked and busted.

Drunks kill thousands of people every year. Every night, in every state in the union, drunk drivers are being pulled over, arrested and removed from the road. But no one believes that all or most of them are getting caught. I have driven drunk, and I am one of the lucky ones. I've never killed anyone, never had a wreck, never even got caught...yet. Neither, perhaps, have you...yet.

How long will the run of luck we've had, you and I, go on? How long before our stupidity, our blind self-confidence gets us into trouble, killing trouble?

God knows, I don't want to kill anybody. I haven't driven drunk in a long while, but that does not ameliorate the fact that I have done so. It is criminally stupid, and a source of embarrassment to me. But I still have a clean slate — so do most of you. Let's stop while we still have that clean slate.

Please, don't drive if you've been drinking. Even if, as I heard so many times last weekend, it was, "only a couple beers." Any booze makes you a killer, my friend, and the life you save, like the ad says, may be your own.

One last thing. In the 10-46 (DUI) arrests we made, there were passengers. Male or female, if you're driving drunk and kill your date, your spouse, your amour, they don't get up when a director claps his hands and says, "Cut."

They stay dead. Very, very dead.

Society fashions adults from kids

I loved playing "grown-up" in grade school. When I'd come home from kindergarten, my mother would let me paw through her closet until I found one of those obnoxious dresses from the '60s with gargantuan fuchsia and orange flowers on an olive-green background.

After tossing a seashell necklace around my neck, I'd paint my face with rouge and lipstick, smear on purple fluorescent eyeshadow and model for my family. Naive me thought everyone outgrew that stage of childhood and became a mature adult.

But one night in Aggieville changed my philosophy. A friend of mine and I walked up behind two women about 14 or 15 years old standing at a fast-food counter.

The women tried to wear the latest in mod fashions, but they didn't look as chic as they'd hoped. One woman wore a baggy white shirt (that desperately needed pressing) over a faded turquoise blouse, while the other had a loose, red shirt belted at her waist with a black leather belt that covered half of her rib cage.

Their heavy, black knit stirrup pants clung to their calves, but were baggy everywhere else. On their feet were worn leather sandals. Gold chains with brightly colored lockets and dangle earrings completed their outfits.

woman, the youngsters took a drag on a cigarette before cocking their heads and blowing a stream of smoke out their nostrils. After each puff they'd casually flick ashes on the counter-top and toss their hair as if to say, "Look at me. I'm all grown up."

The entire picture was a sad commentary on American society. Today's youth think they have to skip the teen-age years and go straight into adulthood.

For some students the transition goes well. Some people become bored, because life isn't a challenge, and are eager to bypass high school and enter the "real" world — the adult world — with all its problems and responsibilities.

These are the high achievers, the "whiz kids," the young Howard Hugheses who make their mark early in life and either continue to excel and gain more fame and fortune or settle down to a peaceful life of poetry and gardening, interrupted only by an occasional interview with local media.

But many students have a difficult time making an abrupt jump into adulthood because they aren't ready. Pressure from their peers causes them to "grow up" faster and accept more responsibility than their maturity level will allow.

These are the drop-outs, the "flunkies," the people who are always moving from job to job to try and increase their standard of living, but only succeed in changing their job title. What they want out of life is the mystic and glamour of adulthood, but instead, they get the grimy reality of a 9-to-5 job.

Who but society is to blame for this sad state of affairs? It perpetuates the myth that children should forget about childhood, and just become adults.

The problem is that when people grow up too quickly, they can't deal with the responsibilities that accompany adulthood. Society has shirked its obligation to teach them that life isn't a bowl of cherries.

American society should slow down and teach its children to appreciate their childhood and teen-age years before becoming an adult.

Filth is irritating

Editor,
Last Friday, my family and I spent a thoroughly enjoyable night at McCain Auditorium viewing the K-State Players' production of "The Pirates of Penzance." It was an excellent performance from the players, the orchestra and all of the support crew.

The evening was marred, however, by the physical appearance of the approaches to McCain and the slippery, sandy floors in the balcony. Three weeks before, on our way to the Guthrie Theatre's "Great Expectations," we were by having to walk a gangplank to cross a muddy excavation. Last Friday our irritation turned into anger and resentment as we were forced to walk the same plank, shuffle over the same dirty, sandy sidewalks and pick our way around the same broken barricades.

Perhaps our administration and our facilities personnel have been preoccupied with salvaging a new sports coliseum and should be forgiven. Having been at this University for more than 13 years, I think I understand the situation, but I wonder what impression we made on the large numbers of out-of-towners who came to see the musical.

Perhaps the University of Kansas and Wichita State University are correct in their assessment of K-State's potential. Can we presume to be a major university when the arts are treated like this?

Paper misses show

Editor,

On Sunday, March 2, I spent the evening — along with several other members of the Manhattan and K-State community — at McCain Auditorium enjoying the fabulous presentation of "Cotton Patch Gospel." The performance was sponsored by several campus ministries.

The performance was here one year ago and went without much interest to the general public. It was brought back mostly for financial reasons. The music that accompanied the story was written by folk artist Harry Chapin. The music, story and performers were enjoyed by all. The most entertaining performance was by Russell Leander, who played everyone from Jesus and eight of his 12 disciples to Gov. Pilate (the four other disciples were played by the musicians, Special Consensus). I heard nothing but positive comments about the performance upon its conclusion.

You may ask, "Why am I writing this?" Well, I know there won't be an article in the Collegian on it. It seems that the only performances that get written about in the paper are the bigger and better out-of-town performances, productions by various departments in the University and lectures sponsored by other University organizations. Hardly any religious performances are written about by Collegian reporters. The only writing these performances receive is from people like myself.

I'm only sorry not everyone had the opportunity to enjoy the spectacular display of talent as well as a meaningful story line. I saw it when it came here last year and would see it again if given the opportunity. I recommend it to everyone.

Look at key issues

Editor,

With all of the many important issues concerning our campus and the world these days — such as the proposed $17 million (or is it $18 million or $19 million...) basketball barn, cheerleaders getting married and student government elections — a very dark and menacing problem has quietly crept into our midst.

What has really happened to Berke Breathed? Where is Opus? Where is John Cutter? Why have we really been reading reruns of "Bloom County" for the past few weeks?

Was Berke really injured in an accident? Was it an accident? These questions need to be, nay, must be answered. Don't the people of K-State care about the really important issues? Students of K-State unite.

Ruling is a victory

Editor,

Re: Patty Reinert's story, "Ruling to keep coliseum meetings open," in the Feb. 28 Collegian:

The attorney general's ruling on the closed Coliseum Program Committee meeting is a victory for all associated with the University. The Collegian is to be commended for letting the administration know it can't duck into the shadows whenever it embarrasses itself.

A few weeks ago I sent a note to the committee criticizing its gutless retreat behind closed doors. The panel responded to my complaint in a list of answers to student senators' questions. While the group's reason for conducting one closed meeting last year — consultation with legal counsel — was valid, the desire to have an uninhibited discussion was not. The Dec. 17 meeting was the second closed session. Committee members earlier met to discuss the high construction bids — out of public view.

In light of the attorney general's opinion, I think the time has come to set up an all-University committee — including local media representatives — to develop an open meetings policy. This move would only contribute to a greater understanding of a widely misunderstood law. Anything less would be an admission of bad faith on the part of the administration.

I already have indicated my interest in serving on such a committee to Student Senate Chairwoman Sally Traeger, who probably would make Senate appointments. Let's all work together to solve this problem before it gets out of hand.

Council allots $7,000 to upgrade area

By JEFFREY J. BIELSER
Collegian Reporter

City commissioners approved funding for Aggieville business district improvements Tuesday night.

After being turned down by the Riley County Commission, the Aggieville Business Association requested an additional $7,000 from the city commission for its business improvement project.

Before the county's refusal, the city had awarded $14,000 to the project aimed at improving Aggieville's appearance.

Jim Schottler, president of the association, said the balance of the denied $14,000 was comprised of voluntary contributions of money and labor from Aggieville merchants and budget cutting by the association.

He said because of the budget cuts, some of the projects planned by the association would be reduced or implemented over a longer period of time.

"We're asking the city to invest in Aggieville," Schottler said.

Mayor Suzanne Lindamood said she liked the idea of the association bringing the plan to the commission. She said the commission would have probably allocated the entire amount if they had been asked.

In other action, commissioners approved on a 3-1 vote a bid from Bayer Construction Co. Inc., Route 3, for phase two of the demolition for the Downtown Redevelopment and Southern Arterial projects — even though it was not the lowest bid for the job.

The winning bid of $35,856 was about $250 more than the lowest bid, submitted by a Topeka firm.

Commissioner Dave Fiser said the city was in a unique situation because the bids were so close and he wanted to keep the money in Manhattan.

City Attorney William Frost said there were no rules to force the city to accept the lower bid.

Lindamood said she voted against the winning bidder because "we (the city) have some obligation when we put out bids in good faith."

In a related matter, the commission accepted rights-of-way and easements for the Town East subdivision.

The subdivision, located north of U.S. Highway 24 and east of the K Mart/Food-4-Less Planned Unit Development, is a relocation project for the Town Center Mall development.

Commissioners also approved a new loading zone in front of Hull Business Machines Inc., 715 N. 12th St. The request had been made at the Feb. 18 commission meeting, but was tabled pending further studies.

Commissioner Rick Mann said he had talked to members of the Aggieville Business Association and they didn't have any trouble with the request.

Export trade policies subject of conference

By BECKY OHLDE
Agriculture Editor

The successes in agricultural export trade will be the topic of a nationally televised trade conference Thursday in Durland Hall 164.

The K-State portion begins at 9 a.m. Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture; Charles Deyoe, director of the International Grain Program; and Marc Johnson, head of the Department of Agricultural Economics, will talk about trade policy issues in Kansas, said Harvey Kiser, International Grain Program agricultural economist and K-State coordinator for the event.

"The televised portion will begin at 9:30 with the 12 panelists and the keynote speaker," he said.

The broadcast will be in four sessions: finance, marketing, transportation and government relations, Kiser said. A panel of three experts will discuss each area, followed by a question and answer session.

The panelists include: Dean Rusk, former U.S. secretary of state; Daniel Amstutz, undersecretary of agriculture dealing with international affairs; Richard Bell, president and chief executive officer of Riceland Foods; and Marshall Hahn, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the Georgia-Pacific Corporation, Kiser said.

The keynote speaker will be Kenneth Bader, chairman of the National Commission on Agricultural Trade and Export Policy and chief executive officer of the American Soybean Association, Kiser said.

"Bader will probably overview the program and speak on its importance to the U.S. He will be basing his comments on the findings of the National Commission on Agricultural Trade and Export Policy, of which he is a member," Kiser said.

City commissioners discuss community center

By The Collegian Staff

The possibility of using Luckey High School as a multi-purpose community center was presented to the Manhattan City Commission Tuesday afternoon during discussion of the proposed $3.7 million Quality of Life bond issue.

Terry DeWeese, director of parks and recreation, said the school building could be used as an alternative to renovating the community center at Fourth and Humboldt streets.

School officials have announced the Manhattan Catholic school system will discontinue high school classes after this semester.

DeWeese said the school building would be adequate to contain all activities currently held in the community center, as well as serving as office space for his department.

He said renovation costs of the community center would not be much different from acquiring the school.

City Manager Don Harmon said the 38-year-old school building needs various repairs costing about $450,000, but the improved school building would last longer than a renovated community center.

In other business, the commission agreed a separate bond issue for the renovation of the Wareham Theater into a performance theater and a visual arts display area would be desirable.

Lindamood said the proposal does not fit into the Quality of Life bond package, and asked that funding alternatives be studied.

The commission said the Manhattan Civic Theater should have a permanent home, for which the renovated Wareham Theater has been proposed.

The commission will look into other possible locations for the theater, including space in the Luckey High School building.

The commission took no action on finalizing a vote date.

Students learn car marketing strategy

By DAN ALLEN
Collegian Reporter

The strategy in marketing the new Ford Taurus was one of several marketing programs 15 marketing club members reviewed Friday during the regional marketing conference in St. Louis, Mo.

Students were taken through the process of the $3 billion plan for strategic differentiation of marketing the car.

"Product differentiation was stressed and the Ford Taurus was used as an example. They took us through the whole process of developing a new car, including the test markets," said Kathy Kurtz, senior in marketing and president of marketing club.

The theme for the 25th annual conference was "Creative Marketing in a Competitive Environment."

Kurtz said the emphasis was on creativity as far as advertising different products. The members of the University marketing club joined approximately 850 students from 46 other universities at the conference.

The conference featured six speakers, each of whom gave a 40-minute presentation. Kurtz said she thought William Conley, managing director of national accounts for Federal Express, was the most interesting.

Kurtz said Federal Express has been successful because it has created a strong identity and differentiated its product.

"Conley is a very sharp man. He went through the advertising process that they developed that has gained Federal Express national attention," she said.

Kurtz said Gilbert Rapaille, president of Petrole Inc., was also interesting.

"He combined the disciplines of semiology, psychology and cultural anthropology with a businessman's attention to practical concerns," she said.

Kurtz said Rapaille's presentation compared and contrasted the roles of American and French women and explained why the French woman is still the reference point of beauty and taste in the world.

Group to vote on pet policy for Jardine housing residents

By The Collegian Staff

A policy allowing the ownership of cats at Jardine Terrace will be voted on by the Jardine Terrace Mayors' Council at 7 tonight at Pittman Building.

The new policy allows the ownership of one cat per household and continues to ban the ownership of dogs at Jardine. Changes in the current policy were initially proposed by Tracy Schemper, freshman in business administration, who was informed by the Department of Housing she must get rid of her two cats or be evicted. Sue Nelson, freshman in veterinary medicine, is now the leader of the movement to change the Jardine pet policy.

In order to affect a change in the current pet policy, the mayors' council must receive a majority vote from the five voting members of the six-member council. If the mayors' council approves the change, the proposal must then go to the Housing Council in the Department of Housing for approval or rejection.

Gramm-Rudman cuts could affect Manhattan school system funding

By BECKY LUCAS
Collegian Reporter

Although there has been no lack in publicity concerning the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction legislation, local school officials have few specific dollar details on the impact.

But one prediction is that few programs will remain untouched with the anticipated cuts in federal funding.

"Eventually all programs" will be affected by the loss of funds after implementation of Gramm-Rudman, according to Hal Rowe, superintendent for Unified School District 383.

Rowe said specific programs affected could include the Chapter One reading program, nutritional funds for the district's food service, vocational education, Head Start and the Block Grant Program.

Rowe said because of projected funding reductions, "the board of education needs to make some priority decisions about the level of support each program is going to be receiving."

One example, Rowe said, would be the Head Start program, currently funded totally by federal revenues. He said the program would continue through the local district's juggling of funds.

He said he was not too concerned about the loss of funds in food service because increased costs for participants could offset funding reductions at the government level. But one program which holds a special priority because of its nature is the Chapter One reading program.

"This is a program for priority," Rowe said, "because reading is a basis for schools."

The program is devised to aid students who need extra help in mastering reading skills.

The board will begin budget discussions at tonight's meeting.

"They (the school board) need to be thinking about programs affected by Gramm-Rudman and how they fit into our priority," he said.

Rowe also said the loss of federal funds will result in "one more drain on local revenues," because of the need to make up lost federal aid from school district constituents.

The board meeting, which is open to the public, begins at 7:30 p.m.

LAWRENCE — "This win tonight makes everything that happened during this year seem meaningless. This was just a great win for us," said K-State women's basketball coach Matilda Mossman after her team defeated the Kansas Lady Jayhawks 69-65 Tuesday night.

"I think it has taken us this long to rebound from everything that has happened during the season," Mossman said. "I hope that our momentum and confidence that we have established continues."

Mossman was referring to the mid-season turmoil the Lady Cats went through in losing three former starters due to personal reasons.

"It (this win) was very satisfying," said K-State point guard Susan Green. "We have been through a lot this season. To me, this is the biggest win of the year for us."

No matter how big of a win it was for the Lady Cats, it was a win that moved them into the semifinals of the Big Eight Conference Women's Post-Season Tournament to be played Thursday night in Kansas City, Mo., against Colorado.

It was a hard fought game all of the way, with the biggest lead by either team being just eight points.

Kansas took an early lead midway through the first half, taking advantage of some K-State turnovers, but K-State used an 18-4 run in the final six minutes of the first half to take a 37-31 lead at intermission.

The Lady Jayhawks came out in the second half forcing the ball inside to their all-American candidate Vickie Adkins.

"We weren't getting anywhere in the first half, so we decided to force things inside, and it almost worked out," said Kansas Coach Marian Washington.

Adkins, who ended her career at KU with a game-high 32 points and 17 rebounds, scored 22 points in the second half.

"Adkins is a great athlete, and she earned every point she got tonight," Mossman said. "But I think the key was that the people around her did not get their regular output."

Mossman was stressing the fact that Adkins had 22 of the Lady Jayhawks 34 points in the second half.

K-State, meanwhile, was unable to score in the first 3½ minutes of the second half. That enabled KU to make a comeback to take a 38-37 lead before K-State scored six unanswered points to take a lead they would never relinquish.

Kansas was able to draw near several times, but on every occasion, K-State was able to fight off the Lady Jayhawks. Most of the time it was the outside shooting of Green and Thea Fitzpatrick that kept the Lady Cats out in front.

K-State led by six, 65-59, with 2:12 remaining before KU made one last run. KU got a 14-foot jumper from Lisa Dougherty and a baseline jumper from Adkins to pull within 67-65 with 46 seconds remaining.

K-State then came down and was unable to score. The Lady Jayhawks had one last chance to tie when they got the ball back with eight seconds left after Fitzpatrick missed the front end of a 1-1 situation. But Jackie Martin was called for traveling with six seconds remaining as she attempted to call timeout.

"It was a bad call," Washington said. "We had been calling timeout for a long time prior to that."

Kansas then fouled Green, who canned both ends of her bonus situation to ice the victory.

Amanda Holley led the Lady Cats with 18 points and 11 rebounds. Sue Leiding followed with 13 points and Carlisa Thomas and Green each added 12.

K-State continued their recent hot shooting with a 51.8 percent effort from the field.

New coach chosen for track team

By TONY CARBAJO
Sports Writer

The K-State men's and women's track and cross country teams have a new head coach to replace Steve Miller, who resigned the position earlier this year to take a full-time position as assistant athletic director.

John Capriotti, 30, who served the past two years as head coach of the women's track and cross country teams at Northwestern University and also assisted with the men's squads, was chosen to take over the vacated position.

Capriotti returns to K-State, where he served as an assistant under Miller in the track and cross country program from 1981-84.

While at K-State, he was in charge of the distance runners and served as recruiting coordinator. His first recruiting class at K-State in 1981 became Big Eight women's cross country champions.

His ties to Coach Miller do not stop there. He has served 17 years either coaching or running for Miller.

While attending Bloom Township High School in Chicago Heights, Ill., Capriotti was coached by Miller for four years. Upon graduation, he attended Lincolnland Community College in Springfield, Ill., where he was a four-time junior college all-American in the one-mile run and the three-mile run.

He then followed Miller to Cal Poly State in San Luis Obispo, Calif., where he was the captain of Miller's first national cross country championship team in 1978. While at Cal Poly State, Capriotti garnered all-American honors in cross country and the 5,000-meter run.

Following his graduation, he joined Miller as an assistant coach at Cal Poly State for one season before coming to K-State in 1981 with him. Before attending high school, Miller coached Capriotti in the Park District league in Chicago.

This past season at Northwestern, Capriotti guided the women's cross country squad to a fourth place national ranking and a 13th place finish in the 1985 National Collegiate Athletic Association Championships. The women's team finished second in the Big 10 Conference, while the men's squad was third last fall to mark Northwestern's highest conference finishes in cross country in 21 years.

Miller said that more than one-half of the current women's track and cross country roster is filled with runners that Capriotti recruited while he was at the University. Miller attested that recruiting was one of Capriotti's strong points.

"If you ask around the country, coaches will probably tell you John is one of the foremost recruiters in America," Miller said. "He is also recognized as having one of the really outstanding distance minds in the country."

"He is extremely well-organized and meticulous," Miller continued. "I am comfortable that John will carry on an already strong track and cross country tradition here, but I am also confident that he will do a great job to enhance that tradition."

Capriotti is expected to begin his duties at the University on July 1 of this year, when Miller relinquishes his duties.

AP's team includes Coleman

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Danny Manning, the gifted 6-foot-11 sophomore catalyst of No. 2 Kansas, and Norris Coleman, K-State's now-ineligible freshman, were both first-team selections to the Associated Press 1985-86 All-Big Eight Conference basketball team.

Manning was named to the first team on every ballot received from a panel of sportscasters and sportswriters who cover the Big Eight full time. A near-unanimous choice was Darryl "Choo" Kennedy, Oklahoma's forceful 6-5 junior forward.

Joining Kennedy and Manning on the first team are Jeff Hornacek, Iowa State's record-breaking senior point guard; Dave Hoppen of Nebraska, the third-leading scorer in Big Eight history whose senior season was shortened by knee surgery; and Coleman, the controversial 24-year-old Army veteran.

To many Big Eight fans, 1985-86 may be remembered as the year of Norris Coleman. The 6-8 Florida native was a complete unknown when he enrolled at K-State last fall. But in one controversy-filled season he established himself as one of the best players in the nation, leading every freshman in the country with a scoring average of 21.8.

Manning, the Big Eight newcomer of the year as a freshman, leaped into national prominence during a sophomore campaign that returned sellout crowds and dreams of a national championship to Allen Fieldhouse. Manning averaged exactly 20 points in 14 conference games.

KU managed to break Oklahoma's two-year grip on the regular season title, but it was not because Kennedy let the Sooners down. The muscular junior averaged almost 22 points and leads the Big Eight with 118 rebounds.

It is no coincidence that Iowa State's steady improvement has coincided with Hornacek's steady career as a point guard. The 6-3 senior again led the league in assists, finishing the conference season with 108 while averaging almost 14 points a game.

Another solid student is Hoppen, a 6-11 center and the only first-team repeater from 1984-85. He was averaging more than 22 points when his year ended with a knee injury in the sixth outing of the 14-game regular conference season.

'Cats to forfeit wins

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Big Eight interpretations committee ruled Tuesday that K-State must forfeit its four conference victories for using Norris Coleman, the 24-year-old freshman who has been declared ineligible.

K-State had beaten Colorado twice and Oklahoma State and Nebraska once.

The committee's action followed the Feb. 27 decision of the NCAA Administrative Committee which said Coleman was ineligible to play for the Wildcats since he did not have a 2.00 grade point following his graduation from high school in Jacksonville, Fla., in 1979.

In games not involving the K-State forfeits, Missouri and Oklahoma tied for fourth with 8-6 records in the regular season. By virtue of tournament procedures, a drawing was held for the fourth slot which went to Missouri.

The Big Eight announced seedings for the first round Friday of the Big Eight's postseason tournament are No. 4 Missouri vs. No. 5 Oklahoma at 12:10 p.m.; No. 1 Kansas vs. No. 8 K-State at 2:10 p.m.; No. 2 Iowa State vs. No. 7 Colorado at 6:10 and No. 3 Nebraska vs. No. 6 Oklahoma State at 8:10.

The Interpretations Committee is made up of Big Eight Commissioner Carl James and the chairman and vice chairman of the conference.

Basketball job draws more applicants

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

Two more names — those of Lon Kruger of Pan American and Bill Morse of Fort Hays State — have surfaced as being interested in the K-State head basketball coaching job.

Both Kruger and Morse have been in Manhattan within the past week for interviews with Athletic Director Larry Travis and members of the basketball coach search committee. Both men have indicated they would likely accept the job, if offered.

Members of the search committee include Kathryn Holen, assistant professor of curriculum and instruction and assistant faculty advisor to the Big Eight Conference board; Steven Johnson, sophomore in agricultural economics and student body president; Terry Ray, Manhattan businessman; Robert Snell, professor of civil engineering and faculty advisor to the Big Eight board; and William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services.

Kruger, a former standout player for K-State and also an assistant coach under Jack Hartman, listed a number of reasons for his interest in the job.

Kruger, Morse apply for Wildcat job

"I think a combination of things," he said. "I have a lot of good ties to K-State. The opportunity to move back to Manhattan, where I know a lot of people. I think it's a very good job."

Kruger said he was involved in a "good question and answer session (with Travis and the selection committee) concerning the student body, academics, recruiting and running a well-rounded program."

Kruger, head coach at Pan American for the last four years, has had a successful 1985-86 season at the Edinburg, Texas, school, currently standing 19-8. Pan American plays as an independent on the NCAA Division I level.

"Things are going real good," Kruger said. "I'm proud of the progress we've made. I'm just hoping for an opportunity to play in the post-season."

Kruger also was an assistant under Hartman on the 1983 gold-medal-winning United States basketball team at the Pan American Games in Caracas, Venezuela.

When asked if he had talked to Hartman about the K-State job, Kruger said, "Not directly. He knows it's a situation where I'll be interested regardless. I have a lot of K-State feelings."

Even though he has not been offered the job as of yet, Kruger said he has been making contacts with prospective Wildcat recruits, including All-State guard Steve Henson of McPherson High School, regarded by many as the top prospect in Kansas this season.

"I've been following Steve's progress," Kruger said. "We'd definitely be interested in keeping him in state."

Kruger said the decision whether to hire him or not would be up to the selection committee from this point and that he will not be in Manhattan for another interview.

Morse, in his fourth year at Fort Hays State, indicated he was satisfied with his current job, but said he would consider accepting the K-State job, if offered to him.

Haymaker 9, SAE win intramural title games

By The Collegian Staff

Intramural basketball finals began Tuesday night at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, as residence hall and fraternity division championships were decided.

Haymaker 9 defeated Goodnow Terrace for the men's residence hall championship, while Sigma Alpha Epsilon downed Theta Xi in the fraternity division.

Haymaker 9 proved to be more than Goodnow Terrace could handle, winning 54-33.

Randy Lewis of Haymaker 9 thought the game would be a lot closer, but was glad his team came out on top.

"We just played much better tonight. The officiating was really good," Lewis said.

Now Haymaker 9 must face the SAEs tonight at 7 to see who plays the winner of the independent division in the All-University championship game Thursday night at 7.

The independent title game will be played tonight at 9.

"We are looking forward to playing the SAEs, but it will be tough. Some of our guys are leaving for spring break and won't be able to play," Lewis said.

The SAEs overcame an early second-half comeback by the Theta Xi to win, 55-43.

The SAEs scored the first four points and never trailed by more than one point to take a 32-23 lead at halftime.

Sid Thomas made four free throws and brothers Kelly and Kipp Schoen added a basket each to bring the Theta Xi to within one point at 32-31, early in the second half.

However, a Theta Xi turnover and a pair of long jump shots by SAE Brent Douglas helped put the SAEs out in front to stay midway through the half, 36-31. From that point, the Theta Xi could get no closer than five points the rest of the game.

"It's hard to beat a team that shoots that well," Theta Xi coach Barry Hofer said of the SAEs. "It feels good to win this one," SAE Mike Fiser said. "This win gave us our fifth year of going without a loss in fraternity competition. I think our team will be ready to play again Thursday night."

The SAEs used a match-up zone to limit the Theta Xi offense throughout the game.

The SAEs reached the finals with a semifinal win over Pi Kappa Alpha.

Female pianist plays essential role for 9 years in glee club leadership

By ANGIE SCHUMAKER
Collegian Reporter

When Pam Brown, senior in management, began playing the piano for the Men's Glee Club in 1977, she had no idea that nine years later she would still hold the same position.

Nine years seems like a lot of time to accompany a group, Brown said, but she enjoys working with Men's Glee.

"I feel like it's partly mine," she said. "I conduct some sectionals (small group rehearsals), and I take a lot more responsibility now that I'm older."

Bert Frost, senior in marketing and president of Men's Glee, said Brown is an important member of the group.

"She's a lot of fun, and she's just like one of us," he said. "I don't know what we'd do without her. She's a great gal and she doesn't get the recognition she deserves."

"When I was a music major my freshman year, a friend of mine told me there was an opening (as a piano player for Men's Glee) and he said I'd be perfect for it," she said.

She began accompanying Men's Glee while she was a student and continued with the group even through the four-year span in which she did not attend the University.

During that time, she worked at a local supermarket and used her lunch breaks to play for Men's Glee.

"While I was out of school, it kept me in touch with what was going on," she said.

Gerald Polich, associate professor of music and conductor of Men's Glee, was an influence in Brown's decision to remain the accompanist for nine years.

"If it wasn't for him, I probably wouldn't have stuck around this long," she said.

Brown said Polich and the other members of Men's Glee make her feel like she is a part of the group.

"If they hassle me, I just hassle them right back," she said. "We've got a really neat relationship, and it's gotten a lot neater through the years."

Brown's contributions to Men's Glee do not stop with her piano playing. On each holiday, she brings something for the entire group.

Brown said the job does take time. The glee club rehearses approximately four times per week for an hour, but she said she thoroughly enjoys it.

"I love it," she said. "It always brightens my day. If I've had a bad test or something, I can go in and I know they'll cheer me up. The rest of the day is great."

Brown will accompany the glee club on its trip to the International Music Council at Harvard University in Cambridge, Mass., on Thursday through March 16. The first stop for the group is in Washington, D.C., where it will perform in the Senate Caucus Room for alumni. The group will also perform for alumni in New York before traveling to Harvard.

"Harvard will be a good experience for us," Brown said.

Betting may increase research funds for college

By SAM HOSTETTLER
Collegian Reporter

The impact of pari-mutuel wagering will not only affect the state of Kansas, but will also benefit the College of Veterinary Medicine.

There are a number of ways the College of Veterinary Medicine will benefit if the pari-mutuel wagering law passes, said James Coffman, dean of the college.

"One specific way the College of Veterinary Medicine will benefit is through the economic aspects of brood mare units," Coffman said. "This has a definite magnitude on the horse business."

"For an investor to profit from horse breeding, a yearling must sell for up to $10,000 or more," he said. "A mare then has to pay for itself with at least two yearlings, possibly three. This means economically viable mare units average $20,000 to $25,000 and with a weanling and yearling in the pipeline this will have the same economic impact as approximately 40 commercial cows."

Pari-mutuel wagering will also help the veterinary medicine school through the retention of yearlings. This will increase the need of specialized services for research and for undergraduate teachers.

Coffman said he believes the dog-racing industry will affect the school in the same way.

A major area of impact will be how much revenue is going to be generated with the use of pari-mutuel wagering, he said. This will benefit the school because a small percentage would be set aside for research and development.

"Theoretically, if Kansas should get $5 million to $6 million in share of handle for the first five years and 1 percent of the state's share goes to the school for research and development, this will have a dramatic effect to stabilize research productivity in the college," said Coffman.

The "handle" is the money changing hands through windows at all the race tracks.

Coffman said if Kansas voters should pass the pari-mutuel wagering law, an ideal model to look at would be the state of Nebraska.

"Horse racing is the major industry in the state of Nebraska and they run it very cleanly," Coffman said. "It is operated by a non-profit organization, the Knights of AK-SAR-BEN, and they do a lot of philanthropic things, such as things for education."

"Nebraska's system also has an additional spin-off for research. Kansas' resolution is stated this way," he said.

Not only will the pari-mutuel wagering law help the veterinary medicine school, it will also help the state of Kansas as a whole, said Rep. Ed Rolfs, R-Junction City.

"With pari-mutuel wagering in the state of Kansas, not as many people will be driving to Nebraska to go to the horse races," Rolfs said. "This will keep a great deal of money in the state. A maximum of $10 million could come into the Kansas Treasury."

This bill will also have a positive image on the state, Rolfs said.

"Pari-mutuel wagering will make the state of Kansas not look as backwards," he said.

The names of the finalists will not be made public by the committee or the regents, Freiman said.

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the regents, said the regents will interview the finalists on March 21 and 22 at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City. The regents will name the president at the conclusion of those meetings, Freiman said.

Duane Acker, 54, will leave his post as president of K-State June 30, bringing his 11-year term to an end. Acker has not finalized his plans, but is being considered for a position in the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The Wichita Eagle-Beacon reported in February the field had been narrowed to nine men. On Feb. 18, John Slaughter, chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park and a semifinalist, withdrew his name.

The president will be drawn from the remaining seven candidates. They are: John Campbell, dean of the College of Agriculture at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana; Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering at K-State; Greg O'Brien, provost at the University of South Florida in Tampa; Charles Sidman, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Florida in Gainesville; John La Tourette, provost and vice president for academic affairs at Northern Illinois University in Dekalb; Jon Wefald, chancellor of the Minnesota seven-school state university system; and William Mobley, dean of the College of Business Administration at Texas A&M University at College Station.

The search committee is composed of three students, three faculty, six alumni, and one representative from the regents, University administration and dean's council.

The presidential search is funded by a $25,000 appropriation from the Kansas Legislature and an additional $25,000 from the KSU Foundation.

Lunchbag Theater class gives students chance to act, direct

By MARCIA SULLIVAN
Collegian Reporter

There still may be no such thing as a free lunch, but those interested in having a little piece of theater for dessert can be served at the Lunchbag Theater.

Tuesday, a performance of "Chocolate Cake," a play by Mary Gallagher, was given in the Purple Masque Theatre. The performance was part of Lunchbag Theater, a course offered by the Department of Speech.

"This particular script was very relevant," said Deni Good, graduate student in theater and director of "Chocolate Cake." "The script is about an extremely widespread disease (bulimia) and uses humor along with seriousness to show what women go through."

The cast of "Chocolate Cake" consisted of Janet Harman, junior in theater, and Kelli Wondra, senior in theater.

"Because of the number of props and the eating and drinking on stage, there is a greater chance something can go wrong," said Wondra.

Although there is less material in the one-act plays to work with, they still use a lot of rehearsal time to focus sharply on the characters, she said.

The coursework in Lunchbag Theater is designed for theater students who are interested in acting in or directing one-act plays. The course not only lends itself to experience for the students, but provides free entertainment to those interested in spending their lunch hour watching the production.

The class has been offered since 1977, when Lew Shelton, associate professor and director of theater, implemented the class as a workshop in acting and directing. Shelton said it has given the students incentive to be able to work in front of an audience.

"We hope to give them an experience that is a little different than being in a normal production," Shelton said. "With lunchbag, we're able to do experimentation — do one-acts that wouldn't ordinarily be done in our major productions." Shelton said it gives students a chance to see the work of one-act playwrights discussed in class.

This semester there are three directors and four actors in the class. There are three remaining performances, April 3, 17 and May 1. Scripts for the remaining productions have yet to be chosen. Shelton said people should watch for posters and announcements concerning the productions.

"I am in a supervisory position to organize the productions and help the directors select their scripts," Shelton said.

Class member Barry Pearson, graduate student in theater, said he likes the freedom that accompanies lunchbag.

"Lunchbag is one of the best opportunities for directors and actors to practice their craft void of very few restrictions," Pearson said. "Most relationships between peers are healthy. If you can work with peers in an acting and directing relationship you can work with anyone."

Staff/Steve Rasmussen

Janet Harman, junior in theater, as JoEllen Fitzer, and Kelli Wondra, senior in theater, as Delia Baron, perform the play "Chocolate Cake," in a Lunchbag Theatre presentation Tuesday in the Purple Masque Theatre.

Peking Acrobats travel to McCain

By The Collegian Staff

McCain Auditorium will present, direct from the People's Republic of China, the Peking Acrobats in an 8 p.m. performance Thursday.

The Peking Acrobats offer a repertoire rich in feats of balancing and daring, as well as strength. One of the most terrifying acts is performed with a 17-kilogram broadsword — an ancient weapon — which is twirled like a baton.

The acrobats, who will travel to more than 100 cities in the United States on their first tour in seven years, were brought to the United States from the Chinese Performing Arts Agency in Peking. The agency controls all artistic enterprise in China and agreed to a U.S. tour to promote friendship and goodwill in American communities.

There are 25 acrobats, most under the age of 21, in the troupe. The Peking Acrobats were formed in 1956 in Changchun, in the northern province of Ji Lin.

Tickets for the Peking Acrobats are available at the McCain Box Office, 532-6428. Ticket prices are $12, $13 and $14 for the general public, and $6, $7 and $8 for students and senior citizens.

House panels vote to block $100 million aid to Contras

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Two House panels, ignoring President Reagan's argument that the United States must be spared sending "our own American boys" to Nicaragua, voted Wednesday to recommend against giving $100 million to rebels fighting the Sandinista government.

The House Intelligence Committee voted 9-7 against the aid package. A short time later, the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on the Western Hemisphere voted 8-5 against the proposal.

The two sets of votes in the Democratic-controlled panels marked the opening salvo in legislative battles over Reagan's proposal. The votes came shortly after Reagan said that lawmakers faced "a historic decision."

Nine of the intelligence committee's 10 Democrats voted against the proposal, with only Rep. Dan Daniel of Virginia joining with the Republicans. Despite the committee's opposition, however, the request for $70 million military aid and $30 million logistical aid must still go to the House floor.

Reagan earlier had told a White House audience that "if we give them the aid they need, the Nicaraguan people can win this battle for freedom on their own. American troops have not been asked for and are not needed."

Reagan's appeal came shortly before the two panels were scheduled to vote on the request, which includes $70 million in

Aquino frees rebel prisoners

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — President Corazon Aquino freed two former communist rebel leaders Wednesday despite reservations from the military, and paid her first visit to the palace in which Ferdinand E. Marcos lived for 20 years.

Meanwhile, attorney Lupino Lazaro said two men cleared in the 1983 murder of Aquino's husband, Benigno, had given sworn statements admitting involvement and implicating the former president, his wife Imelda and four former Cabinet ministers. Gen. Fabian C. Ver, Marcos' military commander, was among the 26 people acquitted.

"I'm sorry for the delay," Aquino told Jose Maria Sison and Bernabe

Buscayno when they were ushered into her temporary office less than an hour after being freed from military prisons. Two alleged members of a rebel assassination squad also were released.

Aquino had pledged to free all political prisoners held by Marcos, who fled the country a week ago, and the four were the last on the list. Most of the prisoners have not yet gone home because of required medical checkups and paper work.

Presidential spokesman Rene Saguisag said the four men were released after a "candid, cordial, and vigorous exchange of views" with military commanders, worried that they would take up arms again. Her top military advisers had argued the four men should not be freed unconditionally.

Sison acknowledged at a news conference a few hours after his release that he founded the Communist Party of the Philippines in 1968 and led the armed struggle against the Marcos government until his capture in November 1977. He had refused throughout his imprisonment to answer questions about his party role.

Buscayno, who was captured in August 1976, was the alleged commander of the party's New People's Army guerrillas and was known as Commander Dante.

The two other men released were Alexander Birondo and Ruben Alegre. Both were arrested within the past two years.

Senate committee approves increase in student salaries

By BECKY MARTIN
Collegian Reporter

The Senate Ways and Means Committee approved a 4 percent increase in student salaries last week, said Chris Graves, executive director of the Associated Students of Kansas.

The Board of Regents budget, supported by the student lobbying organization ASK, included a request for an increase in both work-study and student salaries, but in the end only offered a choice of the two, said Kevin Elmore, senior in computer science and ASK campus director.

When offered the choice, Graves opted for work-study but was instead given the student salary increase, which is intended for use in campus payroll, Elmore said.

"In student funds this means there will be an increase in the money available for salaries in non-work-study positions, which in turn will enable K-State to create more jobs for students who are not eligible for work-study," Elmore said.

Work-study and student salaries are the top priorities of ASK, he said.

"With other forms of financial aid being cut, more emphasis will be placed on student employment," he said.

K-State's work-study program will lose $74,916 as a direct result of the implementation of the Gramm-Rudman legislation, said Robert Evans, director of student financial aid.

"The increase in student salaries will help ease the crunch that we're under," Evans said. "Just because it's a four percent increase in student salaries it doesn't go directly to each student. It goes to the student salary budget," he said.

Included in the regents' budget request was also a merit pay pool, Elmore said, which would provide funds for students who return to campus jobs each year and who are forced to keep working for minimum wage because of lack of money.

According to ASK's platform, locking students into minimum wage while raising tuition and other college costs forces students to rely more heavily on student loans, or to compete for limited need-based grants.

"We would have liked to see a greater increase in the student salary wage base and were disappointed that once again the committee refused to abide by ASK's request to create a student salaries merit pool, but given the increases in other items in the system-wide request by the committee, we were treated fairly," Graves said.

Elmore said the proposals still have a few more steps to go through before anything is definite.

"Considering the economic climate, we're happy with what's been accomplished so far but we are still going to fight for more, but we also can't ask for money that's just not there," Elmore said.

Rathbone not among presidential finalists

By The Collegian Staff

Two of the seven candidates in the running for the K-State presidency, an Illinois educator and Dean of the College of Engineering Donald Rathbone, are not among the group of finalists.

Although Rathbone would not comment personally on his candidacy, Kenneth Gowdy, associate dean of the engineering, said he was disappointed the dean did not make the final list of three to five candidates.

"Certainly, it is a severe disappointment. He is a person with a great many talents. The College of Engineering has benefited greatly during the past 10 or 12 years under his leadership," Gowdy said.

John La Tourette, provost and vice president for academic affairs at Northern Illinois University in Dekalb, said Wednesday he respects the Presidential Search Committee's decision.

"I was very much interested in the position. As you know the search process is very individualized and I just want to respect the judgment of the committee," La Tourette said.

Following a meeting of the 15-member committee in Topeka on Sunday, Chairman Jerome Frieman notified the eight remaining candidates of their status. Frieman, associate professor of psychology, has declined to identify the finalists for the job that currently pays $92,000 a year. The regents will interview the finalists and make a selection on March 22.

Robert Rutford, president of the University of Texas at Dallas, narrowed the list to seven on Tuesday when he announced he would not continue as a candidate. On Feb. 18, John Slaughter, chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park and reportedly among a group of nine semifinalists, withdrew his name.

The committee is composed of six alumni, three students and faculty and one representative from the regents, University and dean's council.

Committee works to calm AIDS fear

By LEANNE STOWE
Campus Editor

Social fear of acquired immune deficiency syndrome is as much of an issue as the disease itself, said Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center, at the University AIDS policy subcommittee meeting Tuesday.

"We're dealing with two epidemics here; one is the disease and one is the hysteria," Tout said.

Draft proposals for the University AIDS policy were discussed during the subcommittee meeting. The original committee was split into two subcommittees after it was decided that both education needs and policy were of concern and needed to be addressed individually.

The subcommittee discussed an AIDS policy outline which consists of an introduction, medical treatment for students, psychological services and counseling, participation in campus activities, employment and a standing committee.

Earl Nolting, assistant vice president and dean of students, discussed the introduction draft which includes information on AIDS hysteria, the nature of AIDS, methods of contraction and the educational program.

Psychological services and counseling, a draft proposal by Dr. Jeff Martin, psychologist intern at Lafene Mental Health, were also discussed. The proposal will encourage services for patients and others, and will address the issue of confidentiality.

His draft reads in part, "The decision of what information to enter into the student's counseling or mental health file is to be open to the discretion of the counselor/therapist and the client."

Participation in campus activities will be encouraged, however a concern was raised about subsection B, living units. Tout questioned the practice of giving the student an individual room which was proposed in the draft, prepared by Tom Frith, director of the Department of Housing.

"Would others wonder why someone got an individual room?" Tout asked.

"The question would never arise," Frith said. "There are about 248 single rooms now. No one ever questions it."

According to the draft, the director of housing will be responsible for education programs and responses to parental inquiries. The department also will conduct an educational program in the spring for staff members who might have personal contact with AIDS victims.

The committee also discussed the future of the AIDS issue and how it will be handled. The draft for the standing committee would create two committees.

The first may be called the "University Committee on Student Health (AIDS, ARC, HLTV-III)," Nolting said.

It would, according to the draft, be made up of the director of Lafene Health Center, the director of the Mental Health Clinic or the director of the Counseling Center, the director of housing or Greek Affairs, a faculty representative, a student representative, the director of University Relations, the University attorney and the dean of students.

This committee, according to the draft, would ensure that the programs are implemented. The second committee would consist of a Lafene physician, the director of the Mental Health Clinic or the director of the counseling center, the director of housing and the dean of students.

The second committee would deal with "special or unique" problems in the University, Nolting said.

Martin said he wants a member of the homosexual community to be on the first committee task force. He said he believes it would help to have someone on the committee who is sensitive to those concerns.

Nolting suggested a member of the Gay and Lesbian Resource Center, or the faculty representative of the group be available for consultation about issues.

"We could advertise, interview...we might have someone come forward. I think we need a liaison (with the gay community)," he said.

Tout said the committee would have to be careful not to tag someone according to their sexual preference. Dorothy Thompson, assistant University attorney, said she believes the homosexual community on campus should have an opportunity to read the policy.

Nolting said he attempted to contact William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, about the role of the committee after a final draft of the policy is formed, but was unable to contact him.

According to Martin's draft statement, AIDS is detected in two primary high risk groups: sexually active homosexual and bisexual men — 73 percent — and present or past abusers of intravenous drugs — 17 percent.

"Coupling these already socially disenfranchised individuals with a disease of still uncertain properties and adding unprecedented coverage by the national news media has each contributed to the existence of a high degree of fear, prejudice and misin-

Swedish authorities receive sketch

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — A new witness has given police a sketch of a man suspected of assassinating Prime Minister Olof Palme, and West German experts arrived to help in the investigation, police said Wednesday.

Police Commissioner Hans Holmer said the witness was a professional draftsman who "bumped into" a man shortly after Palme was killed late Friday on a sidewalk in downtown Stockholm.

He said the witness encountered the suspect near the spot where police believe at least one accomplice was waiting with a getaway car.

"The time element is correct," Holmer said at a news conference. "This man can be the killer."

Holmer said the woman was able to describe the man in detail. Earlier witness reports were more vague, describing the man as 35 to 45 years old, about 5-foot-8 and wearing dark clothing, police said.

Palme, 59, a Socialist Democrat in his fourth term as prime minister, was shot as he walked home from a movie with his 55-year-old wife, Lisbet, who was grazed by a bullet and slightly injured.

Officers of West Germany's Federal Criminal Office in Wiesbaden arrived in Stockholm on Wednesday, Holmer said. The agency said its officers brought with them a special camera that superimposes images to build a composite picture of a suspect.

Irish frost harms shamrock crops

DUBLIN, Ireland — With St. Patrick's Day less than two weeks away, the Irish are having trouble finding three-leaved clover — the shamrock, national emblem of the Emerald Isle.

The coldest February in nearly 40 years has endangered this year's shamrock growth, and suppliers worry there will be few available St. Patrick's Day, March 17.

"There is no sign of shamrock anywhere," said Jim Maher, leader of the County Tipperary Young Farmers' organization.

Among the most fretful are operators of tour companies who want to ensure that 4,000 American tourists expected for the national holiday will have enough clover sprigs for the traditional wearing of the green.

For two weeks the temperature rarely reached freezing, but it rose above 50 Tuesday and Wednesday.

Wolf Creek out producing plants

BURLINGTON — The Wolf Creek nuclear power plant produced more electricity during its first six months of commercial operation than any other nuclear plant in the United States, the major owners of the plant said Wednesday.

The plant, which went into commercial operation Sept. 3, had generated 4.7 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity when it reached the midpoint of its first year of operation Monday, according to Kansas City Power & Light Co. and Kansas Gas and Electric. Each utility owns 47 percent of the plant.

The utilities said a survey of the early operating statistics for all 99 nuclear reactors operating in the United States show Wolf Creek's six-month performance No. 1. Ronn Smith, a KG&E spokesman, said the previous record was established by Diablo Canyon 1 in California, which generated 4.37 billion kilowatt-hours.

Officials of the two companies said Wolf Creek produced electricity 96.2 percent of the time during its first six months, including 134 consecutive days without interruption, and operated at 91.9 percent of its generating capacity.

Katy Railroad lays off 40 workers

PARSONS — The Katy Railroad has temporarily laid off about 40 employees, according to president Harold Gastler.

He said the layoffs were about evenly divided between the railroad's operations in Parsons and Denison, Texas, but also involved a few workers elsewhere in the Missouri-Kansas-Texas Railroad system.

Gastler, who said he did not know the exact number of workers involved, said the layoffs were ordered by Tommy Todd, vice president of operations.

"Business is down right now," Gastler said from his office in Denison. "These are minor adjustments until the grain is moving again. Todd's got to adjust the operations with the expenses."

Contractors file Stealth fighter bids

WASHINGTON — Seven major defense contractors filed first-round bids Wednesday to build a new radar-evading Stealth fighter the Air Force hopes will rule the skies by the mid-1990s.

The Air Force wants the plane, dubbed the Advanced Tactical Fighter, to replace the F-15, a medium-range dogfighter that first flew in 1972. A later version of the plane may ultimately take the place of the F-16 for striking ground targets, and the Navy is watching to see whether the new fighter can take the place of the F-14s that protect U.S. ships at sea.

"It's the only new fighter program that we see all the way into the distant future," said Herbert F. Rogers, general manager of General Dynamics Corp.'s F-16 plant in Fort Worth, Texas.

General Dynamics and the other six contractors submitted 3,000-page technical documents two weeks ago, backed by financial proposals Wednesday, trying to show the Air Force they can build 750 new fighters for $35 million apiece.

The purpose of the ATF is to knock out enemy fighters and airborne warning and control systems planes, clearing the air for other U.S. aircraft and reconnaissance craft, and protecting ground forces, said Col. Albert C. Piccirillo, director of the Air Force program to develop the new fighter.

"The mission is air superiority," said Piccirillo, interviewed by telephone in his office at the Wright-Patterson Air Force Base near Dayton, Ohio. "It is going to fly supersonic, very high, very fast, very far."

New homes sales climb 4.4 percent

WASHINGTON — Sales of new homes climbed 4.4 percent in January to their highest level in two years as the housing industry enjoyed a boom spurred by falling mortgage interest rates, the government reported Wednesday.

The Commerce Department said new single-family homes were sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 753,000 units in January, the best monthly showing since December 1983.

The January sales pace was 20 percent higher than a year ago and was just one of a number of signals pointing to a sharp revival in housing activity.

Construction of new homes has jumped by 26 percent since November. Starts hit an annual rate of 2.09 million units in January while sales of existing single-family homes rose to 3.3 million units, their highest levels in seven years.

The surge in activity has come from sizable declines in mortgage interest rates in recent months. Lenders in some parts of the country are offering mortgages below 10 percent, something that hasn't happened since October 1978.

PEOPLE

Residents victorious over landlord

NEW YORK — Tenants of a Manhattan building say it was "David defeating Goliath" in their victory over real estate magnate Donald J. Trump for the right to stay in their apartments.

The tenants of the 15-story building next to Central Park had struggled for five years to avoid eviction by Trump, who planned to demolish the building and construct a new one.

Trump said Tuesday that construction would take too long. Instead, he will renovate the building as 26 luxury apartments, allowing current tenants to pay existing rents.

"It's a major victory, akin to David defeating Goliath," said tenant leader John Moore.

But Trump said he could take advantage of a strong real estate market by renovating the building, and disagreed that his change of plans was a victory for the tenants.

Trump, who bought the building in 1981, has been fighting state charges of harassing tenants for more than a year.

Eastwood finds humor in cartoons

CARMEL, Calif. — Clint Eastwood may have made Garry Trudeau's day. He's not upset at all by the cartoonist's current Doonesbury strips poking fun at his bid for mayor.

"Naw, I thought they were funny," said the steely star of Westerns and the "Dirty Harry" detective series. "They were cute."

Eastwood, a Republican mayoral candidate in Carmel, saw all six panels scheduled to run through Saturday before they started appearing on Monday.

Eastwood says Trudeau is "kind of going on that Dirty Harry-esque kind of theme, even right up to 'make my night,'" a takeoff on Dirty Harry's "Go ahead, make my day!" The line will appear in Saturday's strip.

Meats judging teams win in Texas contest

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's meats judging teams swept the Houston Livestock Show meats judging contest over the weekend bringing home 11 trophies and five plaques.

The meats, wool and livestock judging teams competed Friday and Saturday in the show's judging contests.

The meats "purple" team, Bret Fox, junior in animal sciences and industry; Susan Kimbell and Alan Waggoner, seniors in animal sciences and industry; and Matt Wineinger, sophomore in animal sciences and industry; took honors in the meats contest by winning the overall competition.

The meats "white" team, Joyce Roux and Rex Harrison, seniors in animal sciences and industry; and Howard Woodbury and Sharon Visser, sophomores in animal sciences and industry; placed seventh in the overall contest.

In the overall contest, Fox was the high individual, Harrison was fourth, Wineinger was seventh and Kimbell tied for 10th.

The purple team placed first and the white team placed sixth in the specification cuts class, with Fox tying for second place individual.

In the beef grading class, the purple team placed fourth and the white team placed fifth. Fox tied for second and Harrison was the high individual in the class.

Wineinger was the high individual in the pork judging class. The purple team placed first and the white team placed eighth in that class.

The purple team placed seventh in lamb judging and first in beef judging. The white team placed sixth in beef judging. Fox tied for fifth high individual.

In combined beef grading and beef judging the purple team placed first and Fox was the high individual.

Waggoner was the high individual in total scoring and the purple team was first. Wineinger was the high individual in total reasons.

The wool team placed fifth in its contest. Team members were Rod Beam, John Ericson and Blake Flanders, seniors in animal sciences and industry; and Curtis Willems, sophomore in agriculture education.

The livestock judging team placings have not yet been determined because of a computer error.

House accepts live-abortion provision

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The state would be given custody of any child born live as the result of an attempted abortion, under terms of a bill that won first-round approval Wednesday in the Kansas House.

The post-abortion language was amended into an otherwise uncontroversial measure requiring judges to determine that reasonable efforts have been made to prevent the removal of children from their homes in abuse or neglect cases.

The chamber voted 69-43 to include the abortion provision after a 30-minute round of parliamentary maneuvering. Rep. Jerry Friedeman, R-Great Bend, promoted the successful amendment saying he had been told a bill he introduced that contains similar language would not receive a committee hearing this session.

"We're not talking about a fetus," Friedeman said. "We're talking about a live person."

Under the amendment, any child born as the result of an attempted abortion "who exhibits any sign of a live birth ... shall be considered a child in need of care" by state law and placed under the custody of the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services.

In other action Wednesday, the House tentatively approved bills that would require restaurants with seating for 50 or more customers to provide a non-smoking area upon request, and require the state welfare agency to conduct hearings anytime an adult care home applies to become a home for the mentally ill.

Opponents of adding the post-abortion language, such as Reps. Judith Reynolds and Joan Wagnon, both D-Topeka, said the provision had little relationship to the rest of the bill.

"This just shows how relentless the proponents of this are," said Wagnon, who added there often are compelling reasons that some women wait until late in the pregnancy to have an abortion. She said some of the late-pregnancy abortions are for women who are mentally retarded.

However, the chairman of the House Rules Committee, Rep. Keith Roe, R-Mankato, ruled the amendment was germane and the chamber upheld his ruling on a vote of 57-55.

The turning point in debate came when Rep. Bill Reardon, D-Kansas City, said he believed Friedeman's amendment had little to do with other abortion issues.

"I think it's a reasonable thing to do and I don't think it has anything to do with whether you support abortion or not," Reardon said.

Reardon said existing law is unclear about what to do with a baby born as the result of an abortion procedure. He said live births are sometimes occur when abortions are performed late in pregnancy by using a salt solution.

"Saline solution abortions are not that uncommon," Reardon said. "They happen a lot."

Reardon added that when a live birth takes place during such a procedure, "there is a walking away" from the infant because often, no one wants to take responsibility. He added that pro-abortion groups have never contended that children do not have civil rights after they are alive outside the mother's body.

The smoking proposal would not require restaurants to set aside permanent smoke-free areas but would mandate that food service businesses that seat 50 or more people display signs that read, "Non-Smoking Area Available Upon Request," the bill's sponsor, Rep. Sandy Duncan, told the chamber.

Duncan, R-Wichita, said the measure would require restaurants to operate non-smoking sections that would enlarge or decrease in size according to demand, similar to the way airlines handle smoke-free areas.

However, Rep. Ron Fox, R-Prairie Village and a smoker, criticized the proposal by saying cities already have the power to enforce smoking regulations and the state should allow municipal governments to decide smoking issues.

The sponsor of the care home measure, Rep. Robert Wunch, R-Kingman, said his bill would not impose many additional restrictions on facilities that have applied for participation in the Medical Assistance Program as an intermediate care facility for mental health.

But Wunch said that his bill would require a public hearing before the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services approves such an application. He said the bill stems from a care home in his district that changed its status without the opportunity for area residents to comment.

"This is merely to inform the public," Wunch said.

Subcommittee develops AIDS education policy

By The Collegian Staff

The AIDS Educational Subcommittee met Wednesday to finalize recommendations on spreading current, reliable information to increase general "awareness" of the disease and to help prevent and control acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

More than 20 groups were identified as in need of AIDS education, including University administrators and faculty, residence hall and Greek housing staff, food handlers and other concerned groups.

The committee also suggested several means by which the target individuals could receive information. Among the recommendations were workshops, pamphlets, a University AIDS hotline and a newsletter.

The committee recommended the establishment of a University AIDS educational resource fund to cover the costs of educational materials.

U-Learn and FONE Crisis Center were identified as campus information centers that could answer confidential questions on request. A "DIAL" tape was also suggested to provide information about AIDS.

"You wouldn't see somebody walk over and pick up a pamphlet on AIDS in the middle of the Union," said Paul Nelson, sophomore in pre-nursing and staff member of FONE Crisis Center, emphasizing the need for confidentiality.

People with expertise on AIDS who could be sources of information were identified. These resource people include representatives from the Kansas State Health Department Infectious Disease Control, Lafene Health Center and Riley County professional staffs and the University Counseling Center staff.

Information to be distributed may include facts about AIDS, how it is transmitted, interpretation of test results, implications of the disease, treatment and support resources.

The Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta is the most reliable source of current, accurate information about AIDS research, and any information the University distributes will probably come from CDC, said subcommittee chairwoman Cindy Burke, Lafene education coordinator.

The committee's recommendations for AIDS education are tentatively scheduled to be reviewed for approval by the full AIDS committee March 19.

Kansans face possibility of mandatory seat-belt legislation

By STEPHANIE HAUGHTON
Collegian Reporter

If the desires of several organizations and individuals are followed, Kansans will be facing the reality of mandatory seat-belt usage laws.

According to an Associated Press story, the Kansas Senate Wednesday afternoon passed legislation requiring the use of seat belts in passenger cars.

The bill, which passed 22-18 after nearly two hours of debate, mandates Kansas motorists riding in the front seat of passenger cars to wear safety belts or face $25 fines.

The bill, which now faces House approval, would apply to those riding in the front seat of passenger cars manufactured after 1964. Any vehicle constructed on a truck frame or specially equipped for off-road operation, such as four-wheel drive trucks and cars, would be exempt from the safety-belt mandate.

Dick Kinsman, director of the Riley County Ambulance Service, said he believes the state should enact legislation to require every driver and front-seat passenger in a passenger vehicle to wear safety belts.

A recent study conducted by the University of Colorado Medical School identified 256 vehicle accident crashes in which one front-seat occupant was wearing a safety belt, while the companion in the other front seat was not. The study's results indicated that unbuckled occupants were five times more likely to die, three times more likely to be injured — and paid four times more for medical care.

"I think most people are wearing their seat belts now," Kinsman said. "The main reason for this is because of all you see on TV."

Kinsman said he would also support a "primary law," one that allows a driver to be pulled over for not wearing a seat belt.

"I think that a driver should get pulled over for not wearing a seat belt," he said. "Maybe the first time they get pulled over they could be given a warning, but after that they should be given a ticket."

Based on information that seat belts save thousands of lives each year, U.S. Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole has issued a federal standard to require installation of "automatic crash protection" equipment, such as air bags, in 1990 model year vehicles. This standard will be rescinded if two-thirds of the nation's population are covered by state-level mandatory seat-belt usage laws.

Reacting to Dole's directive, the Kansas Legislature is considering enactment of state legislation. The proposal, Senate Bill 520, would mandate the use of seat belts for both the driver and front-seat passengers in passenger vehicles.

This week the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and Industry issued a statement supportive of mandatory seat-belt legislation being considered by the Legislature.

According to reports from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, motor vehicle accidents caused 10 million lost workdays — more than any other cause — in business during 1983. This in turn cost American businesses nearly $10 billion as a direct result of such accidents.

In a press release, the KCCI said it strongly supports legislation which will mandate the use of seat belts. The organization said the move would save individual and business consumers from the cost of possible mandatory installation of more costly passive-restraint systems such as air bags, which may be less effective.

Students seem to have mixed reactions to mandatory seat-belt laws.

Mark Heinze, senior in business administration, said, "As a rule, I wear my seat belt because all the evidence I've seen points to seat belts saving lives."

Todd Crenshaw, junior in music education disagreed. "If you wear a seat belt or not should be up to the individual," he said. "Telling a driver or passenger they have to wear a seat belt is like telling a homeowner they must lock their home."

"Don't take me wrong," he said. "I do wear my seat belt but I don't think I should be told to wear it."

Council ignores survey in Jardine pet decision

By RON RENO
Collegian Reporter

The Jardine Terrace Mayors' Council voted unanimously not to adopt a proposed change in the current pet policy to allow cats in Jardine.

The council met Wednesday night at the Pittman Building.

The five voting members of the six-person council voted after reviewing results of a survey conducted this week. The survey contained responses from 75 of the more than 500 Jardine apartments.

A spokesperson representing each side was given eight minutes at the beginning of the meeting to express their final opinions or to address issues previously not discussed.

Sue Nelson, freshman in veterinary medicine, represented those in favor of changing the policy. She cited results of the survey as a major reason the current policy should be revised.

Of those expressing a preference in the survey, a majority said they were in favor of allowing cats in Jardine within certain guidelines. Seventy-nine percent indicated they would not mind if their neighbor owned a cat.

Bill Majerus, spokesman for those opposed to allowing cats in Jardine, said the new policy would not correct the problems of lack of enforcement and failure to report existing violations.

"It is our feeling the addition of cats will only complicate life in Jardine Terrace," said Majerus, graduate student in agronomy.

Residents who wanted a change in policy said the council ignored the results of the survey and that their votes did not reflect the wishes of Jardine residents.

Tracy Schemper, who initially led the movement for a change in the policy, said, "They put us through all that work and they didn't vote according to what the results showed."

Chaos grows despite months of emergency

Imposition of economic sanctions against the South African regime in September 1985 illustrated American dissatisfaction with the speed of social change in a vast and complex country.

President Reagan's policy of constructive engagement, which attempts to force change through quiet dialogue with the South African leaders, has clearly failed.

The limited sanctions banning the exportation of U.S. technology to South Africa and the importation of Krugerrand gold coins from that republic serve as a meager warning to South African leaders that, just as in the case of deposed Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, an American president could turn against them. However, not many people believe Reagan is willing to go that far.

South African President P.W. Botha's announcement on Tuesday that the state of emergency, imposed in July 1985 to contain anti-apartheid rioting, would be lifted Friday does not represent a shift in Botha's vision of South Africa, nor a victory for Reagan's policy of constructive engagement.

The 70-year-old Afrikaner president's announcement was nevertheless praised by officials in the United States and was given a cautious welcome from some South African liberals. Botha said the level of violence had dropped sufficiently to enable him to issue a proclamation voiding the emergency order.

Critics of apartheid, however, correctly insist the level of violence has not dropped. The emergency did little to calm the 18-month state of unrest. On the same day Botha made his announcement, one black man was killed by police shotgun fire and a youth was killed during rioting in southwest Johannesburg. Two whites were also injured when their auto was pelted with rocks during a separate disturbance.

Lifting the emergency could be viewed as an acknowledgment the emergency failed to suppress the desire of black and colored people to free themselves from the chains of apartheid. When it comes to internal reform, Botha finds it easy to satisfy the Reagan administration with limited reforms.

The end to a state of emergency will not change much. Botha's decision ignores the needs, the politics and the passions of the black majority in South Africa. Unless an attempt is made to get to the roots of the unrest, the conflict will fester and eventually explode.

U.S. policy is still based on the premise that change will come from within. But constructive engagement will not cure the economic and emotional problems that support the need to maintain a class of slave laborers. Nothing can account for the United States' support of racial discrimination in South Africa. Especially in light of our difficult struggle with racism in this country.

Constructive engagement will not succeed in changing South Africa, as the end of a state of emergency did not quell the violence. The end will come for the Botha regime; it may be 10, 20 or 30 years down the road, but it will come. Not even the most powerful nation in the world will be able to stop that.

Drug tests may wake America from trance

"There is always soma, delicious soma... Euphoric, narcotic, pleasantly hallucinant," sighs Mustapha Mond in "Brave New World" by Aldous Huxley.

Soma, the wonder drug of Huxley's world, made people apathetic, "happy" and content to work at jobs with little meaning or personal fulfillment.

On Monday, President Reagan's Commission on Organized Crime recommended new and more intrusive ways to crack down on our society's use of soma. The commission recommended that government test all federal employees for evidence of drug use. In contrast to Reagan's idea of "limited government," the commission suggested that federal contracts not be awarded to private employers who refuse to drug-test their employees.

Though hardly feasible, the proposal smacks of the witch-hunt mentality of the McCarthy era; employees are guilty until they prove themselves innocent through various blood and urine tests. Through direct employment and federal contracts, the federal government has economic contact with most Americans.

Mandatory testing would violate the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution by detaining a person, or as interpretation could extend it, by detaining their bodily fluids, without probable cause. The testing would also violate the Fifth Amendment, the right not to incriminate oneself.

The commission's report did not say how the testing should be carried out, who should pay for it or what would happen to employees whose tests indicated they had used drugs.

Drug testing is not always accurate, the commission acknowledged, but dismissed the issue by stating that technology could be improved. The commission also ignored the ethics of the privacy of an individual's medical history. If an individual is taking, for example, prescribed anti-depressants, he or she would be forced to reveal that information to employers and the federal government.

Drug abuse can indeed devastate a person's life. The commission's approach, however, destroys all Americans' right of privacy. On a brighter note, if Reagan succeeds in reducing this country's use of soma, he may turn the tide of what is now a euphoric apathy. In turning that tide, Reagan may put his cohorts and the Republican ideology out of office.

Spring break carries hidden risks

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Spring Break. It was the week they'd all been waiting for — planning for — living for; Sean, April and Jeff.

Sean, the 21-year-old Canadian college student may have planned his trip for months, or perhaps it was a last-minute decision, a "road trip" his friends talked him into.

April may have dieted into a whole new wardrobe and spent two weeks going to a tanning salon for the "base tan." Or maybe this pretty 20-year-old Joliet, Ill., junior college student had used her tax return money to even finance her spring break trip.

And then there was Jeff. He may have sat in his classes at the University of Central Florida dreaming of the girls he would meet. Perhaps this 21-year-old accounting student found it impossible to study the week before he left.

Sean, April and Jeff, like thousands of college students in 1985, traveled to a spring break location to spend a week of their lives having fun. The only difference between these three Daytona Beach spring breakers and the others is they never returned to their classes. Reports indicate the following:

— Sean Conrery, 21, Uxbridge, Ontario, Canada, died 1:20 a.m., March 12, 1985. Cause of death: massive head injuries. Pronounced dead at the scene. Reason: tried to climb from his hotel's 5th-floor balcony to the balcony below and fell five stories. Autopsy reports showed a blood alcohol content of .3 percent.

— April Trumble, 20, Joliet, Ill., died 12:35 a.m., April 6, 1985. Cause of death: broken neck, massive head injuries. Pronounced dead at the scene. Reason: tried to climb from the 14th-floor balcony to the next room and fell 11 stories to the garage roof below. Autopsy reports showed a blood alcohol content of .154 percent.

— Jeff Kulhanek, 21, White Springs, Fla., died 3:20 a.m., March 12, 1985. Cause of death: massive head injuries. Pronounced dead on arrival. Reason: tried to balance on his stomach on the railing of his hotel's 6th floor and fell six floors onto the pavement below. Autopsy reports showed a blood alcohol content of .2 percent.

As a 1984 K-State graduate who

EDEE DALKE
Guest Columnist

transplanted to Daytona Beach two years ago, I have seen spring break from the other side. A "Spring-Break-Queen" myself who traveled everywhere from Padre Island, Texas, to Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., I fully endorse spring break as an important...no, a vital aspect to college memories.

Working for The Orlando Sentinel newspaper in the Daytona Beach bureau, I face spring break each year by hearing talk of "what those darn kids did this time..." I chuckle to myself and realize I have no room to condemn their actions.

But when I sit in the newsroom and hear the scanner scream out the message of an accident at a hotel just down the street, I cringe because I know that the victim was not an unusual student, nobody that intended on coming to spring break in order to end his or her life. And I watch the photographer and the reporters run out to "get the story." The story...that adds to the stories...that add to the statistics.

Lives, ending as statistics. It happens every year. Daytona Beach records, starting from 1966, report students have fallen from balconies at least 20 times; 10 have died. The average fall is four stories, but in March of 1979, an Ohio student survived an eight-story plunge. In 1975, four students fell in a three week period. Two of those collegians fell in one night; two of the four died. In 1984, three accidents brought one death.

Daytona Beach, with high-rise hotels lining the beach, has been marred with these tragedies. But accidents are not something that Daytona Beach holds alone. Other spring break capitals from Myrtle Beach, S.C., to Palm Springs, Calif., all had student accidents, some with balcony falls, others with car accidents — most involving alcohol.

All these cities share in the concern for student safety. What's a city to do? One of Daytona's leading spring break hotels, The Plaza Hotel, is activating a balcony-safety plan this year. All balconies and windows are now bolted and sealed shut until mid-April. Clubs are providing free taxi service for the intoxicated. Our Motel-Hotel Association voted in a Spring Break Code of Ethical Conduct which includes 12 regulations that the hotels will enforce.

Students' response so far? They hate it. The safety measures that the hotels and police endorse in our city are not enforced with the intention of dampening anyone's fun. I, for one, am sick of the news that another student was splattered over the pool deck.

Sadly enough, the party continues. Damn it. What on earth do you want from spring break? Beach? We've got enough to keep you busy for a week. If you want danger, thrills and adventure by way of dangling from high places, join the circus. If you want to have a blast, come to Daytona.

Now, if you sleep through physics like I did, or have failed to learn a few facts in college so far about the real world, I'll put them together for you. One, when you drink a lot, you do crazy things. Two, humans cannot fly. Three, if you are standing on the 14th floor balcony and fall off, chances are you will not graduate.

April was loved, but her friends didn't even know she was missing until the knock on the door — for someone to identify the body. And Sean's friends traveled home alone. And Jeff's seat in accounting was empty after the break. And parents are missing their children.

It's not just your duty to take care of yourself. It's your duty to make sure that your friends get back to school to show off that T-shirt and sun tan.

I don't care if you make me wait in Daytona traffic as A1A is blocked, kids screaming and yelling from their cars. I don't care if the clubs and beaches are overcrowded and the lines are long. Just don't get killed.

Financial aid available for needy

Take some good news home with you this spring break — financial aid.

The Reagan administration's determined efforts to slash the federal budget by slashing non-essential spending has led many to feel that spending for college student assistance cannot be defended as imperative. Some even believe that financial aid for college-bound students has dwindled to dangerously low levels; that a huge number of students who need assistance to start or to continue their college education will find it more difficult than ever before to get direct grants and loans or participate in work-study programs.

That is not true. Programs to provide students with financial aid to attend college remain largely intact despite federal government efforts to help cut the deficit by cutting this assistance. More than $16 billion is available to help college students achieve educational objectives.

Nataja Wickstrom, director of financial aid for Purdue University, West Lafayette, Ind., was reported in a recent syndicated column as saying that more than half of the nation's college students receive some form of help, and there is far more aid available than most families realize.

"Families often wonder if it's even worth the trouble to apply for financial aid," Wickstrom said. "Believe me, it is. All you...need are a few facts and you'll come to the correct decision."

ELIAS SAIG
Guest Columnist

"Purdue is typical of colleges in the United States," she said. "Of the 32,000 students enrolled, about 15,000 are afforded some help this spring semester."

She predicted an increased number of students will seek financial aid next fall. Wickstrom is a recognized authority on this subject, having been responsible for developing scholarship services to students and colleges throughout the nation.

There is no income ceiling that determines students' eligibility for assistance. Income and family size are certainly factors to be considered. For example, a family with more than one child in college is far more likely to receive help than a family with one.

Wickstrom provides the following tips: First, if you think you may need some help in meeting the costs of going to college, it's worthwhile to apply for aid.

Second, apply on time. Find out the deadlines and meet them. Students should not wait to be admitted to a college before applying for financial aid; financial aid applications are reviewed while the application for admission may still be pending.

Third, be careful when filling out aid forms. Correcting financial aid information is time consuming and may result in less aid than you might receive if the information was right the first time.

Fourth, ask questions. College is one of the most important investments you'll make in your lifetime. Be certain that the academic programs match your educational goals, then find the financing to pursue that education.

Each college or university has a financial aid office to help students and parents with the financial aid application process. If a student becomes confused along the way, the advice of a financial aid administrator is free for the asking.

Wickstrom's final piece of advice to students and their families: View a college education as the most important investment a student will make in life.

"The time spent with the financial aid process should be viewed as time spent on that investment," she said.

If you are going to be recruiting for K-State over spring break take this message with you.

Professor uses videos to instruct

By PATRICIA MALONE
Collegian Reporter

You may not see them on Music Television, but the four videos created by Dean Zollman, professor of physics, are helping students understand basic laws of physics.

Zollman received a distinguished service citation from the American Association of Physics Teachers for his work in using video discs as teaching tools in physics.

Zollman has helped create four video discs, linked to computer programs, to help students in physics better understand physical laws. The discs have three difficulty levels, and they each discuss different laws of physics.

One disc discusses the principle of oscillation. It contains footage of the 1940 collapse of the Tacoma Narrows Bridge in Tacoma, Wash.

The video shows the effect of wind on the bridge. Zollman worked on this disc from August 1981 to August 1982 at the University of Utah.

Zollman's second disc deals with auto wrecks. High-speed cameras were used to show what happens to automobiles when they collide. These segments not only help students learn, he said, but are also used by car manufacturers and the U.S. Department of Transportation.

"Studies in Motion" is the title of another one of Zollman's discs, using examples of dancers, gymnasts and divers to explain the principles of motion.

The fourth disc uses a bicycle to help students understand laws of the conservation of energy.

Zollman and Larry Noble, professor of physical education, dance and leisure studies, received a two-year grant from the National Science Foundation to put together another video disc.

"The idea evolved over a couple years," Zollman said. "It took the National Science Foundation a year to approve our grant."

Zollman said K-State athletes will be used to explain various laws of mechanics, including rotation, speed and velocity and the effects of outside forces.

The professors are also hoping to use prospective Olympic athletes who train in Colorado Springs, Colo., Zollman said.

"We will do some of the filming here at K-State and some at a track meet in Houston, this summer," he said. "We also will do some filming at Colorado Springs."

After the filming is done, production will continue at a television station, which has not yet been chosen.

SADD begins program on campus

By BECKY MARTIN
Collegian Reporter

The widespread concern about drunken driving has prompted the University to become part of a national organization dedicated to educating students about the problem and encouraging responsible drinking.

Students Against Driving Drunk, better known as SADD, is a program that was formed to discourage drunken driving among high-school students.

SADD has now introduced a new program for college campuses and K-State is among those supporting the program, said Connie Lutz, graduate student in dietetics and student representative for the campus SADD chapter.

SADD was introduced in 1981 by Robert Anastas, a former high-school teacher and coach who suffered the loss of two of his soccer players because of drunken driving incidents.

Anastas is now the executive director of SADD and travels throughout the nation speaking to SADD chapters and other related programs about the issue of drunken driving, Lutz said.

Lutz said SADD has two main goals — to promote respect for all laws relating to the use of alcoholic beverages and to raise awareness of the drunken driving issue so students will be able to avoid potential DUI incidents involving themselves and others.

Recent surveys show 84 percent of K-State students drink, and last semester 44 K-State students were charged with DUI, Lutz said.

Statistics also show one American dies every 22 minutes because of drunken drivers, she said. Drunken driving incidents are also the No. 1 cause of death among college students.

"This shows a need for a SADD chapter here at K-State," Lutz said.

K-State was formerly involved in an organization referred to as BACCHUS, Boost Alcohol Consciousness

Concerning the Health of University Students, Lutz said. The reason for the change is because SADD is more recognized.

SADD's first meeting was in late January and the next meeting is scheduled for March 23, Lutz said.

"Our main objective is to alert students to alternative activities from drinking and driving," she said.

Lutz said she believes some students take the attitude that "it's not going to happen to me."

"SADD does not want to keep students from drinking," Lutz said.

"We just want to promote a safe campus, enjoyable surroundings and productive college careers."

"SADD is a challenging and effective way for K-State students to get involved in a long-term solution to the drinking and driving problem," Lutz said.

Tennis teams to travel over break

By TONY CARBAJO
Sports Writer

The K-State men's and women's tennis teams embark on a five day-seven match spring break road trip Monday. They'll meet Northwest Louisiana State in the first match of a southern swing that also takes them to six matches in Texas before returning home.

Coach Steve Bietau is expecting the trip to give his young squad the type of competition it will need to be competitive in the Big Eight Conference race. The men are expected to field a team of seven players, while the women will expect to take a group of eight.

"This is the toughest spring schedule that has ever been taken on by a K-State team," Bietau said. "We want to use the matches to gain some experience. We want to play a lot of matches."

"Our goal is to play as much as possible," he said. "We don't have our singles (positions) aligned yet either, so we will be using the trip for that. We'll be changing the lineups during the trip depending on who plays well or not."

After battling Northwest Louisiana State in Natchitoches, La., the Wildcats travel to Texas to face the University of Texas-Tyler and Tyler Junior College.

In the meeting with Tyler Junior College the 'Cats will be facing possibly the best junior college program in the nation. Tyler finished the season in 1985 by capturing the men's junior college championship and finishing as the runner-up in the women's division.

The Wildcats will also be facing some tough competition in Texas-Tyler. Bietau said when he recruited the Wildcats' No. 1 women's singles player, Lena Svensson, at the junior college nationals in Florida last year, that five girls from that tournament signed with Texas-Tyler.

When the teams get through with those two matches they will again hit the road, this time to Denton, Texas., where they will meet New Mexico State, Texas-Arlington, North Texas State and Louisiana Tech.

One of the three freshmen on this year's women's team, Sigrid Ivarsson, said the trip will help the team prepare for the Big Eight schedule which begins in two weeks.

"We have been practicing hard for this," Ivarsson said. "We are getting some good matches to prepare us for the Big Eight. It will be tough, but it will be good for us."

Ivarsson has been reunited with her former doubles partner from Sweden, freshman Annika Emtell, who joined the team for the second semester. The two were teammates in Danderyd, Sweden just last year.

"We know how to help each other," said Ivarsson, who last fall played with Svensson in the top doubles spot. "We know each other's weaknesses on the court because we have been playing for a long time."

For the men's team, sophomore Deon Botha is expected to fill the No. 1 singles spot. He will be joined by freshman Shawn Walburn at the top doubles spot to start the matches, but senior Kris James is also expected to play some No. 1 doubles during the trip.

"Shawn has really come on the second semester," Bietau said of the St. Louis, Mo., native. "He won our Pepsi Open tournament (in doubles with Botha) and made it to the semi-finals of the team's challenge tournament (in singles)."

Bietau said Botha, a transfer from Lamar in Beaumont, Texas, will get a chance to play against some competition from his former conference, the Southland.

With the south's warmer weather, the southern schools get a jump on the schools that are not so fortunate in terms of geographic location. Bietau said the only way to stay even with the southern schools is to travel down and play them.

"Most of the teams have played for a few weeks," Bietau said. "This is our way of catching up. It should be a good trip with the caliber of competition we have scheduled."

"By the end of the week we will be a completely different team. We should become established and see who is ready to play," Bietau said. "One of the highlights of our season is playing this many good teams on one trip."

Making the trip for the men will be Botha, James, Walburn, Scot Sandlin, Scott Chandler, Darren Polite and Denis Hatutale.

For the women Svensson, Ivarsson, Emtell, Kristy Line, Carlye Madelin, Erica Anderson, Bridget Hagen and Tara White are expected to play for the team.

After returning from the tour, the women's team will host Kearney State, Kearney, Neb., at the L.P. Washburn Recreation Area tennis courts, 2 p.m. March 20. The men's team will play again when it hosts Central State, Edmond, Okla., in a 2 p.m. start, March 21 at the Washburn courts.

The two teams open up the Big Eight portions of their schedules on the March 28 against Missouri at the Washburn courts. Matches are scheduled to begin at 9 a.m.

K-State tennis team member Scot Sandlin returns a serve during practice Monday at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area tennis courts.

Lady Cats to meet CU in semifinals

By DARAN NEUSCHAFER
Sports Writer

K-State women's basketball coach Matilda Mossman likes the situation her team is in right now.

"We are playing for everything to gain and nothing to lose," Mossman said. "There is not any real pressure on us, and I think that is helping our kids play a little more relaxed."

The Lady Cats, after their upset win over cross-state rival KU on Tuesday night, will continue their role as underdogs in the Big Eight Post Season Tournament tonight in Kansas City. K-State is matched in the semifinals against the University of Colorado Lady Buffs.

K-State defeated Kansas in Lawrence, 69-65, to reach the second round, while Colorado beat Nebraska in Boulder, Colo., 96-90, to gain a spot in the tournament's final four.

The Lady Cats have been playing their best basketball of the season over the last couple of games, in wins over Nebraska and KU. And Mossman attributes it to the recent gain of confidence the Lady Cats have acquired.

"We have been playing with a lot of confidence lately, and I think that has really helped us out, both on the court and off it," Mossman said. "I just hope that our momentum and our confidence continue."

That added confidence has also led to some better shooting percentages, as the Lady Cats have shot over 52 percent in their last two games.

But K-State is going to need every ounce of confidence they can muster tonight when they meet the Lady Buffs. Colorado entered the tournament as the number two seed, after finishing second in the Big Eight regular season standings.

The Lady Buffs, after a slow start in conference action, have been playing steady basketball of late, and sport a powerful offensive attack.

"Colorado has a very good basketball team. They can do a lot of different things, but I think we match up really well with them," Mossman said.

K-State and Colorado split their two regular season games. Both teams managed to pull out victories on the road. K-State defeated the Lady Buffs in Boulder on Jan. 18, 67-55, while Colorado returned the favor on Feb. 8, beating the Lady Cats in Ahearn Field House, 69-57.

Phi Wacka Jacka won both the men's 6-foot and under and independent divisions in final-round intramural basketball games played Wednesday night at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Other winners included Sigma Alpha Epsilon (men's all-University semifinals), U No Da Kine (co-rec) and the Break Aways (women's).

Phi Wacka Jacka, 59 Fast Break, 38 The Phi Wacka Jacka 6-foot and under team finished the season undefeated Wednesday night, downing Fast Break, 59-38, to win the 6-foot and under championship.

Phi Wacka Jacka jumped out to an early lead and controlled the game throughout the first half with good shooting and rebounding.

Fast Break, trailing by as much as 22 points in the first half, narrowed the margin to 18 at halftime, trailing 38-20, but couldn't close the deficit in the second half.

"We just came out from the start and took it to them. Our shooting was excellent and we controlled the tempo of the game," Kenny Winkley of Phi Wacka Jacka said.

Phi Wacka Jacka, 84 The Team, 65 Phi Wacka Jacka easily advanced to the all-University finals game of the men's division with a 84-65 victory over The Team in the independent title game.

Phi Wacka Jacka rode the outside shooting of guards Matt Carney and Barry Hankins to a 37-21 halftime lead.

"We were able to hit the open shot and we didn't have many turnovers," Phi Wacka Jacka Player-Coach Sam Weems said. "We probably hit 60 percent to 70 percent of our shots."

Weems and Carney each scored 20 points to lead Phi Wacka Jacka.

The Team was led in scoring by James Ricketts with 17 points.

Phi Wacka Jacka will play in the all-University championship tonight at 7 against the SAEs

Sigma Alpha Epsilon, 72

Haymaker 9, 33

Sigma Alpha Epsilon defeated Haymaker 9, 72-33 in a semifinal game in the men's all-University playoffs.

Haymaker 9 stayed close in the first seven minutes, trailing by six points at 14-8. The SAEs then made three unanswered baskets to move out in front, 20-8. Haymaker 9 fought back, but Brent Douglas, the game's leading scorer with 18 points, hit a long jump shot and made a layup before half to give the SAEs a 29-19 lead.

Douglas came out hot in the second half, making three straight baskets to give the SAEs a 15-point lead. From that point on, the SAEs dominated the game, outscoring Haymaker 9, 37-13.

Break Aways, 38 Wildcat Magic, 34

Women's competition came to a close Tuesday night as the Break Aways defeated Wildcat Magic, 38-34, in the championship game.

The Break Aways, defending women's champions, were led by former K-State Lady Cat standout Betsy Sloan, who had 14 points.

"They (Wildcat Magic) were by far the best team we've played this year," Sloan said.

Baseball team downs Memphis State, 9-8

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State baseball team improved its record to 9-1 on the season with a come from behind 9-8 victory over Memphis State Wednesday afternoon at Memphis, Tenn.

Jeff Turtle had the game winning hit for the Wildcats with a solo home run on the first pitch of the ninth inning. The homer was Turtle's second of the season.

Mike Hinkle hit a three-run homer in the second inning and Otto Kaifes hit a three-run homer in the seventh to lead the Wildcat offensive attack. Hinkle has hit two home runs on the season while Kaifes has belted three.

K-State Coach Gary Vaughn was pleased with the way his team was able to recover after Memphis State led, 8-3, after five innings.

"Our kids kept their poise. We got down early to a good Memphis State team," Vaughn said. "But our kids did their job and showed a lot of character in getting the victory."

The game was the first of a 10-day road trip for the Wildcats. K-State will meet Mississippi at 2 p.m. in University, Miss., before traveling to Mississippi State, Miss., Friday to face Mississippi State at 3 p.m.

Briefly in Sports

Manning wins Big Eight honor

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Danny Manning, the multi-talented sophomore of the Big Eight champion Kansas Jayhawks, was a unanimous selection by a panel of sportswriters and sportscasters as Associated Press Big Eight Conference player of the year.

It's the third straight season that player-of-the-year honors have been voted unanimously. The past two seasons, every vote went to Oklahoma All-American Wayman Tisdale, who opted to forego his senior season and now plays for Indianapolis in the National Basketball Association.

Volleyball coach signs four

Volleyball Coach Scott Nelson announced the signing of four new players to his K-State squad for next fall.

The announcement comes after one of the most successful volleyball campaigns in Wildcat history, as K-State compiled an overall record of 21-11 and finished 5-5 in Big Eight Conference play in 1985.

"The talent we brought in is very good," Nelson said. "I feel all four players can step in and help our program right away."

The four players are Kristin Martin from Rockford, Ill., Tami Sue Tibbets from Council Grove, Amy Jo Dodson from Louisburg and Lynda Harshbarger from Wamego.

Shocker basketball coach fired

WICHITA — Basketball Coach Gene Smithson and his staff were fired Wednesday by Wichita State officials in the wake of a 14-14 season, a duplicate of Smithson's career worst.

At an afternoon press conference, Wichita State Athletic Director Lew Perkins said the firing of Smithson was "probably one of the most difficult professional decisions I've had to make in my life."

He said he became concerned about a decline in the basketball program last year and became convinced as this season wore on something had to be done.

Assistants begin looking for new jobs

By JEFF STARK
Collegian Reporter

When the 1985-86 basketball season has been completed, not only will K-State Coach Jack Hartman be gone, but so may his assistant coaches.

Jimmy Allen, Darryl Winston and Tim Jankovich, assistant coaches under Hartman, are all in the process of looking for work.

"If those other guys (Winston and Jankovich) tell you they aren't looking for a job, they're lying," Allen said.

Allen, 42, has been at K-State for two years. Since he graduated from Henderson State University in Arkadelphia, Ark., in 1968, Allen has either been a coach or an athletic director.

Prior to coming to K-State, Allen was head basketball coach and athletic director at Phillips County Community College in Helena, Ark., and compiled an overall record of 100-30.

"I've always coached or have been an athletic director, and I've been happy doing those things. I can't tell you about any of my job possibilities because, quite frankly, there isn't anything to tell. I am looking down South," Allen said.

"South" is in reference to Arkansas, Allen said, where, in addition to Phillips County, Allen coached high school basketball for nine years.

Allen said he "thoroughly enjoys Manhattan and working for Jack Hartman," but is not interested in staying on with the new coach.

Winston began his coaching career as a graduate assistant at K-State during the 1977-78 season. Following that season, he moved on to Central Missouri State in Warrensburg, Mo., where he was an assistant coach under Lynn Nance for two seasons.

Winston returned to K-State in 1983 to become an assistant coach.

Winston said he has interviewed for some head coaching jobs at major colleges.

"I want to coach at a major college where I will feel comfortable in maintaining a program," Winston said.

Winston served as interim head coach for the final 15 games of the 1984-85 season while Hartman was recovering from heart bypass surgery.

"That experience gave me confidence and led me to believe I could handle a head coaching job," Winston said.

As Winston talked, he was interrupted by a phone call.

"That was Bob Bowlsby (athletic director at Northern Iowa). He gave me the (head coaching) job to Eldon Miller," Winston said.

"Miller was fired (Miller in actuality resigned) by Ohio State and threw his name in the hat at the last minute (for the Northern Iowa job). I thought I had that job. It seems like all these older coaches can get the jobs because they've had the head coaching experience and a name," Winston said.

Winston didn't rule out the possibility of staying at K-State if the situation was right.

"Depending on the situation, such as the new coach and some other things I can't really say, there is a possibility I would stay here," Winston said.

Winston said if he didn't stay in coaching he would "probably try to get into sales. All through my coaching career I've had offers from places like Xerox and IBM — probably because of the exposure I've received as a coach."

Jankovich, a guard for the Wildcats between 1979 and 1982, graduated from K-State in 1982 with a bachelor's degree in finance and received a master's in radio and television from K-State in 1985.

Before coming back to K-State, Jankovich was a graduate assistant under Lon Kruger, a former player and assistant coach under Hartman, at Pan American in Edinburg, Texas.

Jankovich, junior varsity coach who has been with Hartman since the beginning of the 1984-85 season, said if a job doesn't work out with the new coach, there were other things he could fall back on.

"If I can't get a position I'm happy with, I've considered going to law school or looking into broadcasting," Jankovich said.

"I'm not for or against staying here (with the new coach). I'm mainly concerned with staying at the (NCAA) Division I level and getting the best opportunity available," Jankovich said.

"I'm not going to fool myself and say I'm ready for a head coaching position. You don't see too many head coaches under 30 (years old.) Lon Kruger is 30 and a head coach and I'm 26. To me there is a lot of difference. That's not to say I wouldn't like to be a head coach," Jankovich said.

Jankovich said the biggest problem with finding any coaching position is having to wait until the season is over.

"There are going to be a lot of positions open when the season is over for one reason or another, but right now coaches are busy finishing out their seasons. There is not much I can do right now," Jankovich said.

Jankovich said the possibility of finding a coaching position he would be happy with is greatly enhanced by the fact he has worked under Hartman.

"Coach Hartman is one of the best and I think all of us (the assistant coaches) will be able to benefit from his recommendation," Jankovich said.

Hartman had good words for his assistants.

"They're fine, exceptional young men and I'm sure they will be successful in everything they do."

The Wildcat Dancers may have performed their last tango at K-State unless a compromise with the KSU Marching Band and the Pridettes can be reached.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has indicated that the squad will have to limit future activities.

Kenny Mossman, administrative assistant with the athletic department, said the Wildcat Dancers had become independent from the athletic department and the band. The group was also performing without insurance since it was unclear who was responsible for the squad, he said.

"It was to the point where we were not really sure whether they are under the athletic department or under the band," he said.

The Wildcat Dancers perform at half time for the Lady Cats and Wildcat basketball games. They also serve as cheerleaders for the Lady Cats and on the alumni side of the field during football games.

A final decision on the future of the Wildcat Dancers will be made today following a meeting between Julie Pierson, senior in management, sponsor and captain of the Wildcat Dancers, and Stan Finck, band director.

Pierson said she offered to compromise and consolidate with the Pridettes. If no agreement can be reached, the Wildcat Dancers may be "severely limited" in their activities by the athletic department, she said.

The athletic department proposed restrictions on the group, including approval of uniforms, and times and places of performance, Pierson said.

"If I wanted to keep the group going, consolidating was the only way to do so and keep the integrity of the dancers," Pierson said. "The athletic department's compromise wasn't a compromise at all; it was a 'take it or leave it' proposition.

"I was afraid they (the athletic department) were going to do away with us even after we'd worked so hard and done such a good job doing something that no one else wanted to do for so long," Pierson said.

"It's kind of ironic. The athletic department has now said it is between us and the band," Pierson said. "Yet they are the ones who wanted us out in the first place."

Finck declined to comment until a final decision had been reached.

Mossman said the cheerleading squad would be expanded to include a junior varsity/alternate cheerleading squad to take over the cheerleading duties of the Wildcat Dancers.

"The athletic department doesn't want us out there; they want a JV squad," Pierson said. "They say we do a good job, but then why do they want to get rid of us?"

Mossman said the athletic department wants them to continue as a performing group, but as part of the Pridettes, handled by the band.

"They will fit better with the band," he said, "and the athletic department doesn't have the funding to handle another spirit group."

But Pierson said the Wildcat Dancers have been paying their own way.

"We didn't ask the athletic department to pay for a thing," she said. "We got our own sponsors; we put our posters up ourselves."

She said the group owes some money to the band.

Pierson said she feels the group was treated poorly by the athletic department.

"They don't seem to care about tradition. We got a superior rating and a trophy at camp. We represented the University — we brought the trophy home and we were proud of it — but it's like it didn't matter. It's like a slap in the face," she said.

73rd annual Cattleman's Day to showcase campus research

By SHELLY CHENOWETH
Staff Writer

Farmers, ranchers, students and others interested in beef cattle production will be on campus Friday for the 73rd Annual Cattleman's Day.

The purpose of Cattleman's Day is to showcase the research and educational activity in beef cattle at K-State, said Jack Riley, professor of animal sciences and industry and chairman of Cattleman's Day.

Registration begins at 8 a.m. in Weber Arena. Nine minisessions will be conducted throughout the morning on a rotating basis. Each person can attend four different sessions.

Topics for these sessions include sorghum silage types, beef product development technology, fly control, grazing systems for Kansas, feeding wheat and sorghum grain, computer evaluation of beef production, heat cycle synchronization of heifers and cows, cash settlement for feeder cattle futures, and spaying and autographing heifers.

Autographing involves removing the heifer's ovary and reattaching it to the rumen wall, Riley said. This increases the hormonal activity of the animal, like an implant to increase growth, but the animal cannot get pregnant.

"Some producers are interested in very specialized things. That is part of the reason for the minisessions. We are hoping to come up with things that have a broader application to the people in attendance," Riley said.

Being able to showcase the University's research projects is the primary reason for Cattleman's Day, Riley said. But the commercial exhibits in Weber Arena in the morning and at lunch also let the people mingle, visit, ask questions and conduct business.

Riley called Cattleman's Day a social event as well as an educational event. Many who attend Cattleman's Day are K-State graduates and they enjoy this opportunity to come back to the campus to visit people while they learn new things happening in the beef industry, Riley said.

At 10:50 a.m., Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, will speak in Weber Arena, addressing the University's involvement in agriculture and the educational and employment opportunities in animal science.

Riley said the afternoon general program will zero in on new beef product development and the marketing of beef and beef products in the future.

Rod Bowling, vice president of Monfort of Colorado Inc., and Robert Vantrease, executive officer of the American Chianina Association, are the speakers for the general program.

Following the speakers, there will be an open house at the University's Beef Teaching and Research Center, with demonstrations on research, health and production topics.

Riley said he has been pleased with the success of Cattleman's Day in past years, and estimates 700 to 1,000 people will attend this year.

"Most other colleges similar to K-State have experienced the opposite of what we have. They have had poor attendance to the extent of dropping such an event," Riley said.

Riley said he believes the problem at other schools is that they have not tried to upgrade their programs and put in the diversity K-State has integrated into Cattleman's Day.

"They have not done what we have found to be successful, such as the minisessions. We don't want to lecture to the people here. We have to let them ask questions. We try to bring in people from outside the University who are good speakers and have something to say," Riley said.

Mourners demonstrate at funeral

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa

— At least 30,000 black mourners, joined by hundreds of whites, turned a mass funeral for 17 black riot victims Wednesday into a vast demonstration of opposition to apartheid.

The throng packed a soccer stadium in Alexandra, a squalid black township wedged among the richest white suburbs of Johannesburg. In the crowd were black activist Winnie Mandela and diplomats from seven Western nations, including the United States.

Among clergymen of all races was the Rev. Beyers Naude, 70, an Afrikaner whose spiritual journey from faith in apartheid to the struggle for black rights has made him a symbol of white liberalism.

"No one is free in this country as long as the black man is not free," Mike Beza, president of the Alexandra Civic Association, told the mourners. "We are simply saying, dismantle apartheid."

"When is this brutality going to stop?" he asked. "When is this barbarism going to end?"

Police with rifles manned all entrances to Alexandra and searched incoming cars, including that of Betsy Spiro, political counselor of the U.S. Embassy. They stayed well away from the stadium, but a helicopter circled overhead.

With most other forms of protest banned, the crowd — which some estimates put at 50,000 or more — transformed the service into a huge rally against the official apartheid race policy that reserves privilege for South Africa's 5 million whites and denies rights to the 24 million blacks.

The coffins were lowered into the pale, sun-scorched ground of the nearby hillside cemetery after the service. Some mourners threw in ragged bits of clothing as gestures of remembrance.

"They've taken a survey and they should go with what a majority of those people feel, not their own personal feelings," said Schemper, freshman in business administration.

Schemper and Nelson said their next plan is to take the issue to the Department of Housing. They also discussed developing and distributing another survey by mail.

Executive Mayor Sheldon Klassen, senior in management, defended the council vote.

"The purpose of the mayors is to vote in a manner which will benefit the residents of Jardine Terrace the most," Klassen said.

World Friendship closes gaps for women of foreign lands

By KIM KIDD
Collegian Reporter

Women who leave their homes in other countries and come to the United States with their husbands and children are faced with language and other cultural barriers. Some become isolated because of these barriers.

These women can find lifelong friendships and learn how to deal with the American culture through Manhattan's World Friendship organization.

World Friendship was created 17 years ago as a support group between women who have come to Manhattan from different cultures and American women, said Corina Hugo, co-president of the group. It encourages them to share talents, learn new skills, learn about different cultures and develop friendships.

Each year the group has many activities to learn more about other cultures. One of the most popular programs is a fashion show in which members dress in the traditional costumes of their countries.

Others include a Thanksgiving program explaining the origins of traditional American customs; a Christmas party with Santa Claus and presents for the children; field trips; cooking demonstrations of international foods; and craft days.

One of the most involved programs in the organization is teaching English as a second language. The classes are divided into beginning, intermediate and advanced levels to help members learn conversational English and ways to communicate in different situations.

"They are not classes where you have to sit tight," Hugo said. "They love it because it is a chance to learn and also really fun. That's what we want to accomplish. They feel good and also get a lot out of it."

The group also takes field trips to help members from other countries learn places in the community. Sometimes a trip to the grocery store offers a new experience to international members.

Other field trips include tours at McCalls Pattern Co., 615 McCa liffe; the Manhattan Public Library; hospitals; museums; and Sunset Zoo.

One of the most successful programs has been the "Share Your Country" program, Hugo said. In this program, members divide into groups by language or geographical area and share information about their part of the world.

Each of these programs encourages interaction between the international members and the American members. Hugo said the organization has helped her learn about many cultures which she was unable to do in her native country of Venezuela.

"I never had in my country the experience I have had here to know people from all over the world," she said.

Hugo said members often keep in touch after returning to their native countries. World Friendship is open to anyone, she said. The group meets from 9:30 to 11 a.m. on Tuesdays at the First Presbyterian Church, Eighth and Leavenworth streets.

Magazine reviews business college

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State Business Review, with its second issue scheduled for publication in May, is designed to publicize the College of Business Administration, said Richard Coleman, professor of marketing and editor of the magazine.

The first issue included articles such as a brief history of the College of Business Administration and the college's dean, Randolph Pohlman; a story on Koch Industries Inc., a Wichita-based corporation; and recognition of outstanding seniors.

"It looks more like a fancy advertising brochure than a magazine," Coleman said.

The Review is expected to be published annually, with its premier issue consisting of 24 pages.

Dave Donnelly, assistant professor of accounting, said the magazine was the idea of brothers Frank and Mark Gunn, former students. Donnelly served as the faculty adviser for the Review last year.

The publication is supported by contributions from various businesses and the business college.

"Last year we sent letters to businesses asking them, if we were to publish a magazine, would they support it?" Donnelly said.

"We were just trying to see what kind of response (the magazine) would receive," he said. "As it turns ed out, money started coming in before we had actually decided to publish it."

Donnelly said 2,000 copies were published last year, which were distributed through the dean's office and sent to alumni.

With the help of a staff of six students, Coleman said this year's issue will include stories about distinguished alumni, business trends and stories about "up and coming" businesses throughout Kansas.

Coleman said he would also like to include articles on both current students and students who have recently graduated from the college.

Attorney proposes DUI injury bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Wyandotte County district attorney Wednesday asked a House committee to make it a felony to cause serious injury while driving under the influence of drugs or alcohol.

Nick Tomasic, the district attorney, told the House Federal and State Affairs Committee it should endorse a bill to do so because now district attorneys' "hands are tied" when dealing with people who are charged with DUI and have seriously injured another person.

The bill would make causing "great bodily harm, disfigurement or dismemberment" while driving under the influence a Class E felony, which is punishable by between one and five years in prison and a fine of up to $10,000.

Currently, a person who injures someone while committing DUI cannot be charged with an offense other than DUI, Tomasic said. If the person kills someone, he or she can be charged with vehicular homicide or involuntary manslaughter. No one spoke against the bill.

Rep. Michael Peterson, D-Kansas City, the bill's sponsor, said current law does not adequately protect those who are seriously injured in accidents involving intoxicated drivers.

The committee probably won't debate or take action on the bill for about two weeks, said Rep. Robert Vancrum, R-Overland Park.

Republican woman seeks governorship

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Barbara Pomeroy, a virtual unknown in Kansas political circles, Wednesday became the first woman in state history to declare formally her candidacy for the governor nomination of a major party.

Saying none of the three men who have announced their candidacies for Republican nomination have excited voters, Pomeroy became a contender for that party's nomination for governor in the August primary election.

She also held news conference in Overland Park, Pittsburg, Wichita and Salina Wednesday and is scheduled to make a sixth formal declaration in Dodge City today. In addition, she planned public appearances in Chase, Ellinwood, Great Bend, Lyons and Sterling.

Pomeroy, 47, who is an adjunct professor in the Center for Urban Studies at Wichita State University and a former federal bureaucrat, told a Statehouse news conference she knows she faces an uphill battle to win the GOP nomination, but bluntly declared:

"It is of prime importance to have qualified and experienced leadership in Kansas. Having seen none come forward yet, I am here to offer myself for election to the state's highest office."

House Speaker Mike Hayden, Wichita business executive Larry Jones and Andover attorney Richard Peckham previously declared for the GOP nomination.

Others still considering the race include former Gov. Robert F. Bennett, Secretary of State Jack Brier, Senate President Robert V. Talkington, Sen. Fred Kerr and Pittsburg businessman Gene Bicknell. However, Bennett reportedly has decided against the race and will make that fact known at a news conference here Friday.

Lt. Gov. Tom Docking declared his candidacy far for the Democratic nomination for governor last week. State Treasurer Joan Finney still is considering challenging him.

After 25 years in a wide variety of federal government and business positions, Pomeroy said, "I chose to leave it behind and bring my expertise home to Kansas. I am committed to this race. I am committed to devoting my time and resources to this campaign."

Pomeroy first made known her intention to seek the nomination late last year, when all potential candidates appeared before the state Republican Party executive committee to introduce themselves and state their positions.

She resigned in December as a comptroller in the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in Washington, a position she held 5½ years. Before that, she served as executive director of the National Commission on International Year of the Child in Washington for nearly two years, and before that was deputy regional commissioner of federal Social and Rehabilitation Services in Philadelphia for 3½ years.

A native of Hutchinson, Pomeroy holds degrees from Emporia State University, the University of Kansas and Southern Cal.

She is the divorced mother of three sons, age 26, 22 and 17.

Her positions as outlined at her news conference:

- She believes economic development and putting Kansas in a leadership role in that effort is the prime issue of the campaign.
- She supports the death penalty in murder cases, and would sign into law a bill passed by the Legislature, but had no specifics on what provisions she would want to see in the law.
- She believes state government needs more revenue, especially with declining oil prices reducing the take from the severance tax, but presently has no position on whether raising the sales tax is the best option.
- She strongly supports submitting the legalization of pari-mutuel wagering and creation of a state lottery to a vote of the people this year.

Pomeroy estimated it will take between $500,000 and $1 million to wage a successful race for the GOP nomination, but declined to say how much she has raised.

University joins council for sharing information

By SAM HOSTETTLER
Collegian Reporter

In order to facilitate the sharing of information among universities, K-State has joined the Kansas City Regional Council for Higher Education.

"The KCRCHE is an organization of public and independent institutions in the greater Kansas City metropolitan area who have joined in a group effort to enable these institutions to conduct seminars and workshops for the member institutions and to share information on academic programs in educational services," said Charles Hein, director of communications.

The sharing of information between member institutions can be accomplished through meetings.

"Recently, the financial aid officers from each member institution have gotten together to discuss the changes that are taking place with financial aid," Hein said.

The addition of K-State on Jan. 23 brings KCRCHE's membership to 13 colleges and universities. Hein said joining the organization made good sense.

"Some member institutions in the organization are two-year learning institutions, such as Johnson County Community College," he said. "The KCRCHE makes information available for students in these institutions wanting to transfer to K-State."

Having a longstanding relationship with the Kansas City area is another reason Hein thinks it was a good idea for the University to join the organization.

"About 9 percent of the undergraduate enrollment at K-State comes from the metropolitan Kansas City area," he said. "K-State also has over 10,000 alumni in the area and maintains an alumni office in Kansas City."

The University is also starting to offer continuing education classes for people in the Kansas City area.

"The College of Architecture and Design is developing a program in Kansas City that will provide professional development opportunities for the environment design community and internships for students in the college," Hein said. "As time goes on, more and more departments at K-State will be getting involved."

Hein said joining KCRCHE should be worthwhile in the long run.

"This will help people get a greater understanding of what K-State really is," he said.

Vandals spread glue on school's furniture

Between 5:30 and 8:25 p.m. Feb. 10, a suspect or suspects entered or remained inside Manhattan Middle School after hours and committed various acts of vandalism.

After breaking into supply cabinets, the perpetrators removed Elmer's glue and rubber cement. The rubber cement was poured onto counter tops, sofas, chairs, tables and onto the carpeted floor in the school's kitchen area.

The lounge had both types of glue poured inside typewriters, a copier and a microwave oven. The glue had dried by the time the vandalism was detected.

According to Riley County Police Department reports, damages were estimated at more than $600.

Persons having information on this or any other crime are asked to call Crime Stoppers in Manhattan at 539-7777. Callers, who may call collect, need not identify themselves, and may qualify for a cash reward of up to $1,000.

Group to elect officers for Senate committees

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate will approve the chairmen and chairwomen of the senate standing committees at its meeting at 7 tonight in the Union Big Eight room.

Candidates for the committee chair positions are: Academic Affairs, Jim Crutchfield, sophomore in business administration; Communications, Candy Leonard, sophomore in home economics and mass communications; Senate Operations, Debbie Fields, junior in finance; State and Community Affairs, Mike Riley, junior in political science; and Student Affairs and Social Services, Brett Bromich, junior in business administration.

Senate will also consider the appointment of the U-LearnN assistant coordinator. Debbie Paap, junior in fine arts, is recommended for the position.

military assistance and $30 million in non-lethal aid.

"We must make sure they (U.S. troops) never are needed," Reagan told members of a Jewish organization. "We send money and material now so we will never have to send our own American boys."

"But if the members of Congress hide their heads in the sand and pretend the Nicaraguan threat will go away, they are courting disaster and history will hold them accountable," he said. "Nothing less than the security of the United States is at stake."

Earlier, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger argued that the leftist Nicaraguan government was becoming a "second Cuba on the American mainland (meaning) the Warsaw Pact will have effectively outflanked us."

Rep. Bob Livingston, R-La., an intelligence committee member, said Wednesday's vote indicated that Reagan's proposal faces major obstacles in the Democratic-dominated House.

"It is painfully apparent that the Democratic Party policy is to do whatever is necessary to obstruct the president's policy in Nicaragua," Livingston said.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., told his daily news conference that military aid won't really help the outnumbered "rag-tag" Contras and said he feared approval of the request would lead to direct U.S. involvement.

O'Neill said he has heard estimates that because it took 7,000 troops to overthrow the government of Grenada, it would take from 100,000 to 150,000 to defeat Nicaragua's government.

"I can see what's happening," he said. "Eventually, some American will be wounded and you'll find us in the fray ... I think it's a wrong American policy. You ought to be able to go the diplomatic route. I haven't met a world leader who agrees with American policy."

Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., chairman of the House Democratic Caucus, flatly predicted that Reagan's $100 million request would be defeated on the House floor, although leaving open the possibility of an eventual compromise.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., acknowledged that the president's plan still has not generated broad popular support and urged Reagan to give a televised speech on the subject.

"It would be very helpful," Dole said of a presidential speech. "A lot of people out there just haven't had a chance to focus on" the Nicaraguan issue.

formation in existence today," the draft reads.

A statement from "Facts about AIDS," distributed to the committee, said "casual contact with AIDS patients or persons who might be at risk for the illness does not place others at risk for getting the illness."

Although the AIDS virus has been found in saliva and tears, there have been no cases in which exposure to either was shown to result in transmission.

Kansas congressmen say no to Contra aid

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Kansas' two Democratic members of Congress met Thursday with Secretary of State George Shultz on the Reagan administration's aid proposal for Nicaraguan rebels, but said they remain opposed to the $100 million package.

"The fact of the matter is we are standing alone down there in Latin America in terms of our policy of aiding the Contras," said Rep. Jim Slattery of Topeka.

He and Rep. Dan Glickman of Wichita are among a group of 31 House Democrats that asked President Reagan in a letter last month to postpone his request for aid to the U.S.-backed guerrillas and instead push for a regional peace settlement involving the Contadora nations of Mexico, Colombia, Venezuela and Panama.

In response to that letter, Shultz met Thursday with a number of the Democrats to hear their objections and explain the administration's reasons for seeking the aid for the Contra rebels, which includes $70 million for military assistance and $30 million in logistical aid.

"I don't think he changed any minds at the meeting, and I think Shultz probably understands that this first vote they're going to lose it," Slattery said after the session.

The House is expected to vote on the aid request March 19, and a Senate vote could come before the March 26 Easter recess.

Slattery flatly declared that he would vote against the Reagan proposal. Glickman said he "probably will vote no, against the aid."

Both Kansans voted against $27 million in so-called humanitarian aid provided last year to the Contras.

Glickman and Slattery said they expected this year's Reagan aid request to fail on the House floor, but conceded it would be close.

"The message he (Shultz) got from us is you had better compromise in some fashion or else you probably will lose and even if you win, you win by one or two votes," Glickman said.

Members of Congress object to the Reagan proposal, according to Slattery, mainly because the total package is too large, contains too much military assistance and most Latin American democracies neighboring Nicaragua oppose aid to the Contras. Lawmakers also question why the administration has not more aggressively pursued the Contadora peace initiative.

Slattery, who drafted the Democratic letter to Reagan last month, said there was "loose discussion about alternatives" to the administration package but no specific compromise proposal was offered during the meeting with Shultz.

In addition, he and Glickman said Shultz gave no indication the administration was prepared to compromise before the House vote.

The Topeka Democrat said he was "trying to put together a bipartisan alternative." Under consideration are proposals to provide a smaller amount of assistance than Reagan's $100 million and limiting military aid to "defensive type weapons" such as rockets to use against helicopter gunships.

"The other possibility is fencing off the aid and not making it available unless the Contadora process completely bogs down by a date certain," said Slattery. "By doing that, some people, believe, we could put significant pressure on both the Sandinistas and the Latin democracies to negotiate a regional peace settlement."

Congressman pledges to aid recovery of Philippine funds

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Rep. Stephen Solarz, an outspoken critic of Ferdinand E. Marcos, pledged support Thursday in recovering billions of dollars the former president allegedly plundered from the public treasury.

Solarz met for an hour with Corason Aquino and other officials of the new government. The New York Democrat told reporters afterward that he asked how the United States "can be most helpful," but he did not reveal her reply.

In other developments:

—The chief prosecutor in the Benigno Aquino assassination trial last year acknowledged that Marcos intervened in the case. He called the acquittal of Gen. Fabian C. Ver, the former armed forces commander, and the other defendants "a failure of justice" that should be nullified.

—Joker Arroyo, President Aquino's executive secretary, said resignations of judges had cleared the way for her to reorganize the judiciary.

—The government news agency reported an aborted plot by Marcos loyalists to commit arson, bombings and murders during the last days of his rule, to be used as a pretext for declaring martial law.

—Marcos and his entourage, including Gen. Ver, fled the country in U.S. Air Force planes Feb. 26.

Solarz said he believed Congress could be persuaded to increase economic and military aid to the Philippines because Americans were impressed by Aquino's popular support and the peaceful revolution that brought her to power.

"The determination as to what those needs are and how they can be met needs to be made in Manila rather than in Washington," said Solarz, who is chairman of the House subcommittee on Asian affairs and has been a critic of Marcos for years.

He said he discussed Marcos' "hidden wealth" with Aquino and former Sen. Jovito Salonga, chairman of a commission to find ways of recovering it, and promised "our complete cooperation in the effort to facilitate the recovery of these resources."

Salonga has estimated that Marcos, his relatives and cronies stole from $5 billion to $10 billion in public funds during his two decades as president.

O ring damage not from design

Source blames tragedy on ice

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — A puff of steam emerged from Challenger's right booster rocket at ignition, suggesting rainwater collected in a seam, froze and may have forced open critical seals, a source close to the inquiry said Thursday.

In another development, a NASA engineer said testing had proved that O rings in seams between booster rocket segments could not have been damaged by cold weather or by a design flaw, and raised the possibility of a defect in a seam from which a plume of flame erupted seconds before the disaster that killed the seven crew members.

The space shuttle, which exploded 73 seconds after liftoff Jan. 28, had been exposed to the elements on the launch pad for 37 days, when it was pelted by at least one torrential storm with 4 inches of rain.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the steam newly noticed in photographs, emerged at 0.2 seconds after ignition, preceding a puff of black smoke from the booster segment at 0.44 seconds.

The possibility that internal ice in the U-shaped joint triggered the accident is a new avenue of investigation for the presidential commission and just one of several possible causes it will look into at Friday's hearing, the source said.

Steam would indicate that ice formed from water in the motor joint boiled immediately when the booster was igniting, the source said.

The commission investigation so far has focused on the rupture on or near a seam between the bottom and second segments of Challenger's right rocket. Photographs show a plume of flame spewing from the area 59 seconds after liftoff.

Several engineers at Morton Thiokol, which makes the boosters, said at earlier hearings that they had expressed concern before launch that sub-freezing temperatures that day might damage O rings in the seams.

But J.E. Kingsbury, chief of the science and engineering directorate at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center, told reporters that since the explosion, O rings had been tested to temperatures of 10 degrees with no adverse affect.

Kingsbury said that proved the cold weather itself did not harm the rings, and that testing did not disclose any design flaw. There may have been a defect in the seam, he said.

KPL disapproves of proposal raising prices of natural gas

By TOM SCHULTES
Business/Government Editor

KPL Gas Service Co. has urged rejection of a U.S. Department of Energy proposal to raise the prices of old natural gas, because it ignores the intent of Congress and would be costly to natural gas customers, especially in Kansas and western Missouri.

The DOE proposal, if adopted, could add at least $138 million annually to the cost of gas KPL Gas Service purchases from Northwest Central Pipeline Corp., the utility's principal gas supplier. This could result in increases of at least $85 per year for residential customers.

Tom Taylor, spokesman for KPL Gas Service in Topeka, said oil producers are pushing for the pricing change.

"They've been trying to get decontrol (of prices) for years and years and years," but Congress has refused, Taylor said.

He said the maneuvering is "kind of an end-run" around Congress by the proposal's backers, using the administration's deregulatory tactics instead.

In written comments filed this week with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, which is now considering the proposal, KPL

Gas Service said the proposal "would drive up the cost of natural gas and not increase production, but merely provide a windfall to producers of old gas at the expense of the American gas-consuming public."

The term "old gas" generally refers to natural gas discovered and under contract before early 1977.

KPL Gas Service said the proposal is misguided because it only addresses the issue of low-priced gas, while ignoring the larger problem of high-priced new gas that is causing natural gas to be priced out of some highly competitive markets. These non-market-responsive gas prices are resulting in fuel switching, from natural gas to imported oil, company officials said.

Officials of KPL Gas Service were in Washington, D.C., this week speaking to members of the Kansas and Missouri Congressional delegations in regard to the negative effects of the Reagan administration's effort to bypass Congress and raise old gas prices.

Taylor said the proposal is awaiting action, but with the methods used, any decision is "strictly outside Congress" until after the fact. He added Congress could then override any FERC decision.

Soviets restructure governing body

MOSCOW — Mikhail S. Gorbachev closed the 27th party congress Thursday with a restructuring of the Kremlin apparatus that brings Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin home from Washington and promotes the first woman into the inner circle of power in 25 years.

Gorbachev, the Communist Party's general secretary, also announced new members of the ruling Politburo, five new Central Committee secretaries, and a new Central Committee that reflects the changes in major party and economic posts since the death of Leonid Brezhnev in 1982.

The personnel changes and the program presented at the congress were designed to set a course for the Soviet Union until the end of the century and to put Gorbachev's personal stamp on the party structure.

Dobrynin, 66, has been Soviet ambassador to the United States for 25 years. He is one of 11 people, five of them new, named to the secretariat, which is in charge of day-to-day affairs in the Soviet Union.

Dobrynin's portfolio was not announced, but it is assumed he will be working in foreign policy. The Soviet Union now has two professional diplomats with extensive knowledge of the United States in the top ranks, Dobrynin and President Andrei Gromyko.

Discount rate cut to affect banks

FRANKFURT, West Germany — The central bank of West Germany decided Thursday to cut its discount rate a half point to 3.5 percent, a move that analysts said could have a profound effect on world financial markets and might compel the U.S. Federal Reserve Board to make a similar reduction.

The Deutsche Bundesbank said the reduction would be effective Friday. The discount rate is the fee the central bank charges on loans to commercial banks and is a strong influence on the direction of other interest rates.

Central banks use discount-rate cuts as a means of stimulating their nations' economies.

Financial markets had been expecting the Bundesbank move and there was strong speculation that Japan would follow with a discount rate cut effective Monday. The Bank of Japan reduced its discount rate to 4.5 percent from 5 percent on Jan. 30.

Analysts said the West German discount rate cut would put more pressure on the U.S. Federal Reserve Board to lower the U.S. discount rate, which has stood at 7.5 percent since May. The rallies in the U.S. stock and bond markets have been partly based on optimism of a discount-rate reduction.

Committee passes license fee hike

TOPEKA — The Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee Thursday endorsed and sent to the Senate a bill increasing driver's license fees, intending to use part of the additional revenue for alcohol and drug abuse prevention programs in school districts.

The bill would increase a regular operator's license to drive an automobile from $6 to $10. Truck and bus driver licenses would increase from $10 to $15, and a motorcycle permit would increase from $3 to $5. Beginners' permits would go up from 50 cents to $2.

Harley Duncan, state secretary of revenue, said the bill is designed to make the department's license and examining control bureau self-supporting. Costs force the department to take about $1 million a year from the state highway fund.

"Driver license fees have not increased since 1973, and we do not think the proposed fees are exorbitant for a four-year driving privilege," Duncan said.

The increases in the fees will raise about $2.1 million, Duncan said. About $600,000 of that would go into a safety fund, used to help finance driver education programs in local school districts.

House kills restaurant smoking bill

TOPEKA — The Kansas House Thursday killed, 53-69, a bill which would have required restaurants with seating capacity for 50 or more customers to provide non-smoking areas upon request.

The bill, which was among 11 measures on final action Thursday in the House, also would have required the larger restaurants to display signs that read, "Non-Smoking Area Available Upon Request."

Rep. Sandy Duncan, R-Wichita, the sponsor of the bill, said the measure would require restaurants to operate non-smoking sections that would enlarge or decrease in size according to demand, similar to the way airlines handle smoke-free areas.

He blamed its defeat on House members who smoke, who he said will have to answer to their non-smoking constituents.

"I guess they fail to recognize the need for non-smoking patrons to be accommodated in restaurants," Duncan said. "They will have to answer to the patrons in their districts."

Duncan suggested those upset because they can't get seating in non-smokers' areas in restaurants simply boycott those restaurants.

Task force proposes death penalty

WASHINGTON — A presidential task force recommended the death penalty for the murder of American hostages anywhere in the world on Thursday, but described U.S. policies against terrorism as generally sound and recommended no major overhaul.

The Cabinet-level task force headed by Vice President George Bush called for increased use of spies to penetrate terrorist organizations as well as strengthened extradition treaties to bring terrorists to justice.

Repeating a note that the Reagan administration has sounded in the face of bloody terrorist assaults in the Middle East, Europe and elsewhere, Bush said the group favors pinpoint strikes but opposes "wanton destruction of human life in order to show some muscle."

Immediately after taking office in the wake of the Iranian hostage crisis, President Reagan pledged that terrorists would face "swift and effective retribution." In reacting to more recent terrorist incidents, however, he has refused to use force that he said might harm innocent victims or bystanders.

"The principal conclusion of the task force is that U.S. policies and priorities are sound, well conceived and properly organized," said Adm. James Holloway, former chief of naval operations, who headed the task force working group.

Pig virus may contribute to AIDS

NEW YORK — An African virus that causes an AIDS-like illness in pigs may have been present in some American AIDS patients and could be a contributing cause of human AIDS infections, according to a new study.

Evidence of infection with African swine fever virus, or ASFV, was found in nine of 21 American AIDS patients tested, and in only one of 16 healthy Americans, according to a study to be published Saturday in the Lancet, a British medical journal.

If future experiments prove the existence of a link between African swine fever and AIDS, it would mean that doctors now searching for a cure for AIDS are aiming at the wrong target.

The new study challenges volumes of scientific evidence supporting the belief that acquired immune deficiency syndrome is caused solely by a virus most commonly called HTLV-III that was discovered in 1983.

"I don't think we're trying to say that HTLV-III is out and ASFV is in" as the cause of AIDS, said John Beldekas, a researcher at the Boston University School of Medicine and the principal author of the new study.

"What we're saying is that AIDS is complicated. It can't be explained solely by HTLV-III," he said in a telephone interview.

Dancer files lawsuit to halt film

NEW YORK — Dancer Ginger Rogers has filed an $8 million lawsuit to block release of the forthcoming Federico Fellini movie "Ginger and Fred."

Rogers, now 73 and living in Oregon, asked U.S. District Judge Robert W. Sweet to issue an injunction barring the film's distribution.

"I can't believe it," Fellini said. And the producer, Alberto Grimaldi, said the title "is a form of compliment."

Together with partner Fred Astaire, Rogers won fame in the 1930s and 1940s for her dancing and acting in such movies as "Flying Down to Rio," "Top Hat" and "Follow the Fleet." She won the 1940 Oscar for best actress for her work — without music or Astaire — in "Kitty Foyle."

According to the suit, filed Monday in U.S. District Court in Manhattan, the soon-to-be-released version of "Ginger and Fred" is an illegal attempt by Grimaldi and MGM-United Artists, the distributor, to take advantage of the Astaire-Rogers team's fame, even though the movie's dance couple is fictional.

The complaint accused the defendants of depicting Rogers in a false light, in part because the film's dance team is shown "as having been lovers" and in "a seedy manner."

875-pound man takes plane trip

FRANKFURT, West Germany — An 875-pound man had to be lifted aboard a jumbo jet by cargo-hoisting machinery and occupied the space of six first-class seats Japan Air Lines removed to make room for him.

Albert Pernitsch, 29, of Graz, Austria, claims to be the world's heaviest man. He told reporters Wednesday at Frankfurt airport he was traveling to Japan to exhibit himself at a Tokyo fair.

Japan Air Lines reinforced the Boeing 747's floor to install a special seat for Pernitsch, airport spokeswoman Sigrun Weiss said. The airline also installed a toilet with a desk-sized seat concealed by a curtain and an extra-large safety belt for Pernitsch, she said.

Pernitsch, accompanied by his brother, Joseph, traveled to Frankfurt by bus from Graz.

Senate passes funds for student lobbyist

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate approved a special allocation for Steven Johnson, sophomore in agricultural economics and student body president, to travel to Washington, D.C., March 8-12 at its weekly meeting Thursday in the Union Big Eight room.

Johnson, who will be joining other Kansas student body representatives, will be lobbying with national legislators for student concerns about upcoming Gramm-Rudman budget cuts.

Senate agreed to allocate $382 to pay for Johnson's travel expenses.

Catherine Saylor, non-degree graduate student, proposed an amendment to cut the allocation to $245 in order to stay within Student Governing Association guidelines.

"I'm concerned with being equal to all groups," Saylor said. "If we're going to set guidelines and follow them, I think that senate, more than anyone else, must abide by them."

Mike Riley, junior in political science, opposed the amendment, saying K-State "needs to send somebody where the vote counts, and that place is in Washington, D.C."

Senate defeated Saylor's amendment.

In other business, senate also approved chair positions for its standing committees. They are: Academic Affairs, Jim Crutchfield, sophomore in business administration; Communications, Candy Leonard, sophomore in home economics and mass communications; Senate Operations, Debbie Fields, junior in finance; State and Community Affairs, Riley; and Student Affairs and Social Services, Brett Bromich, junior in business administration.

Senate also approved Debbie Paap, junior in pre-art therapy, as U-Learn Associate Coordinator.

Probe sends back pictures

Soviet spaceship nears comet

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Jubilant scientists hailed a Soviet spacecraft's encounter with Halley's comet Thursday as a space triumph and said early data indicated smooth sailing for probes that will venture even nearer next week.

The crowded control room at Moscow's Institute for Space Research erupted in applause as images of the comet arrived nine minutes after Vega 1 passed 5,270 miles from it at 10:20 a.m. (2:20 a.m. EST).

The pictures provided the closest look at a comet and were believed to be the first view of a comet's icy core.

Television monitors showed color-enhanced images of a fiery red-brown center, believed to be the nucleus, surrounded by wide bands of yellow and blue. The core is believed to be about 2½ miles in diameter.

"It is a triumph, it is truly a triumph," said Fred Whipple of the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory in Cambridge, Mass., one of many foreign scientists monitoring the mission. "It's the first time in history we have had this sort of imaging system this close to a comet."

Whipple hypothesized in 1950 that comets had solid cores in what became known as the "dirty snowball" theory.

When asked whether he thought the images from Vega 1 supported his theory, he replied, "I think so."

Vega 1 is the first of five probes scheduled to fly by the comet in the next eight days. Data from the missions will take months to analyze and are expected to provide an unprecedented glimpse into the origins of the universe.

Roald A. Sagdeyev, head of the Vega program, said comets "were born at the first moment of creation of our solar system, about 4.5 billion years ago...They should be preserved rather well in the space refrigerator," a reference to the extreme cold of space.

Halley's comet, which is named after the English astronomer Edmund Halley, swings around the sun every 76 years and last was seen in 1910. On Thursday, it was about 105 million miles from Earth and 74 million miles from the sun, traveling about 104,000 mph.

Some of the most useful early data came from the only U.S. experiment aboard, a "dust counter" engineered by John Simpson, a physics professor at the University of Chicago.

He said he was nervous because his invention had never been tested in space and "there were all kinds of possible problems. There weren't. There was beautiful cooperation."

Vega 2 is expected to pass within 4,986 miles of Halley's on Sunday. The European Space Agency's Giotto probe is to pass within 310 miles of the comet Thursday. It has a television camera expected to provide the most vivid pictures of the comet's mysterious core.

One Japanese probe will pass the comet at a distance of about 93,960 miles Saturday, and a second one will swing within 6.9 million miles on Monday.

Most of the approximately 100 foreign scientists in Moscow to monitor the probe praised the Soviets for the sophistication of the Vega program and their willingness to share information.

Counselor teaches stress relief

By The Collegian Staff

Students who experience stress during major exams can find relief in a few seconds with a "quick stress management strategy," said Dave Danskin, counseling psychologist at the Counseling Center.

Danskin spoke on "Stress — Who needs it?" Thursday at the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas lecture in the Union Courtyard.

Danskin told members of the audience they should smile, take deep breaths, release and become slack in their chairs, sag their shoulders and smooth their foreheads. Danskin calls the process the "Four S" approach; smile, slack, sag and smooth.

Danskin said people learn to be stressful at an early age.

"We tend to learn to get ourselves more psyched up than we need to be. It can go back as far as second grade," he said.

Danskin said he, as well as most, had a teacher in second grade who would tell him on Monday that the class would have a test on Friday. This way he had a whole week to worry about how well he would do not only for himself but also for his parents. That is where stress begins, he said.

People become stressed between 50 and 200 times a day, Danskin said.

Danskin suggested several techniques to help relieve the stress symptoms. With the "Four S" approach, he suggests students do simple stretches between classes, including everything from rolling the head and shoulders to leaning over to touch the toes.

Danskin also suggests several stress skills for people while they're confined to sitting.

Farm leaders lobby on budget cuts

By KIM KIDD
Collegian Reporter

In response to proposed budget cuts prompted by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction legislation, area farm leaders have been in Washington this week to plead their case.

Three representatives of the Kansas Farm Bureau and about 100 farmers will return from Washington, D.C., today after lobbying for key agriculture issues, said Sam Knipp, assistant director of public relations.

The main issue discussed on this eighth annual trip for representatives of the KFB was the farm economic situation.

Knipp said the lobbyists hoped to accomplish three goals in their efforts. The first is to slow the growth of government because farmers feel it is growing too fast. Secondly, farmers want lower interest rates. The third goal is to improve the international market for U.S. agricultural exports.

To accomplish these goals, KFB officials Paul Fleener, Gordon Hibbard, Don Wilson and the delegation lobbied against current Gramm-Rudman proposals.

"Farmers are not opposed to the idea (of Gramm-Rudman budget cuts), but we are opposed to the implementation of cuts as it exists today," Knipp said.

The currently proposed cuts would force a 20 percent budget reduction from agricultural programs when affected programs represent about 4 percent of the total budget process.

"It's just not fair to balance the budget on the backs of the farmers," Knipp said.

The KFB lobbyists, he said, reported that Congress is receptive to what farmers and agriculture officials are telling them, but there is still a lot of work to do.

"Their hands are tied as far as the defense budget," Knipp said, "so we have a lot of work to do to convince other Congress (members) and President Reagan."

In addition to the effects of Gramm-Rudman on agriculture, the lobbyists also met with Department of Agriculture officials for briefings on the USDA farm bill and other USDA programs.

Another issue addressed by the delegation was encouraging Congress to investigate federal grain standards. Knipp said farmers feel that grain grading standards need to be changed to encourage more efficient trade and exporting.

Public should oppose lie detectors in court

The majority of Americans believe lie detectors should be used in the courtroom, according to a recent telephone poll by Media General-Associated Press.

The poll of 1,512 adult Americans found that 72 percent believe the machines should be used in court to test those accused of crimes and 63 percent said witnesses in court should also be tested.

Some form of public education is needed on the success of lie detectors in determining whether people are telling the truth. The tests are not currently allowed as evidence in court because their validity is open to debate.

The lie detector, or polygraph, is a device which gives an indication of whether an individual is lying. Although it is often used in criminal investigation, its results are only conditionally admissible as legal evidence.

Its use is based on the assumption that lying produces emotional, and hence physiological, reactions in the individual. It usually measures changes in blood pressure, pulse rate and respiration. Sometimes muscular movements and perspiration are also tested.

Physiological changes observed may be the result of lying. They may also be the result of nervousness. In fact, anxiety over taking the test may produce physiological reactions which seem to indicate lying.

Because lie-detector tests are unreliable, it would be inappropriate to require that defendants and court witnesses take the test to prove their innocence or to determine their value as witnesses.

Eight in 10 respondents thought lie-detector tests should be given to government employees who have access to classified information. Late last year, President Reagan issued a directive permitting polygraphs for federal employees with access to classified information. The proposal came under fire in Congress and Secretary of State George Schultz said he would quit before submitting to the test.

Three-quarters of the respondents also said it was appropriate for employers to submit their employees to the tests if they are suspected of stealing, although most objected to using the test as a general business practice.

Requiring defendants, witnesses, employees or anyone to take lie-detector tests is an invasion of privacy in which the end does not justify the means.

Responsible behavior should govern break

Re: The guest column, "Spring break carries hidden risks," in Thursday's Collegian:

If Edee Dalke shocked at least one person on this campus into reasonable behavior over spring break, then her purpose for writing to the University from her job in Daytona Beach, Fla., was achieved.

Dalke has seen spring break from both angles. She first saw spring break as a K-State student. She now sees it from the point of view of a community member of a national spring break 'hot spot.' For those who missed Dalke's column, she described the deaths of three students visiting Daytona Beach during spring break 1985.

All three students fell to violent deaths from the heights of their respective hotels and condominiums, and the autopsies of all three showed the influence of alcohol. The students were from Canada, Illinois and Florida — they could easily have been from Kansas. Two were male and one was female — they could easily have been one of us — any of us.

It's not only a cliché; it's a fact that where you'll find college students, you'll also find parties. And no one really wants to stop the parties — not even the haunted hotel owners in Daytona Beach. What everyone wants is responsible behavior from students whether in Florida; Padre Island, Texas; New York; the Colorado ski slopes; or at home.

Everyone, have a good time, be careful, and see you after spring break.

KU plan calls for defense initiative

Every year as the University of Kansas grows and K-State shrinks, K-State's inferiority complex intensifies.

"We want to be bigger than KU" was an often heard phrase during the original planning of the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum. KU's latest movement, the Jayhawk Defense Initiative, just may have K-State and its alumni beat.

A group of innovative students at KU have developed an unorthodox and cynically humorous way to respond to President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative. After spending months trying to educate the campus about the problems and consequences of SDI, students have now joined together and reversed course. With a practicality characteristic of Midwesterners, the students decided "If you can't beat 'em, join 'em" and are asking for a giant bomb shelter under Mount Oread, the hill upon which KU rests.

A Feb. 22 article in the Kansas City Times by Jake Thompson explains the issue.

The campaign began when mysterious signs appeared on campus featuring two Jayhawks with shovels tucked under their wings. "Unlike SDI, we have the technology for JDI..." the signs read.

Not until the next week, after the university community's curiosity had been sufficiently aroused, did the group reveal their goal. JDI supporters are now busily collecting signatures to force a student referendum on the issue. If the referendum passes the group plans to seek financing from the state Legislature.

The play is an obvious but ingenious spoof. KU junior Kirstin Meyers insists that the campaign is serious but acknowledges that the proposal is intended to jolt people from a "nuclear malaise," an attitude of "eat, drink, be merry today, let's not worry about tomorrow."

The slogan for the group — "With enough shovels..." comes from the infamous quote of T.K. Jones whose office in the Pentagon has the major responsibility for the development of the third generation of nuclear weapons. Jones' advice on how to survive a nuclear war is pathetically simple: "Dig a hole, cover it up with a couple of doors and then throw three feet of dirt on top...It's the dirt that does it...If there are enough shovels to go around, everybody's going to make it."

JDI members watched last year as the Brown University student body requested that the student health center stock cyanide pills so that a painless form of suicide would be available to students in case of a nuclear war. JDI considers suicide too negative, so they've decided to try to survive the war.

KU's bomb shelter will be first rate, according to the article in the Kansas City Times. The underground vault will be equipped with all the essentials — beds, food, recreational equipment, stress counselors, a governing body and law enforcement.

JDI is not exactly sure what such a shelter would cost but off-handedly estimates "about a trillion dollars."

Leaders top '5 Greatest People' list

The results are in. Now, for the moment we've all been waiting for (whether you know it or not). Bob and Russ proudly present the selections for K-State's five biggest movers and shakers. We're talking real coffee drinkers; just call them "K-State's Five Greatest People."

Out of 17,000 students, you may wonder how anyone could select a single handful as K-State's best. Well, it wasn't easy. Our involvement in a number of campus activities and organizations has convinced us of the need to recognize a few of our peers as true standouts. So we did our homework. We polled several student leaders from a wide base of backgrounds and asked them to name their top five.

We intentionally left the word "great" to be defined by each individual. Nevertheless, all of those who have made the list share certain characteristics:

— Personality. Any legitimately great person must be charismatic, personable and intelligent. They must exhibit a solid set of values and a bearable level of confidence.

— Leadership. All of our selections are leaders in their own right. Aside from the ability to command respect, each has his or her distinctive way of motivating people and accomplishing what he or she sets out to do.

— Diversity. To be one of K-State's best, an individual must be outstanding in a variety of areas.

— Impact on the University. The most striking characteristic of each "Great" is that his or her effects on this campus are significant and invariably positive.

Until now, the results of our research have remained hermetically sealed, stored in a mayonnaise jar under Funk and Wagnall's front porch. In alphabetical order, K-State's Five Greatest People are:

1. Tami Barham, senior in psychology: 1984-85 K-State Ambassador, Presidential Search Committee member, Student Alumni Board member and International SPURS officer. Tami just may be the classic K-Stater.

2. Steve Cashman, junior in marketing: This guy is in everything. If it's not a concern of yours, it's not a concern of his.

3. Brett Lambert, senior in political science: his experience as campus director of Associated Students of Kansas and his work overseas and at the Brookings Institute in Washington bring a new perspective to our campus.

4. Sally Traeger, senior in marketing: the big question is, "Does she ever sleep?" As president of Business Council, Senate Opera-

At least two central Kansas newspapers have taken the spoof seriously. Even KU administrators are uncertain just how to answer to the group. When asked for a cost estimate, Allen Wiechert, the university's director of facilities planning said, "To build something, of course, would be very expensive and our priority is for teaching and research facilities."

One cruelly humorous twist to the proposal is JDI's policy to refuse admittance to non-university persons. "Obviously we can't save everyone in a nuclear war," Meyers said, "and while we wouldn't keep the information from anyone, we do feel preservation of the educated youth and the educators is the key to rebuilding after a nuclear war."

K-State has a lot to compete with if JDI succeeds. The only way to outwit KU at this point is to once again revise the coliseum, this time placing it below the water table instead of above it.

For once, K-State's silo-tech image could come in useful in competing for federal funds. After all, who wants to save a bunch of lawyers, K-State officials could argue. How would a liberal arts major fit into Mad Max's barbaric post-nuclear world?

Kill two birds with one stone, K-State can plead; save the young agrarians and make the coliseum truly multipurpose. K-State could even propose to tunnel over to the Veterinary Medicine Complex which is filled with animals that, if not killed by the blast, would make good eating.

With the Jayhawk Defense Initiative, KU students have devised a magnificent way to get national attention. By the time the spotlight fades, though, K-State alumni just may rally to the cause and build the best and biggest bomb shelter in the Big Eight.

tions Committee chairwoman, and founder and director of KSU Students Against Multiple Sclerosis, Sally's impact will be felt for many years to come.

5. Virgil Wiebe, senior in political science: Rhodes Scholar, Student Senator, and diehard skateboarder. Virgil has an impeccable sense of fairness, and his dedication to K-State students is unwavering.

Those receiving honorable mention status include Jerry Day, senior in engineering technology; Patty Hipsher, junior in political science; Lori Shellenberger, sophomore in pre-law; and Ron Wineinger, senior in agricultural economics.

While we are at it let's look into our crystal ball for Future Greats. Michelle Benoit, sophomore in agricultural economics; Doug Burton, freshman in electrical engineering; Ed Frankenberg, freshman in electrical engineering; Steven Johnson, sophomore in animal sciences and industry; Candy Leonard, sophomore in home economics; Joel Marquardt, sophomore in architectural engineering; and Kent Williams, sophomore in pre-design professions, all promise to contribute greatly in the future.

Well, that's our list. If you don't like it, may your only son be locked in a steam room with the Village People. Seriously, make your own list if you'd like to. We all know students whom we should strive to be more like. After all, it's people like these that really make K-State the "People Place."

Russ Pugh is a junior in marketing and Bob Avery is a sophomore in electrical engineering.

Apartment quantity passes quality

Have you ever revisited a town or area where you used to live and been surprised at how changed it was? K-State graduates of 1985 would probably be surprised at how different the residential sections east and south of campus look now.

In short time numerous apartment complexes have appeared — some of them virtually overnight. And the old adage of similarity applies astonishingly well to these brick boxes. If you've seen one, you have seen them all.

I am suspicious that the different contractors constructing these plexes are using identical building plans, and unfortunately the plan is not an aesthetically pleasing one. Row after row of eight and 12 unit apartment blocks brings to mind housing units near military bases.

In addition to the fact that these apartment complexes' exterior appearances border on ugly, I have arguments against their sudden unplanned proliferation, short construction periods and the philosophy of their owners.

When a building is raised by Friday — and it was begun on Monday — my reaction is one of suspicion. There simply cannot be any attention whatsoever paid to detail or potential problem areas when the construction is nearly completed within one work week. Quality is questionable at best and I wonder who made out the construction schedule — the owner or the construction foreman.

Since quality is in question, the followup questions would be how long are these complexes going to last and who is going to repair and maintain them when their exteriors and interiors are degraded?

This brings us to the philosophy of the owners of the buildings.

Because construction and insurance costs are so high, owners must borrow an enormous amount of money to finance one of these housing ventures. They have to construct these buildings at or under budget so they cut construction time and the quality of the materials.

They also buy the smallest parcel of land possible on which to build leaving a ridiculously tiny amount of space for parking. Here's where the nightmare begins.

Rent is so high in these brand-spanking

JONIE TRUED

Collegian

new apartment complexes that it takes four students at least to pay the total bill. Of the four students living there only two are given a place to keep their cars and the other two have to trot down to the police station to buy a green or an orange sticker to permit them to park on the street.

The resulting scene is an ugly brick box with a few cars parked around it and dangerously clogged streets for blocks around. This is not responsible construction.

The owners of these buildings do not have the best interests of anyone at heart except themselves. They want the highest return on their investment in the shortest time possible and they're gouging students to do it.

In 10 years, these buildings are going to need major reconstruction efforts. They are going to be worn and torn and I seriously doubt the quality of living in the complexes is going to be as good as residence halls.

Some regulations need to be imposed on housing contractors in the University locale. The Manhattan City Commission, for example, could establish some restrictions for contractors concerning the amount of land they purchase for the comparative number of apartments involved. If an apartment is constructed with two bedrooms and the rent is $400 it is reasonable to assume four students would live there. If four students sign the lease then the landlord should be responsible for providing parking for all four. This would at least relieve some of the congestion in residential areas.

The University's Department of Housing could also take a more active role in regulating quality housing close to campus. Currently, they provide a list of off-campus housing possibilities without checking out the quality of the living quarters, and with no recommendations as to which landlords students should try to avoid.

Students wanting to live off-campus are often ignorant of all of the legal implications involved with leasing and consequently a number of students end up with legal battles on their hands.

City commissioners and the housing department could help solve the problem of low-quality housing that seems to have developed in Manhattan if they were urged to do so by concerned students. Students will have to become concerned with the quality of off-campus housing if the trend of living off-campus continues. If we just go along with the flow and pay no attention to the responsibilities housing officials should be fulfilling, we could end up going over the falls in a wooden barrel.

Meats lab to close for 1 year

By ANGIE SCHUMAKER
Collegian Reporter

Tradition is stepping aside to make way for progress at the meats lab in Weber Hall.

The lab, specializing in cutting and processing beef, lamb and pork, will close its doors temporarily on March 14 because of the Weber Hall renovation project. It is scheduled to reopen in the fall of 1987.

Located in the northeast corner of Weber, the lab has been in existence since the opening of the hall, said Bob Danler, research assistant. Danler has been in charge of the lab for five years.

In this time, Danler said he has seen the lab start to make more processed meats, for example pepperoni and bratwurst, but added that "the operation is basically the same."

He said the renovation of Weber and the meats lab is an important step toward better preparing students for work in the meat industry. The lab employs about 10-12 students each semester.

"The meat industry is one of the top industries in the state. We're here to prepare students for the industry, but when they leave here they're not prepared to work with modern facilities," he said. "We're trying to update our facilities and keep up with the industry. We also have to keep up with USDA requirements."

Research is another reason the renovation is important.

"We're here to help the industry," Danler said. "In order to do that, we need the same capabilities that they have. If they can't duplicate our research, it doesn't help them as much as it should."

Increased student numbers provides a third reason for the renovation.

"We've outgrown our facilities," he said. "In the '50s, there were 40 to 50 animal science students, and now there are nearly 400 students."

The meats lab functions as a part of the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry. Classes evaluate a specific number of livestock each semester both in the live and carcass forms. The majority of the livestock processed by the lab comes from these classes.

"We work with classes that do live evaluations (of livestock), and we slaughter for them," Danler said. "We also slaughter for research projects, and we work with the meats processing classes. We take cuts from these classes and put them into retail. We're trying to get as much value out of the products as we can."

Although Danler said teaching and research are the main reasons for its existence, the lab is probably best known for its weekly meat sales.

As it does every Friday, the lab will have a sale today from noon to 5:30 p.m. This will be the last regular sale. From March 10 to 14, the lab will have sales daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., or until all of the meat is sold.

Because the week-long sale will feature discount prices, Danler said the best selection of cuts would be available early in the week and the meat would be sold strictly on a first-come first-serve basis.

"We don't advertise, so people hear about it by word-of-mouth. We're not here to compete with the local businesses," Danler said. "Most of our customers are connected with the University in some way. Students make up about one-third of our sales.

"We're a separate entity just like a small packing house," he said. "Hopefully we'll make enough from our sales to pay the bills and the help."

Unlike meat bought at the grocery store, the meat sold at the lab is wrapped and frozen so the customers never see the actual product.

"We sell from frozen, wrapped packages, so they don't see the meat until they get home. If it's bad, they won't come back. That dictates the quality and it's the quality that brings them back," he said.

Marie Lucas, who has been a customer of the meats lab since 1968, said the quality of the meat has always been good.

"I've seen a lot of changes," she said. "The meat has always been good, but I think the quality is exceptional at the moment. The ground beef is very lean and our favorite is the club steak. Their ground lamb makes marvelous Moussaka (a Mid-Eastern dish) and you can't always get ground lamb."

"I'm very sorry it's going to be closing, but it comes at a good time for us," she said.

Lucas' husband is a professor of electrical and computer engineering and plans to go on sabbatical for a year.

"I'll miss being able to go there," Lucas said, "but we'll be back just in time for it to open again."

Lots open over break

By The Collegian Staff

Using limited special powers, Charles Beckom, superintendent of the K-State Police, has opened campus parking for the week of spring break March 10 through 14 to those drivers with a valid University parking permit.

For the past three to four years, Beckom has on special occasions opened University parking, allowing students and faculty to park in each other's designated slots.

"When there are only a few students on campus it's kind of silly to require someone to park two blocks away when there is an open space near the building they want to be in," Beckom said.

The open parking also allows the remaining residence hall students to park close to the building, he said.

Beckom said in the past there have been problems with campus parking over breaks. This was because open parking times had been decided at the beginning of the school year and when events changed the schedule didn't work, he said.

Campus magazine receives honors

By PAT HUND
Collegian Reporter

Kansas Quarterly has been chosen as one of the top 16 literary, non-commercial magazines in the nation as judged by a survey of editors, scholars and writers last fall.

Results of the survey, which was conducted by the staff of Literary Magazine Review, will be printed in the next issue of that magazine. Both are University publications, said Gary Clift, instructor in English and editor of the Literary Magazine Review.

"We had more than 100 respondents to the survey including scholars, authors and other people interested in literary work," he said.

Reviews of the other top 15 magazines in the survey will be published in the next issue of Literary Magazine Review, Clift said.

For the second consecutive year, Kansas Quarterly has been chosen as the top non-paying market for fiction in the United States by Writers Digest.

Kansas Quarterly is a quarterly publication which contains short stories and poetry from around the world. First published in 1872, it is one of the oldest literary magazines in Kansas.

"Because Kansas Quarterly gives monetary awards a lot of people get interested," said Harold Schneider, professor of English and editor of Kansas Quarterly.

Schneider said two different monetary awards are given to people who submit poetry and short stories — the Seaton Award and the Kansas Arts Commission Award.

"The Seaton Award only goes to Kansans, while anybody who wins a specific category is eligible to receive the Kansas Arts Commission award," Schneider said.

Schneider said several editors including himself decide what literary pieces should be chosen for publication in Kansas Quarterly.

"We make a decision on the basis of support for that article," he said. "We then have some poets and novelists judge the best stories and they decide who will win."

Lady Cat comeback falls short in 57-56 loss

K-State forward Sue Leiding reaches for the ball after it was tipped from her hands as University of Colorado's Gretchen DeWitte looks on from behind during the Lady Cats' 57-56 loss to the Lady Buffs Thursday night in a semifinal game of the Big Eight Conference Post-Season Tournament in Kansas City's Kemper Arena.

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Shooting 29.3 percent from the field won't win too many basketball games.

But the K-State Lady Cats came about as close as a sub-30 percent shooting team can to winning in Thursday night's 57-56 loss to Colorado in the semifinals of the Big Eight Conference Women's Post-Season Tournament at Kemper Arena.

K-State stayed close to the Lady Buffs throughout the contest, leading for parts of the first half and early in the second half. But a late Lady Cat rally fell short to give Colorado the victory.

"We didn't shoot the ball well, but we played good enough defense to win the game if we could have gotten the shots to fall," K-State Coach Matilda Mossman said.

"I don't have any real explanation (for the poor shooting)...I thought in the first half we were shooting off balance. We weren't squaring up (to the basket) real well."

Enabling K-State to stay close was a Colorado team that wasn't shooting much better, hitting only 37.7 percent from the field.

"We haven't had a (shooting) night like this in quite some time," Colorado Coach Ceal Barry said.

"We've got good shooters, we really do."

When the two teams were scoring, it usually happened in streaks.

In the first half, Colorado moved out to a 16-8 lead with 9:44 left, before K-State's Tracey Bleczinski scored a string of seven consecutive points to bring the Lady Cats to within one point.

Bleczinski finished with a career high 12 points in only 15 minutes of court time. She also had five rebounds.

Bleczinski's streak began an 11-2 run which saw the Lady Cats lead Colorado 21-18 with five minutes left until halftime. However, Colorado came back to take a 25-22 halftime lead.

K-State scored the first two baskets of the second half to go up 26-25 but could never take the lead again.

Just when the Lady Cats appeared to be out of the game, trailing 53-48 with 52 seconds left, K-State benefited from what turned out to be the most unusual play of the game.

On a set play where three Lady Cat players formed a wall screen for Susan Green to take a shot from near the free throw line, a Colorado player charged through the wall and fouled Amanda Holley after Green had hit a jumper. Holley went to the line and made both ends of a 1-and-1 to bring the Lady Cats to within one, 53-52.

"Here we are in the semifinals of the Big Eight tournament, we finished in last place last year, we have a five-point lead and they get a four-point play...I said to myself oh, geez," Barry said. "But deep down, I still felt we were going to win."

Colorado scored their next time down the floor on a shot by LeaAnn Banks to lead 55-52 with 27 seconds left. Susan Green countered for K-State, taking a feed under the basket and scoring with 12 seconds left to pull the 'Cats to within one.

K-State was then forced to foul Erin Carson with eight seconds to play. Carson hit both ends of a 1-and-1 to seal the victory for the Lady Buffs. Amanda Holley's shot at the buzzer accounted for the final margin.

Coleman newcomer-of-year

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Norris Coleman's first year in major college basketball ended in controversy, but even so the K-State star has been named the Big Eight Conference newcomer of the year.

Despite contradiction and question involving his eligibility, a panel of sportswriters and sportscasters who were asked to identify the top first-year player in the Big Eight in the 1985-86 season made Coleman a unanimous choice.

The 6-foot-8 Coleman averaged more than 20 points and eight rebounds a game and was the nation's top freshman scorer. Bursting out of near-total obscurity with K-State, he was also one of the best players in the Big Eight.

Last week, an NCAA committee ruled that Coleman could not include ninth-grade work in figuring his transcript from Paxon High School in Jacksonville, Fla., because other Paxon students did not have their ninth-grade work included.

Reluctantly, K-State then declared him ineligible because that brought his overall grade point below the required 2.00. The decision is under appeal.

Wildcats set to face 'Hawks minus Coleman and Meyer

By TONY CARBAJO
Sports Writer

After forfeiting four conference victories for the purposes of Big Eight Conference tournament brackets, K-State will have to face Kansas in the first-round of the post-season tournament today in Kansas City's Kemper Arena.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association's Administrative Council ruled on Feb. 27 that K-State stand-out Norris Coleman was not a "2.0 qualifier" when he graduated in 1979 from Paxon Senior High School in Jacksonville, Fla. Upon the ruling, K-State declared Coleman, 24, to be ineligible from further participation in the current season.

Since Coleman's graduation, the rules for determining grade point averages for Paxon High School graduates allow for an eight semester transcript to be used.

K-State officials are in the process of appealing the Council's ruling. The appeal is expected to be heard by the NCAA Council at its next meeting in April.

But, for the purposes of the post-season tournament, the Big Eight voted to seed the Wildcats No. 8. Instead of facing Iowa State, the No. 2 seed, K-State will now be facing Kansas, the No. 1 seed.

K-State will be trying to break a seven-game losing skid to the Jayhawks, while Head Coach Jack Hartman will be going after his first victory over KU mentor Larry Brown in his fifth attempt.

Kansas, the No. 2 team in this week's national polls, does not sport many weaknesses, according to Hartman.

"They're a team that has a lot of superior qualities," Hartman said. "Even though they have some breakdowns here and there and are not at their psychological peak, they are still strong enough to survive over most of the teams in the Big Eight."

The turn of events this week has undoubtedly taken its toll on the young Wildcats, although Hartman said the team was going to Kansas City looking for a win, not excuses.

"Our situation does not look very bright," Hartman said. "Obviously, we are going to show up and play our very, very best. We are without the services of Coleman and (6-foot-9 center Ron) Meyer — we are short handed."

"It will be highly unlikely we can beat those teams, but we are going to try. We will be given 40 minutes to prove it."

Without Coleman and Meyer, who ended the season with a knee injury at Columbia, Mo., the Wildcats will be looking for someone to fill their rebounding voids. Coleman was second in the league in rebounding, averaging eight caroms a contest.

"Kansas' size gives everybody problems," Hartman said. "It gave us problems when we had Norris and Meyer. We are really looking uphill."

Ben Mitchell and Joe Wright picked up the scoring void left by Coleman in K-State's final regular season contest against Nebraska. Wright knocked in 26 points, while Mitchell added a season high 20 points. Percy Eddie helped in the cause by grabbing a season high 10 rebounds in his first starting assignment in 10 games.

GAME NOTES: Ben Mitchell is averaging 11 points a game in the Big Eight race, compared to 6.3 ppg in non-conference play... Mitchell also cracked the top 20 career scoring chart for the Wildcats last Saturday with 865 total points. Next on the list is Earl Seyfert with 867... tipoff is at 2:10 and the game will be shown on KSN TV networks... the game can also be heard on WIBW (580 AM) radio.

Errors haunt Wildcats in loss to Mississippi

By The Collegian Staff

Three K-State errors led to four unearned Mississippi runs as the Wildcats let an early 5-0 lead slip away in a 7-5 loss Thursday afternoon in University, Miss.

After a scoreless first three innings, K-State, now 9-2 on the season, grabbed a 4-0 advantage in the top of the fourth and increased the lead to 5-0 with a run in the top of the fifth. In the bottom half of the fifth, however, the floodgates opened and Mississippi scored five runs to tie the game. Mississippi added single runs in the sixth and seventh innings to secure the victory.

"Two good teams hooked it up today (Thursday), and we came up on the short end," K-State Coach Gary Vaughn said. "We left far too many runners on base."

"We got a five-run lead, and you can't sit back on a lead like that and expect to win."

K-State's defensive miscues overshadowed fine pitching performances by Rocky Ferguson and Paul Iseman, who teamed to strikeout eight and walk only two. Ferguson (2-2) was charged with the loss.

Two of the three earned runs charged to Ferguson and Iseman came on Mississippi home runs — one by Joe Jex and one by Robert Cole.

K-State's offense was led by Mike Hamacher, who doubled, and Jim Donohue, who homered. Wildcat Jeff Tuttle extended his hitting streak to 10 games in the contest, and Otto Kaifes was hit twice by pitched balls, running his total to five on the young season.

K-State continues its current road-trip today with an afternoon contest at Mississippi State. The 'Cats then swing through Louisiana before returning to Manhattan following spring break for a contest March 18 against Central Missouri State at Frank Meyers Field.

Wildcats sign linebacker to letter

Allen Amos, a 6-foot-2 linebacker from Atlanta, Ga., signed a letter-of-intent to play football for K-State this fall, Coach Stan Parrish announced Thursday.

Amos led Booker T. Washington High School in tackles his senior year with 110 and was second team all-Atlanta his senior season.

Amos is a three-year starter in high school.

Crew team to open new season

The K-State crew team, which now numbers between 45 and 50 men and women, will open its 1986 season next Saturday, March 15, when it travels to Austin, Texas, to compete in the Heart of Texas Regatta.

According to Coach Don Rose, the team is nearly double the size of the team one year ago. Rose credits the increased numbers to a renewed spirit surrounding the sport.

"Spirit is up. It comes and goes, and right now we've developed a feeling for crew again and the program is on its way back up," he said.

K-State will have varsity, junior varsity and freshmen teams in the men's competition at Texas and will have a varsity and junior varsity team in women's competition.

Teams scheduled to compete at Texas include Kansas, Washburn, Wichita State, Tulane, Texas and Colorado State.

Phi Wacka Jacka wins intramural title game

By The Collegian Staff

A blocked shot and a baseline basket by Phi Wacka Jacka's Sam Weems with 20 seconds remaining in the game lifted Phi Wacka Jacka to a 47-46 victory over Sigma Alpha Epsilon at the All-University championship basketball tournament Thursday night.

Weems blocked an SAE jump shot with less than a minute remaining and Phi Wacka Jacka down by one point, 46-45. Phi Wacka Jacka moved the ball down the floor and Weems connected on a five-foot attempt to put his team up by one. SAE couldn't put the ball in the basket with the time remaining and the game ended. The first half was all Phi Wacka Jacka as they jumped to an early lead and led at the half by a score of 33-20.

SAE outscored Phi Wacka Jacka 26-14 in the second half but it wasn't enough to win the championship.

SAE Mike Fiser said his team played more intense defense in the second half to catch up.

"We slacked off the first half and it hurt us," Fiser said. "The second half was better. We played better defense and tried to run more with the ball."

Fiser summed up the season by stating the SAEs were pleased with their overall effort and will be anxious to play next season.

Ken Bayles of Phi Wacka Jacka said his team simply slacked off in the second half and let SAE back in the game.

"We took an early lead, but I guess we got pleased with that and slacked off in the second half," Bayles said. "They took advantage of it and didn't give up. We had a hard time hitting our shots in the second half and didn't play good defense."

Bayles said his team had trouble earlier in the season with second half play, but always managed to pull themselves together.

Coleman

Pending the appeal, the final standings will reflect K-State's four victories and Coleman's K-State freshman records for scoring and rebounding will be listed with an asterisk.

"It would be senseless to pretend that Norris Coleman hasn't existed and hasn't played in the Big Eight this year," said one voter, David Sittler of the Tulsa Tribune. "Besides, the case is still under appeal. I don't see how we can assume that K-State will lose the appeal."

When Coleman enrolled, K-State listed his age as 22 and his service time as four years.

When media reports began questioning Coleman's background, K-State officials adjusted their news releases to indicate that he was 24. It was later determined that his time in the Army was almost six years. At first, K-State said he was a freshman. Then K-State said he was a sophomore. Then, after a vote by the NCAA convention in January that dealt with exemptions for athletes with service time, they said he was a freshman again.

When told of the NCAA's decision last week, Coleman reacted with the cool, unflappable maturity which characterized his play.

"Life has its ups and downs," he said. "This is one of those downs."

Coleman's future in collegiate basketball is anybody's guess. Depending on rulings by the NCAA or the Big Eight, he could have two, three or no years left. He may stay at K-State. He may transfer.

Earlier, it was announced that AP voters had named Larry Brown of Kansas as coach of the year. Brown's third year with the Jayhawks has seen them win the regular season title for the first time in eight years and compile a 28-3 record, one victory shy of an all-time school record. Iowa State's Johnny Orr and Nebraska's Moe Iba each received one vote.

Sessions to focus on equine care

Horsemen seminar to feature speakers

By DIXIE GLANVILLE
Collegian Reporter

The Fifth Annual K-State Horseman's Conference will feature a nationally recognized cutting-horse trainer and showman, Tom Lyons.

Lyons, Grandview, Texas, will begin his session on starting and training young performance horses at 6 p.m. Saturday in Weber Arena.

The conference, sponsored by the Division of Cooperative Extension, the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry and the KSU Horseman's Association, begins at 11 a.m., with registration in Umberger Hall.

The pre-registration numbers are up this year, said Dennis Sigler, assistant professor in animal sciences and industry.

Several speakers will highlight the conference. Pete Gibbs, extension horse specialist, will speak on feeding and management of the broodmare; C.A. Cofer, professional horseman and owner of Sales Management Company, Wichita, on marketing in today's horse industry; Stan O'Neil, veterinarian from Salina, on practical health programs for horse farms and Sigler, on total hoof care. Graduate students will also give an update on the equine research projects at K-State.

The conference is meant to be a producer-type activity for people in the (horse) business, backyard owners or anyone who enjoys horses, Sigler said. The talks are geared toward people in the business, whether it be one horse or 100, he said.

This year a championship cutting-horse contest will take place in conjunction with the conference at 10 a.m. Sunday in Weber Arena.

The contest is normally conducted in April but has been moved up this year to accommodate the renovation of Weber Hall, Sigler said.

There are four classes in the contest. The first is a National Cutting Horse Association approved class open to professional and amateur riders who wish to qualify for the NCHA championship. This class has $500 added money, above the entry fees, to make it a qualifying class for championship cutting horses.

Sigler said in order to qualify for the national championship, a class must have $200 added to the purse.

There is also a NCHA non-professional jackpot class open to amateurs and professionals.

The third and fourth amateur events include a jackpot, open to anyone who has not won more than $5,000 in cutting horse competition and a novice horse/novice rider class, approved by the association. The rider and horse cannot have won more than $1,000 to be eligible for this last jackpot class, Sigler said.

ASK legislative director quits to become roundtable leader

By The Collegian Staff

The Associated Students of Kansas Director of Legislative Affairs John Allen resigned his position March 1 to become executive director for the National Student Roundtable.

The position will not be filled until July 1, with the selection process for a replacement beginning in June, said ASK Executive Director Chris Graves.

No specific qualifications have been set for possible applicants for the full-time, salaried position, Graves said.

ASK will be looking for "a person willing and able to coordinate (the organization's) legislative position across the state," Graves said.

The job entails lobbying for ASK's platform in the state legislature and handling press relations. Until July, when a new legislative director is hired, current ASK employees will cover these responsibilities.

ASK represents the student governments of the state's seven public universities.

In his new position as executive director of the National Student Roundtable, Allen will be managing finances and general operations for the association.

He will be working with state associations, including ASK, to represent the interests of 6 million college students across the nation in matters of higher education.

Horror-like film has funny, phony scenes

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

That stable of American horror, the haunted house, has returned in a tongue-in-cheek horror movie, simply titled "House." It's a traditionally eerie-looking, gothic home, not unlike Norman Bates' home in "Psycho." But the inhabitants aren't just transparent apparitions who drift down hallways. They have horribly twisted bodies, bloodshot eyes and fangs.

Film Review

The movie is at its best when there aren't any explanations why these creatures hide in the closet or try pulling the neighbor boy up the chimney. Near the end the movie it tries to explain itself and suddenly horror becomes tangible.

"House" borrows most freely from "Poltergeist." Both movies have a similar monster in the closet. The hero of "House," Roger Cobb, even gets pulled into this closet.

Roger (William Katt) is a best-selling author of horror novels. His life is a wreck. His son has mysteriously disappeared. His aunt hanged herself upstairs in her house. So what does Roger do? He moves into his aunt's home, hoping for a little peace and quiet. The movie is so absurdly funny that the gaps in logic aren't all that significant, until the ending, that is.

Until then the movie does an admirable job of balancing between horror and comedy. There's a hilarious scene where a real estate broker shows the house to Roger. And there's a great opening where Roger signs autographs for a motley bunch of fans.

Once he moves in, the horror begins. Roger tries working on a novel about his experiences in Vietnam, but soon after, garden tools hover in the air and chase him down halls. A marlin mounted on the wall starts thrashing. Odd little twists like these keep the movie interesting even while the story is predictable.

But when the movie most promises to crank up the horror is when the movie most disappoints. The world inside the house's closet or medicine cabinet simply becomes Vietnam — and all those scenes are patently phony and overwrought.

Computer saves time with library research

By The Collegian Staff

Looking up subjects in the periodicals index can be time consuming, but with a new computer system on trial at Farrell Library the time is cut down.

Infotrac, a microcomputer which stores information from periodicals from 1982 to current listings, is being used in the Farrell on a trial basis for students.

The University is considering purchasing the Infotrac system, but as yet no decision has been made.

The computers refer to articles from about 1,000 business, technical, law, technology, social science and general interest publications. New information is added to the memory every 30 days.

The system has a tutor program so students can enter information under personal names, company names or by subject to obtain information from current periodicals.

This is similar to the periodicals listed in other indexes, but the computer automatically calls up only the direct reference which is entered.

The two computers are located behind the information desk on first floor. Both computers are equipped with printers and are free-of-charge.

Jeff Childs, senior in theater, said after using the system Thursday that it was helpful.

"It is helpful because it is fast and easy to use," he said.

Although he has some experience with personal computers, Childs said the system is self-explanatory and can be used by students with no computer experience. He said the most difficult part of using Infotrac is the typing involved.

Reagan asks Congress to give Contras funds

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, seeking public pressure on Congress to approve $100 million aid for "virtually defenseless" Nicaraguan rebels, declared Sunday evening that the funds are needed to "deny the Soviet Union a beachhead in North America."

Beseeching Congress "to vote yes," Reagan emphasized his belief that "it is not Nicaragua alone that threatens us." In a televised address from the Oval office, he asked viewers, "Tell them to help the freedom fighters. Help us prevent a Communist takeover of Central America."

In prepared remarks, four days before the House votes on his aid proposal, Reagan urged his countrymen not to ignore "the malignancy in Managua until it spreads and becomes a mortal threat to the entire New World."

Sen. James Sasser, leading the Democratic response to Reagan, agreed with much of the president's view of the Sandinista government in Nicaragua, but said it was time for negotiation, not military buildup. Sasser has proposed compromise legislation that would give the Sandinistas time to talk.

Making his case for $70 million in military aid and $30 million in non-lethal funds for the so-called Contra forces, Reagan said, "We are asking only to be permitted to switch a small part of our present defense budget — to the defense of our own southern frontier."

A senior administration official, briefing reporters at the White House on the president's speech but insisting he not be identified, said Reagan was about 10 to 12 votes short of victory in the House and would lobby members in search of support.

The official said the administration remains unwilling to compromise on the amount of money Reagan requested or by placing new restrictions on how the money is spent. But he acknowledged "the possibility of the president agreeing unilaterally to allow some time between the enactment of the legislation and the actual delivery of military assistance" to encourage peace talks with the Sandinistas.

Reagan portrayed a dire situation in Central America should the Contra forces lose American assistance.

"Using Nicaragua as a base, the Soviets and Cubans can become the dominant power in the crucial corridor between North and South America. Established there, they will be in a position to threaten the Panama Canal, interdict our vital Caribbean sea lanes, and, ultimately, move against Mexico.

"Should that happen, desperate Latin peoples by the millions would begin fleeing north into the cities of the southern United States, or to wherever some hope of freedom remained."

Displaying a map of the region and an airfield photo from Nicaragua, the president charged members of the ruling Sandinista regime with selling illegal drugs to Americans, using their country as a terrorist command post and threatening the security of the Western alliance by seeking to spread revolution through Central America to the Panama Canal.

In the Democratic Party reply prepared for broadcast following the president's address, Sasser of Tennessee said the Democrats agree with Reagan "the Sandinista government has betrayed the promise of its revolution, has suppressed the freedom of its own people, and has supported subversion in El

Presidential race nearly over

Three candidates in running

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

And then there were three. The list of candidates for the presidency of the University now consists of two college deans and the chancellor of a state university system.

The Presidential Search Committee, organized in September 1985 to search out finalists for the post, has forwarded the names of John Campbell, Charles Sidman and Jon Wefald to the Board of Regents, according to published reports.

Wefald, 48, chancellor of the seven-school state university system in Minnesota, said in a telephone interview he would be honored to be president of K-State.

"I would be genuinely honored and thrilled to be president of Kansas State University because it is a first-rate university and because it is a land-grant university with opportunities, not only to serve students, but to serve the people of Kansas," Wefald said.

Campbell, 52, dean of the College of Agriculture at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, would neither confirm nor deny reports he is a finalist, but said he is disturbed the search has not been conducted in a confidential manner.

"I was told when I was approached about the job that the search process would be closed and that doesn't appear to be what is happening. I would respectfully say that I intend to do all I can to keep the search process closed," Campbell said. He did not comment further.

The third finalist, Sidman, 54, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Florida in Gainesville, could not be reached for comment.

The search committee concluded its six-month review of nearly 150 applicants and nominees and selected the three finalists for the presidency on March 2, but elected not to make the names public. However, The Wichita Eagle-Beacon published the names five days later on the eve of spring break.

Search committee chairman Jerome Frieman, associate professor of psychology, said, "Of the people we sent to the Board of Regents, anyone of them will make an excellent president. I am really looking forward to the naming of the next president."

The regents will interview the finalists on Friday and Saturday in Overland Park, and will announce their selection Saturday afternoon, Frieman said. The job currently pays $92,000 per year.

If asked to fill the vacancy, which will be created June 30 when President Duane Acker leaves the post, Wefald said he would concentrate on making K-State one of the top public universities in the nation and work to bolster recruitment activities.

"One goal I would have would be to make Kansas State the first or second best institution in the Big Eight and into one of the top 15-20 public universities in the country. Also, I think a high priority for Kansas State would be recruitment," he said.

Wefald said a strategy involving students, faculty, administrators, college deans and the alumni would enable K-State to reclaim the market share of students it had three years ago. An increase in enrollment to 20,000 students by 1990 is not unreasonable, he said.

K-State had an enrollment of 18,185 this spring, an increase of 37 students from spring 1985.

Campbell was associate dean and director of resident instruction of the agriculture college at Illinois from 1977-83, when he was named dean. He obtained his bachelor's degree in agriculture, a master's degree in dairy manufacturing and a doctorate in dairy cattle nutrition from the University of Missouri-Columbia. He was a professor of dairy husbandry when he left MU in 1977.

Campbell is the author of "In Touch With Students...A Philosophy for Teachers," published in 1972, and co-author of two agriculture textbooks. He has concentrated his research work on the study of dairy cattle physiology, especially health, nutrition, production and management.

Sidman has bachelor's and master's degrees in history from John Carroll University in University Heights, Ohio, and a doctorate in history from the University of Kruger to be named basketball coach

From Staff and Wire Reports

Lon Kruger, a two-time player of the year for K-State and protégé of Jack Hartman, will be named today to replace Hartman as K-State's head basketball coach, the Collegian has learned.

Kruger, 34, has been head coach at Pan American University the past four years after a five-year stint as Hartman's assistant. He will be introduced at an 11 a.m. news conference in the Union Big Eight Room.

When contacted by the Collegian Sunday night, Kruger's wife Barb said, "We're very happy to be coming home."

"I think there were a few contract details that still had to be worked out, but they've told him he has the job," said a source who asked not to be identified.

A multi-sport high school star in Silver Lake, Kruger was ignored by most college recruiters because of his 5-11 size. But under Hartman's tutelage, he became a smart, play-making guard who was voted the Associated Press Big Eight Player-of-the-Year his last two seasons in 1972-73 and 1973-74.

The Wildcats won the Big Eight title his sophomore and junior seasons, then finished second to the 1973-74 Kansas team that reached the Final Four.

Kruger is replacing one of the nation's most respected coaches. Hartman, 60, underwent emergency heart surgery in January 1985, and announced almost exactly one year later that he would retire at the end of this, his 16th season at K-State.

K-State Athletic Director Larry

Travis apparently pared his list of candidates to Kruger, Fort Hays State Coach Bill Morse and Georgia Tech Assistant George Felton before making a final decision.

Once one of the Big Eight's model basketball programs, the Wildcats have in recent years fallen upon hard times. They had only four conference victories this season, and those may eventually be wiped off the books because Norris Coleman has been declared ineligible.

But Kruger, a popular figure from happier days in the not-so-distant past, drew strong support from alumni and administration officials, sources said.

"A lot of people have had an awful lot of good things to say about Lonnie ever since Jack's announcement in January," a source said. "A lot of people have worked very hard on his behalf."

After graduating in 1974, Kruger spent one year as an assistant coach at Pittsburg State and then rejoined Hartman as K-State's top assistant from 1975-1980.

Kruger's first Pan American squad won just seven, which was more than it had won the year before. But the Broncos won a total of 25 games the next two seasons even though Kruger began scheduling tougher opponents from the Pac-10 and Southwest Athletic Conferences.

Kruger's Pan American teams have generally played the same brand of unselfish, defensive-minded basketball he and Hartman used to win two Big Eight titles.

This year's Broncos, with only one senior, won 15 of their last 17 games to finish 20-8, their best record in eight seasons.

Celebrations kick off St. Patrick's holiday

From Staff and Wire Reports

St. Patrick was toasted with parades, parties and even a chili cook-off this weekend, as celebrations began in honor of the patron saint of the Emerald Isle.

Parades were planned Monday, the official St. Patrick's Day, in New York, Chicago and Savannah, Ga., but plenty of folks, of Irish descent and otherwise, celebrated early.

Locally, St. Patrick's Day observances were held Saturday in Aggieville, highlighted by a two-mile fun run, 10-K road race and a parade with a marching band from Fort Riley.

Alfredo Rosas, 2156 Prairie Glen Place, was overall winner in the 10-K race with a time of 30:42. Rosas said he would be continuing his studies at K-State this fall.

As could be expected, Aggieville bar owners reported doing good business, with the moderate weather helping the crowd's mood.

Almost 4,000 partygoers jammed the streets of Shamrock, Texas, on Saturday for the Panhandle town's 40th annual toast to the slave-turned-missionary.

Fee hikes sensible, Acker says

From Staff and Wire Reports

University President Duane Acker said Sunday he believes the two proposals for fee increases at regents institutions are within a reasonable range.

A state Board of Regents committee has reviewed two proposals to increase by 6 percent the tuition at regents institutions for fall 1987.

The Regents' Special Committee on Tuition and Fees made no decision on the proposals, but will meet again in three weeks to decide whether to recommend a tuition increase to the full board.

The 6 percent increase would be necessary to help fund a 5 percent increase in regents educational costs for the fiscal year that begins July 1, 1987, said Tom Rawson, regents director of planning and budget. The regents have a policy of studying tuition cost changes about 18 months before they go into effect.

"The long standing tradition is for resident students to pay about 25 percent of the cost," Acker said. "These proposals seem to keep us in that area."

The 5 percent figure is an arbitrary one settled on by regents planners, Rawson said.

The first plan Rawson gave the committee calls for a 6 percent increase in both tuition for Kansas residents and non-Kansas residents. The second proposal calls for a 3 percent increase in resident tuition and increases of between 4.8 percent and 12.7 percent in non-resident tuition.

Both plans include a 25 percent increase in the cost of tuition at the Kansas State College of Veterinary Medicine. The increase is part of a four-year plan to double tuition costs at the college. Rawson said K-State officials had requested the increase as a way to improve programs.

"Dean James Coffman (dean of the Veterinary Medical Center) and I and many, many others have requested the increase in order to increase the strength of our program," Acker said. "We set out the 4-year plan in order to get closer to the cost of the program. Hopefully we can maintain the strength of our veterinary medical college."

The regents institutions are competitive with selected peer institutions in terms of tuition, Rawson said, even though tuition costs have increased an average of 7.3 percent each year since fall 1971.

In financing the regents system, Rawson said, lawmakers work with the assumption that tuition and other fees collected will pay for 25 percent of the system's budget, except for research and public service expenses.

Acker said there is always the chance that an increase might price some out of the market, but the University continues to seek funds in the form of scholarships and other funds to help keep the student cost of education reasonable.

Rebels demand self-rule for island

MANILA, Philippines — A leader of Moslems who have waged a 14-year separatist war said Sunday that rebels will not lay down their weapons until President Corazon Aquino grants autonomy to the southern island of Mindanao.

Macapanton Abbas, political officer of the Moro National Liberation Front, urged Aquino to grant self-rule to Mindanao under a plan accepted in 1976 by ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos. The rebellion has killed 60,000 people.

Abbas failed to fully enact the Tripoli Agreement that would create executive, legislative, and judicial councils to control the budget and security forces of the island's 13 provinces, Abbas said. "The Moslems were not fighting Marcos but the system of government. And they are not going to accept Aquino but a system," he said at a news conference.

"If it was only Marcos that we fought we would have assassinated him rather than have 25,000 of our brothers die in battle," Abbas said.

Presidential spokesman Rene Saguisag declined comment on the autonomy demand except to say, "We welcome all constructive proposals from our Moslem brothers."

Moslems make up about one third of the almost 8 million residents on Mindanao, the second largest island in the Philippines.

Since Feb. 26, when Marcos fled to Hawaii, Aquino has called for reconciliation with the Moslem rebels and about 15,000 communist insurgents.

Conservative parties win in France

PARIS — The two main conservative parties, with the help of minor rightist groups, won an absolute majority of seats in the National Assembly in Sunday's elections to end five years of Socialist rule, according to computer projections.

If confirmed, the conservative victory means Socialist President Francois Mitterrand will be forced to govern with a hostile Parliament and premier for the last two years of his term.

The Socialists were projected to win 211-214 seats, remaining the largest single party in France but without enough seats to form a government.

All major polling organizations indicated the neo-Gaullist Rally for the Republic, the centrist Union for French Democracy and small right-wing groups that vote with those two parties would win 293-294 seats.

At least 289 seats are needed for a majority in the expanded 577-seat Assembly, the lower house of parliament that wields most legislative power. The number of Assembly seats was increased this year from 491 to maintain the ratio of one delegate for every 108,000 people.

The biggest surprise was the performance of the extreme right National Front, projected to enter the Assembly for the first time with about 30 seats, fewer than the Communists because National Front votes were concentrated in certain areas. The Communists were projected to win 40 seats, and small leftist parties two.

But the National Front's percentage of the vote was projected at 10.1 percent, level with the Communists, who plunged to a historic low of 9.9 percent of the vote. If the projections hold up, the Communists will have lost half their support in the last eight years.

Officials rate U.S. grain as poor

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Importers of American grain have renewed complaints that it is of poorer quality than grain shipped from other countries.

Officials from Venezuela, Russia, Japan and China said Thursday at a grain export conference that American grain has more dirt, trash, broken kernels and insect infestation when it arrives at its destination than when it is inspected at port loading.

"There is an old Chinese saying," said Yuan Xiangzhong, president of Ceroflood, Inc., the import-export agency of the People's Republic of China. "A kernel of rat (droppings) will stain the whole bar of soap."

Officials also criticized the American practice of blending grain of different quality in the same shipment.

The officials said the grain elevator industry and the Federal Grain Inspection Service seemed indifferent to their complaints.

Others appearing at the seminar said the U.S. should open up its own markets in order to increase export orders.

Venezuela would buy more American products if it could sell more to the U.S., said Lloyd Luckett, executive vice president of M.M. International C.A. in Venezuela.

Luckett said U.S. grain has a moisture content that is too high to be suitable for tropical countries.

The Soviet Union has no plans to import wheat from the U.S. because it does not enjoy most-favored nation status, a trade policy which means U.S. wheat is 30 percent more costly than other sources, said Alexandr Ivlev of the Export Khleb, the Russian import-export agency.

Computer turns dictation into text

Some type badly, some type gladly, and most personal computer users would rather not type at all, but it's still the only convenient way to transfer the symbols of thought from the thinker to the machine — maybe.

The "maybe" comes from the possible introduction this year of a widget called the Kurzweil Voice Writer, which if introduced to the marketplace will be a product of Kurzweil Applied Intelligence Inc., and an invention of Raymond Kurzweil. It's supposed to be a machine that takes speech and turns it into text — a secretary with a silicon soul and an on-off switch.

In something of a public relations coup, Kurzweil managed to get a mention in the March 3 issue of Computerworld, a newsweekly (CW Communications, $2) and an article in the March issue of BYTE (McGraw-Hill, $3.50), a monthly with typically long lead times.

Computerworld says the machine is on track for a third-quarter introduction at a price of "under $20,000."

The BYTE article carries a headline about a "present office system provides clue to future applications for the deaf," but small mention of the applications. It's mostly Kurzweil saying what his machine could, perhaps will, do — and BYTE's editors have been careful to label the article "not a review of the KVV; it is a look at a technology that may be available on personal computers in the future."

That said, the article offers fascinating looks at what may one day make a personal computer keyboard as quaint as a mechanical adding machine.

Note in bottle brings two together

MIAMI — The luck of the Irish, and a champagne bottle, have brought together a Georgia boy whose ancestors came from the Emerald Isle and a retired farmer from County Cork.

The two became acquainted after a note crossed the Atlantic Ocean in a champagne bottle Ryan Cody, 13, of Stone Mountain, Ga., threw overboard during a Caribbean cruise three years ago. Two years later, Cornelius Bohane, 67, found the bottle as he was walking along the shore on his farm. He wrote to Cody.

Saturday night the pair dined together in Miami and prepared to set sail on a free, seven-day Caribbean cruise Sunday, thanks to Carnival Cruise Lines, which offered to bring them and their families together on a St. Patrick's Day trip.

"This is the first time ever — that Carnavale is aware of — that one of these has been found and responded to," said Tim Gallagher, a spokesman for the Miami-based company.

Thousands of bottles containing letters are thrown overboard Carnavale ships every year, according to Gallagher, as part of activities arranged for children on cruises.

Author fights against deportation

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Author Margaret Randall goes before a U.S. immigration judge Monday to try to prevent her deportation from the United States.

Randall, 49, was born a U.S. citizen in New York. But she relinquished her U.S. citizenship nearly 20 years ago and is a citizen of Mexico, where she lived in the early 1960s.

She fled to Cuba in 1969 after her involvement in Mexican student protests in 1968. She went to North Vietnam and wrote a book celebrating the victory of the Communist troops there in the mid-1970s. She moved to Nicaragua in 1980.

Randall returned to the United States in January 1984 on a temporary visitor's visa and teaches at the University of New Mexico. But the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service decided last year not to grant her permanent U.S. residency because of her writings critical of the United States.

Nurses give party to 106-year-old

"I didn't know it was my birthday. It just slipped upon me. And look at all this," he said Friday of his room full of balloons. "Isn't this something?"

Bobby Allison, one of Allen's nurses at Good Shepherd where he is recovering from an illness, verified his age through the Social Security office. She said it was the first birthday party Allen had ever had.

"I don't have a secret for living so long," said Allen, who lives with a niece in Longview. "I used to smoke, but after I lost all my teeth, I gave it up because I couldn't hold it in my mouth."

"I drink beer on special occasions. ... I eat most anything at all, but chicken fried steak is my favorite food."

Allen said he's never driven a car and has no desire to ride in a plane.

"I never drove anything but a wagon and a pair of mules," he said. "I'd be scared to fly in an airplane."

Looking Back

20 Years Ago — 1966

President Johnson's proposed 1967 fiscal year federal budget will make it extremely difficult for K-State and 67 other land-grant institutions to remain financially solvent. If the budget is passed, K-State would stand to lose $650,000, $449,000 of which is appropriated for agricultural research. The more than $200,000 remaining appropriation is to be tunneled into student instruction.

15 Years Ago — 1971

Petitions supporting repeal of the draft and a bill to withdraw American forces from Vietnam by the end of the year may be signed in the Union Thursday and Friday. Both of the petitions will be sent to U.S. senators and representatives from Kansas. The petition organizer also said copies may be sent to "swing" legislators — those who have yet to decide their final stand on the issue.

Sen. David Owen, R-Overland Park, accused Gov. Robert Docking of violating a state conflict of interest law by employing a K-State professor on a part-time basis as the state's chief economist.

10 Years Ago — 1976

The City Commission gave formal approval, but by a split vote, to a joint city-county planning commission. The ordinance provides for the formation of the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board to serve the city and an area immediately outside its municipal limits.

A progress report on public fund raising for construction of the new Riley County Historical Museum shows the fund just shy of its needed amount.

5 Years Ago — 1981

Taking less than two hours to deliberate the verdict, a jury of six men and six women convicted 26-year-old Arlie J. Moss for the May 3, 1980, arson of the Ramey Brothers Lumber Yard.

Farrell Library receives millionth book

By BECKY MARTIN
Collegian Reporter

Let the festivities begin. Farrell Library's millionth volume has arrived.

Farrell has been awaiting the arrival of its millionth volume since October and the waiting is finally over.

The celebration of this milestone event will begin with the formal opening of the One Million Volumes Exhibition on April 3, said Antonia Pigno, coordinator of archives and special collections at Farrell Library.

The exhibition will include guest keynote speaker Alexandra Mason, librarian in charge of the department of special collections at Spencer Library at the University of Kansas, Pigno said.

Also scheduled to speak at the opening are President Duane Acker; Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries; Leland Warren, associate professor of English and president of the Friends of the KSU Libraries; and Michael Oldfather, associate professor of economics and chairman of the Friends of the KSU Libraries.

There are three commemorative volumes with a combined total worth of more than $18,000 which constitute the last of the million volumes.

The Friends of the KSU Libraries has provided funds for the purchase of the rare 1662 Latin edition of Bockler's "Theatrum Machinarum Novum."

KSU Foundation made donations which enabled the purchase of Konrad Gesner's 1551 edition of "Historiae Animalium Liber I. de Quadrupedibus Viviparis."

The University Libraries contributed a 1669 first edition of John Milton's "Paradise Lost."

University Libraries also contributed several other volumes, including a software program, in honor of the academic disciplines in each of the colleges, Pigno said.

The opening will also honor four of the publishers who donated the first books to the library, Pigno said.

Special donations from the book vendors, Blackwell and Yankee Book Peddlars, will also be highlighted at the opening, she said.

A reception given by Acker will immediately follow the opening of the exhibition, she said.

The convocations committee has arranged for writer Joseph Heller, author of "Catch 22" and many other works, to speak as the finale of the evening, Pigno said.

Heller has just finished his newest work with coauthor Speed Vogel, titled "No Laughing Matter," which is concerned with Heller's bout with the debilitating disease Guillain-Barre Syndrome, Pigno said.

"We are really excited about having Heller speak at the event. It is going to make the evening even more exciting," she said.

"The public is invited to view the commemorative volumes in the special collections department in Farrell Library," Pigno said.

Singapore hotel collapses; 10 found dead; 61 missing

By The Associated Press

SINGAPORE — Two men entombed for 36 hours in the rubble of a collapsed six-story hotel were rescued Sunday night and workers labored nonstop, tunneling toward more people believed still alive in the ruins.

The confirmed death toll rose to 10 early Monday with the recovery of the bodies of two Indian women, but the fate of 61 people still unaccounted for remained unknown.

The two rescued survivors were among 11 or more people who called for help from under the rubble a day after the 67-room Hotel New World collapsed Saturday, according to the state-owned Singapore Broadcasting Corp.

No Americans were known to have been in the hotel, in Singapore's "Little India" quarter, when it collapsed at 11:20 a.m. Saturday.

"The collapse of such a building is unprecedented. There were no apparent reasons," Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew said in a press statement. He said a High Court judge would head a commission of inquiry.

Soldiers carried the two survivors, both Singapore Chinese, on stretchers to first aid tents, then rushed them to the hospital. Reports, not confirmed, said the men spoke of two lifeless bodies near them in the debris.

Lim Siam Kim, director of operations at the Home Affairs Ministry, said one body was pulled out of the wreckage on Saturday and another body was located but could not be extricated.

Lim said that the 61 people who have not been heard from include bank employees and customers, hotel guests and staff, and eight others not connected with either bank or hotel.

When voices were heard during excavation, workers halted operations for four hours as microphones were lowered into holes in the rubble, rescue officials told The Associated Press.

Officials said the survivors were believed trapped in a ground floor branch of the Industrial and Commercial Bank in the 15-year-old building.

Rescuers stopped removing layers of concrete from atop the mound of wreckage and began tunneling, aided by floodlights, trying to reach survivors.

Six passports of missing people were found — four Bangladeshi, one Indian and one belonging to Rodney John Evans, 41, a sailor from Watford, England.

U.S. secretary of state to give Landon Lecture

By The Collegian Staff

Secretary of State George P. Schultz will be at the University April 14 to deliver the 72nd Landon Lecture.

Tim Lindemuth, news editor for University Relations, said the appearance was confirmed Friday.

Schultz's appearance will follow a campus visit by NBC "Nightly News" anchor Tom Brokaw, who will speak at the Landon Lecture podium at 10:30 a.m. Monday in McCain Auditorium.

Charles Reagan, professor of philosophy and chairman of the Alfred M. Landon Lectures on Public Issues, said Schultz will be speaking at 10:30 a.m. in McCain Auditorium. No topic for the speech was issued by the U.S. State Department.

Schultz, 65, became President Reagan's second secretary of state in 1982 following the resignation of Alexander M. Haig Jr.

He entered federal service as senior staff economist in the mid-1950s for former President Eisenhower's Council of Economic Advisers. During the Nixon administration, Schultz first served as secretary of the Department of Labor, as director of the Office of Management and Budget and later as treasury secretary.

Born in New York City, he has a bachelor's degree from Princeton University and a doctorate in industrial economics from Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He was a faculty member at MIT from 1948 to 1957 and is a former dean of the University of Chicago Graduate School of Business.

The series honors Kansas' elder statesman, former governor Alfred M. Landon of Topeka and 1936 Republican Presidential nominee.

State official orders accessibility to polls

From staff and wire reports

Secretary of State Jack Brier has ordered county election officials across the state to ensure that all polling places meet accessibility standards for handicapped and elderly people before the Aug. 5 primary election.

In a letter to the state's county clerks and election commissioners, Brier said a new federal law mandates accessibility at all polling places. However, he said a recent survey by his staff revealed inaccessible voting places in 91 of the state's 105 counties.

"Far too many polling places in Kansas are inaccessible to disabled voters," Brier said. "This is simply not acceptable."

Brier said making the voting places accessible is important to ensure that handicapped people are not disenfranchised from the ballot because of their physical conditions.

Accessibility may be achieved at many voting places through minor remodeling, such as construction of ramps or the addition of handrails, said Brier, who suggested clerks recruit civic groups to help with such projects.

However, in some cases, he said, it may be necessary to relocate the polling places. Brier said he expects Kansas to be in full compliance with the federal law by the primary election.

Brier said the Advisory Committee on the Employment of the Handicapped has offered to give advice and help to clerks who are working to make voting places accessible.

Deputy County Clerk Ilene Colbert said the county has been working on the accessibility issue "since the first of the year and I believe we're pretty well set."

She said nine polling locations in the city have been changed to meet regulations, leaving one more to be changed before the primary election. Colbert said three new polling places have been established in outlying Riley County townships.

Methods used to meet requirements in the townships include building ramps at existing locations or having voters cast their ballots at locations outside the township. She noted some current polling places are "not in very good condition," which prompted the moves.

Agriculture day to feature exhibits

By The Collegian Staff

National Agriculture Day is March 20, but K-State is celebrating Agriculture Day today.

Departmental exhibits from the College of Agriculture and various commodity groups will be presented from 8:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. in the Union Courtyard.

There will be 14 displays from the departments in the College of Agriculture and six displays from commodity groups, said Amy Jo Reinhardt, senior in agricultural economics and Ag Day chairperson.

The commodity groups to be represented are Kansas Farm Bureau, Ag In The Classroom, Kansas Agri-Women, Kansas Crop Improvement Association, Kansas Pork Producers and the Kansas Wheat Commission.

K-State's Ag Day is being observed today because the commodity groups will be in Topeka on National Agriculture Day, Reinhardt said.

At noon Al Adams, professor of animal sciences and industry, will give a demonstration on making an omelet, she said.

"The reason Ag Day is taking the place of Ag Week is because of the lack of participation in Ag Week. We're condensing the activities into one day," she said.

Campus pedestrians deserve more respect

With the beginning of spring and warm weather, more students will be walking on campus rather than driving. As the volume of pedestrian traffic increases, drivers should take extra care to avoid hitting walkers. Since the campus is primarily a pedestrian one, drivers should observe the laws pertaining to the operation of vehicles.

These include abiding by the speed limits posted on campus, observing stop and yield signs and, in general, watching for pedestrians, especially at crosswalks.

Although drivers are ideally supposed to yield to pedestrians in all cases, pedestrian safety is a two-way street. Pedestrians, just as much as drivers, have a responsibility for their own safety. This includes crossing the street at specially marked crossing areas and looking both ways before crossing, something which is learned by most children at an early age.

According to Reese Jackson, traffic sergeant with the K-State Police, there have only been two or three pedestrian-related accidents on campus in the eight years he has been here. Even though the number of reported accidents is relatively low, the potential for disaster is always there, and, as most students can attest, the near-misses on campus are too frequent for comfort.

The number of campus streets available for traffic are becoming fewer each year while the number of cars has either remained steady or increased. This also means that pedestrians and drivers must be aware of each other and take care to avoid each other.

Pedestrians should not have to worry about being hit by cars careening around corners on campus; at the same time, drivers shouldn't have to worry about figures suddenly dashing in front of them. If both groups exercise some caution in their movements, the problem of pedestrian safety would be minimized.

Demos' plan for '88 may run afoul

WASHINGTON — The Democratic Party's deep commitment to fairness requires that in designing its nominating process, every faction have its turn to foul up once.

The reformers' rules in 1972 gave the Democrats George McGovern; the regulars' rewrite in 1976 produced Jimmy Carter (of whom they had not previously heard); the congressional wing asserted its prerogatives in 1984 and came up with Walter Mondale. And now the South is saying, "Stand Back, boys, we'll show you how to do it right."

The main topic at a recent Democratic National Committee meeting was the Southern "super-primary," which is beginning to look like a 1988 reality. Since the scheme of moving most Dixie delegate selections into the second week of March was first broached last December, it has spread like kudzu.

Kentucky has voted to join Florida, Georgia and Alabama in a March 8, 1988, primary. Bills setting caucuses or primaries the same week have passed one house of the legislatures in Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma and Tennessee and are awaiting the governor's signature in Virginia. Texas is expected to sign up in 1987. The goal of the governors and legislators promoting the scheme is not to get the voting done before the chiggers start to bite. Their strategy is to amass such a bounty of Southern delegate votes in one week that the contenders will shape their early campaigns and messages to Dixie sensibilities. They hope to assure that this time the Democratic ticket is led by someone who can be sold in the South in November — a moderate, definitely, and a Southerner ideally.

The chances of it working out that way are not terrific.

Their dream will be realized if — but only if — a Southern moderate can do in 1988 what Carter did in 1976: sneak off with a plurality victory over a large field of liberals in Iowa and New Hampshire. New Hampshire is scheduled to hold its 1988 primary on March

DAVID BRODER

1; the Iowa caucuses come a few days earlier. If a Chuck Robb of Virginia or a Sam Nunn of Georgia can win New Hampshire, the availability a week later of a huge bloc of votes in his native region might make him unstoppable.

But the leverage will still be with New Hampshire and Iowa. Bert Lance, the former Georgia Democratic chairman, said the other day that the Southern primary means "Iowa and New Hampshire (will) no longer tell us who the nominee is going to be." That's wrong. None of the advisers to 1988 hopefuls with whom I have talked thinks for a moment his man can skip the Iowa caucuses or the New Hampshire primary and start his campaign in the South.

We know from history that the winner of New Hampshire — whether a moderate or a liberal — gets a tremendous boost in publicity and public support across the country, including the South. The bigger the bloc of votes available the next Tuesday, the larger the premium for winning New Hampshire.

It's a fallacy to think that Southern primaries are inherently tough for liberals. Between them, Mondale and Jesse Jackson, the two most liberal Democrats running in 1984, won anywhere from 54 to 66 percent of the votes in every Southern primary except Florida's. (Florida was won by Gary Hart — strictly off his New Hampshire momentum.)

Lee Atwater, George Bush's South Carolina-born strategist, thinks the Democrats in the South "aren't calculating the odds right, because they've forgotten we (Republicans) will have a contest for our nomination in 1988." Atwater notes that the power of blacks and liberals in the 1988 Democratic primaries in Dixie will be enhanced if conservative whites are drawn off in large numbers into the GOP primary.

That is the likelihood. In eight Southern states — Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia — there is no party registration. Moderate and conservative whites who have voted overwhelmingly twice for Ronald Reagan may well be tempted to seek his successor in the Republican primary contest. If they desert the Democratic primary in droves, they automatically dim the chances of a comeback by a moderate Dixie Democrat who has been defeated in New Hampshire.

Donald Fowler, the South Carolinian who headed the latest Democratic Party rules revision, is skeptical of the rush to a regional primary — for exactly the reason Atwater suggests. "Take a look at who turns out," he suggests.

The best comment on the whole Democratic scheme comes from a Republican, North Carolina Gov. Jim Martin. "I'm almost afraid to talk about it too much in public," he said, "for fear they (the Democrats) won't do it. I feel like B'r'er Rabbit and the briar patch."

"I think it's wonderful and noble that these Democrats want to improve their party by increasing the Southern influence in their process. But I think it's even more wonderful that they want to bring all their candidates down into our states."

"By the time they have paraded Mario Cuomo and Gary Hart and Jesse Jackson and the rest of their roster through the South...I think the election will be about over."

Brokaw to give his side of story

Tom Brokaw will be here one week from today, delivering the 71st Landon Lecture. You should plan to attend. It's not every day you have the opportunity to ask questions of the man on the other side of the glass test.

When I grow up, if indeed I ever do, I want to be a newsman. I want to be one of the people responsible for bringing the world alive, a mover and shaker in the global electronic village. And, like anyone else, I want to be good at what I do. I believe journalism to be essential to human progress.

Reporters and news anchors have a special responsibility to their public, called objectivity. This is the responsibility a news reporter has to be fair, accurate and open-minded when he or she writes a story. Frequently, and with increasing fervor, the objectivity of the press has been called into question.

We've all heard that the press has "a liberal bias." I've said it, I've written it. It's true, reporters and editors, by and large, are more liberal than the average person. However, there's not a thing wrong with that, provided it doesn't affect the way they cover the news.

It is the nature of the beast to have opinions, and everyone, reporter or not, has a right to their beliefs.

That is the purpose behind the editorial page you are reading right now — the expression of opinion. But reporting is different from editorializing.

I see many instances where the critics of the press are right in fact, if wrong in principle. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., the original buzzard-faced, red-under-the-bed Commie-

RICH
HARRIS
Collegian
Columnist

hater is right when he says the press is too often more sympathetic to the left than the right. However, if Helms had his way, the tables would be turned, and the press would suck up to the right.

That's where Helms makes his error — while the press does have a liberal bias, the fault lies not in our aim, but in ourselves. We, as reporters, owe the public an accurate, fair account of both sides of an issue. Both sides of the issue. The press does its readers a greater disservice by failing to be objective than it does by pandering to the left.

The public reads and listens to know and learn, not to be indoctrinated. The free press is truly free only when the individual and collective politics of its members hold no sway over content.

This, though, is a near-impossible ideal. For, as I have said, it is the nature of the beast to opine, and few souls are hardy enough to resist the temptation to affect public opinion in their favor when media opportunities present themselves. That is, in part, why public relations was invented.

Take, for example, Ted Koppel's "Nightline" promos from a few nights ago.

In the voice-over he asks, rather snidely, "Why, when America can't feed it's own, does President Reagan want to spend $100 million on aid for the Nicaraguan rebels?" A valid question, one that bears investigation. But the tone of voice, and the mood it sets, imply a strong anti-bias. I did not see the show — I don't watch much television — but I'll bet dollars to donuts Teddy couldn't find a "good" reason.

As a journalist, I have faced some tough decisions. I've avoided conflicts of interest where possible. My columns, of course, are different. But when I'm wearing the reporter hat, I do my best to be fair. So does any reporter who cares about the profession.

Perhaps the biggest pitfall these days is in emphasis of coverage. Human-interest stories sometimes become political-interest stories — Salvadoran refugee stories, for example — or certain sources are assumed to be "more reliable" than others because of their political bias. The dangers here are clear — when the press makes the decisions on right and wrong, the power of the people to decide is impaired.

Think of these things, and the difficulties inherent in the "objectivity principle," and see Tom Brokaw's lecture. I believe those whose experiences with the press have been one-sided may be able to be a little more...well, objective about the whole thing.

Three faculty members will share honors

By ROBERT CLASEN
Collegian Reporter

Three University professors have been selected to share their expertise with other universities as part of the 1986-87 Mid-America State Universities Association Honor Lecture program.

Roger Fedde, professor of physiology; Kenneth Klabunde, professor and head of the Department of Chemistry; and Michael Suleiman, professor of political science, were notified by letter from John P. Noonan, associate dean of the graduate school, in late January that they had been selected as the University's representatives for the program.

The three were selected through a peer review process which consists of nominations from the departments and approval of the graduate council.

MASUA is an organization of 14 state universities in Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska and Oklahoma. The program is designed to provide a faculty exchange between the institutions.

Each member school nominates three or four faculty members to participate in the program, said Robert Kruh, dean of the graduate school. These faculty members are available upon request to present lectures or seminars at any of the campuses.

The University benefits not only as a recipient of strengths from other MASUA schools, Kruh said, but also because the program provides an opportunity to showcase some of its academic offerings and outstanding faculty.

"The program gives us the benefit of the experience at our sister institutions," Kruh said.

Fedde, whose specialization is research in respiratory and exercise physiology with an emphasis on bird physiology, said the program is good for the University.

"It allows lecturers from the various universities to be exposed to other universities and to show their expertise in a way that benefits both."

"These kinds of programs epitomize what universities should be doing for one another," he said.

Klabunde, who has conducted research in the area of free atoms and reactive particles, and is an expert on surface chemistry, said the lecture series program is just another way for the universities to keep in touch.

"We (the MASUA universities) try to keep in touch in various ways," Klabunde said. "For example, the chemistry departments from the universities have meetings each year to see what each is doing."

"We are opening up new frontiers and new knowledge and the universities want to keep in touch on these things," he said.

IRAs provide tax deferrals

By TOM SCHULTES
Business/Government Editor

Although many students entering the job market upon graduation have expenses such as new automobiles or wardrobes, a long-term financial program should also be considered.

One of the most popular forms of investing for retirement income today is through Individual Retirement Accounts, known as IRAs.

According to a recent Chicago Tribune article, Americans have invested more than $200 billion in IRAs since becoming available to the general public in 1982. And the number is growing at a clip of 40 percent annually.

Not only does an IRA provide a savings plan for retirement, but the amount deposited by April 15 of each calendar year is deductible. Current laws limit annual deposits to $2,000 per working individual, or $2,250 for a married couple with one income.

An example of the growth rate for IRAs is given in the March issue of Money magazine. For an investor in the 40 percent tax bracket, investing $2,000 annually in a long-term certificate of deposit drawing 10 percent interest for 20 years, the account holder will have $47,000. But with the same investment in an IRA, the total would be $115,000.

But the choice between various vehicles for an IRA can be confusing — and explaining the differences has spawned an industry in itself, with investment counselors attempting to answer the question of how the account should be invested.

But if a depositor decides to choose a different vehicle, the switch can be accomplished by notifying the current institution that a change is desired, and receiving a check for the amount. The account holder then has 60 days to switch without drawing a penalty. But because the holder could use the funds during that time, laws restrict accounts to only one switch per year.

But despite the seemingly open market for IRAs, there are rules to follow in what Money magazine calls "the most important financial product to hit Main Street in years."

One proposed change in rules for IRA depositors, which could be a result of proposed tax reform legislation, is that depositors withdrawing funds before the age of 59½ will face a 15 percent penalty fee — compared to the present 10 percent penalty.

IRA holders can continue to deposit funds in the account until the age of 70½, at which time they must begin withdrawing funds.

Allowable investments include banks, mutual funds, securities, annuities and real estate. Investments not allowed are "collectibles," such as works of art, antiques, stamps, coins and similar tangible items.

The banking industry's interest in IRAs, both locally and nationally, is reflected in the growing number of ads for such accounts. Local ads have included clip-out coupons allowing the opening of accounts by mail.

Judy Smith, loan officer at Capital Federal Savings, 14th Street and Poyntz Avenue, said IRAs are a good plan with good activity in the area.

She said most people opening the accounts are in their "50s and 60s because they've got the money and taxes affect them more."

Smith said older people are trying to defer their income from taxes because they may have fewer deductions, such as dependents and mortgages.

She said some young people are taking advantage of the accounts, but often don't have the disposable income to put away while raising children or making mortgage payments.

"They can see (the purpose)," Smith said, "but they don't have the money to invest."

Peggy Hein, investment counselor at First National Bank of Manhattan, 701 Poyntz Ave., said her institution sees no specific age group, but the "primary number of investors are in their late 30s through mid-50s."

Hein said she has seen local interest in IRAs increase since mid-December.

Hein said although the individual's maximum deferral is $2,000 per year, up to $4,000 is often deposited at this time of year.

Mourners stand in line to visit Palme's grave

By The Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Mourners stood in line by the thousands Sunday to visit the grave of Olof Palme in a downtown churchyard a block from where the prime minister was assassinated last month.

The new Swedish leader, Ingvar Carlsson, met with some of the 120 foreign envoys and dignitaries who had come to pay their respects and to talk to the press and public about their own political troubles.

Nobel Peace Prize laureate Bishop Desmond Tutu and the Rev. Alan Boesak, two of South Africa's most prominent anti-apartheid activists, eulogized Palme at a memorial service at the Stockholm Cathedral, and lamented violence in their own country.

Nicaraguan President Daniel

Ortega attended the memorial service, then went on Swedish radio to repeat that he would be willing to meet with President Reagan, but not with the leaders of the rebel forces trying to overthrow his leftist government.

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar placed a bouquet of roses on Palme's grave, then met with African diplomats. He received a letter from Angola's foreign minister, Alfonso Domingos van Dunea, complaining about U.S. policy on South-West Africa, a territory administered by South Africa and also known as Namibia.

While most visitors departed for home Sunday, the Iranian and Iraqi delegations were not to leave until Monday. But there was no indication the representatives of the warring countries would meet.

Choosing a long distance company is a lot like choosing a roommate.

It's better to know what they're like before you move in.

Living with someone for the first time can be an "educational" experience.

And living with a long distance company isn't any different. Because some companies may not give you all the services you're used to getting from AT&T.

For instance, with some companies you have to spend a certain amount before you qualify for their special volume discounts. With some others, voice quality may vary.

But when you choose AT&T, there won't be any surprises when you move in. You'll get the same high-quality, trouble-free service you're used to.

With calls that sound as close as next door. And discounts off our Day Rate on your state-to-state calls.

With savings of over 50% during weekends until 5pm Sundays, or nights from 11pm to 8am, Sunday through Friday. And 40% discounts evenings between 5pm and 11pm, Sunday through Friday.

With AT&T, you'll continue to get services like immediate credit for wrong numbers and collect calling. And long distance operators to help you anytime there's a problem on the line.

So when you're asked to choose a long distance company, choose AT&T. Because whether you're into Mozart or metal, quality is the one thing everyone can agree on. Call 1 800 222-0300 for more information or to choose AT&T.

Loss of lease forces relocation of club

By The Collegian Staff

The Bockers II private club made a move this weekend — after losing its lease with the University Ramada Inn.

The club's owners, Larry and Robert Limbocker, moved the club, its offices and catering services this weekend to The Cotton Club, 418 Poyntz Ave.

The Limbocker brothers acquired The Cotton Club last year from Ric and Mary Tribble.

Larry Limbocker said the move prompted expansion of The Cotton Club banquet facilities, and their redecoration, but no major structural changes are being made. Limbocker said there are plans for expansion into the Wareham Theater building for the summer.

He said The Cotton Club would honor Bockers II memberships, and that all charge accounts would also be transferred to the new location.

Limbocker also noted the current piano and jazz entertainment format for The Cotton Club will not be changed.

Dan Richards, assistant manager of the Ramada Inn, said the hotel's management would be assuming control of the former Bockers II facility, renamed "The University Club," effective Sunday.

He said Bockers card holders could exchange their cards for the new club, with expiration dates unaffected.

Richards said the Ramada facility is still working on establishing reciprocating memberships with most local clubs, including The Cotton Club.

"(You) probably won't notice the difference," Richards said, noting there are no plans for structural changes. He said The University Club will have basically the same staff as before, but the cook will have more control over the kitchen area.

In conjunction with the 1986 return of Halley's comet, Haymaker Hall is sponsoring Halley Comet Week today through Saturday.

Dave Hill, senior in management and staff assistant at Haymaker, is organizing the event for hall residents.

Chris Sorenson, associate professor of physics, is scheduled to meet with Haymaker residents for dinner and a discussion of the makeup of the comet today.

A public viewing of Halley's comet is being sponsored Tuesday by Haymaker and the Department of Physics. Those interested should meet at the mobile observatory in Warner Park at 4:30 a.m., Hill said.

Phil Walters, professor emeritus of geology, will give a presentation on the planet Uranus at 7 p.m. Wednesday in Haymaker's television room.

Haymaker residents will "road trip" on Saturday to the Kansas Cosmosphere in Hutchinson.

Cardinal denounces gay rights proposal

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The debate over the city's proposed gay rights bill moved Sunday to St. Patrick's Cathedral, where Cardinal John O'Connor said divine law condemned the measure and a group of Catholic nuns and priests said Christian love required it.

In his most vehement condemnation of the bill, O'Connor said, "divine law cannot be changed...even by passage of a law by a city council."

Homosexuality is condemned "by every major culture," and throughout the world, "the one law of sexual behavior has prevailed," O'Connor said in a sermon before about 2,000 people.

O'Connor said Catholics may sympathize with or understand homosexuality, "but we can never pretend that the (divine) law has been repealed...I know what the church calls abnormal, and I am the teacher of church doctrine."

Noting that critics have accused him of trying to force Catholic morality on society, he said, "I say, 'Let not any legislative body impose anyone else's morality on the Catholic Church.'"

The legislation would outlaw discrimination in housing, employment and public accommodations because of a person's sexual orientation. First introduced 12 years ago, it appears to have its best chance of passing the City Council this year.

O'Connor also read from a letter he and Bishop Francis Mugavero of Brooklyn issued earlier this year accusing the bill of placing homosexuality, homosexuality and bisexuality on equal footing.

Outside the cathedral, priests and nuns representing several Catholic groups said the bill merely protected homosexuals against discrimination, and does not endorse homosexuality.

OPEC fears oil-price drop; rates may fall to $8/barrel

By The Associated Press

GENEVA — OPEC oil ministers emerged glum-faced and with no word of progress Sunday after four hours of emergency talks on strategies to halt the steepest oil price decline in history.

Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, was quoted by Britain's Sunday Telegraph newspaper as saying prices could hit $8 a barrel unless all oil-producing countries, including those outside OPEC, agree on a price-support program.

Arturo Hernandez Grisanti, president of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and Venezuela's oil minister, said participants at the Sunday meeting voiced their general positions but did not discuss the main issues.

"We will begin tomorrow to discuss what is the fair share of the market that OPEC is willing to defend," he said through an interpreter.

Grisanti said the 13 OPEC delegates would meet Wednesday with representatives of non-OPEC oil producing countries, but did not identify those countries.

Indonesia Oil Minister Subroto said several ideas were being considered but no consensus was reached. He declined to elaborate.

World oil prices, in decline for months, have plummeted from nearly $30 in December to about $15.

Grisanti said all OPEC members wanted a "reasonable" oil price but did not reach a consensus on what that price would be.

The Kuwait news agency quoted Kuwaiti Oil Minister Sheikh Ali Khalifa al-Sabah as saying he offered at Sunday's session to cut his nation's daily crude oil production if all OPEC members agree to a "new system of production quotas." There was no word on reaction from other ministers.

Levee trail discussion to headline luncheon

By The Collegian Staff

People interested in learning about the proposed Levee Park Trail will have the opportunity to hear a University professor discuss the project.

John Strickler, professor of forestry, is the scheduled speaker for the March "Lunch with League" meeting at 11:45 a.m. Tuesday at Kennedy's Claim restaurant.

The lunch is sponsored by the League of Women Voters of Manhattan-Riley County chapter.

He has been a member of the Riverside Parkway Committee, which has been pushing for the project for several years.

"We need to involve the students and the University community," Strickler said, adding the city commission will have to make a decision for funding.

The project is one of several items included in the proposed Quality of Life bond issue scheduled to be voted on by residents this summer.

Strickler said the future of the Levee Park Trail as a complete package depends on the bond election's outcome which would provide the project's funding.

The meeting is open to the public.

Campus police purchase 2 patrol cars

By JOLA MURPHY
Collegian Reporter

Two new patrol cars were purchased by the K-State Police Department before spring break.

Funds for the two 1986 Chevrolet Celebritys were provided by the department's budget allocation. The police department's budget is provided by the state and in part by parking fines and stickers.

"The department hasn't bought new cars since 1981," said Charles Beckom, superintendent of the K-State Police. "No student fees whatsoever were used in purchasing the cars."

Beckom said the department has a special account called Other

Operating Expenses which is used to supplement special financial needs.

Beckom said the money from student fines and stickers are used for maintenance of parking lots and related repairs.

The cars which were replaced, a 1980 Chevrolet and a 1981 Plymouth, had more than 130,000 miles on them.

Beckom said the police use three marked units with lights and sirens and one supervisor unit with no red lights.

"We also have one old truck for the traffic sergeant to use for setting up barricades and so forth," Beckom said.

"The cars were definitely in bad shape," said Lt. Robert Mellgren. "The cars spent a lot of time in the garage. It's just like any other car. The older it gets the more repairs it needs."

Beckom said the constant maintenance on the cars was "definitely impeding our work. The average cost of the vehicles over a year's time on maintenance would exceed over half the price of the new cars."

The patrol cars are in use 20 hours a day, six days a week, Beckom said. The patrolmen have assigned areas covering the campus and outside grounds.

"The cars cover a considerable number of miles on the University and farm grounds," Beckom said.

It is also the job of the patrolmen to check University radio towers and parking lots on campus.

"The miles that are put on the cars are not like highway miles," Beckom said. "They drive at low speeds which increases maintenance needs."

Levee trail discussion to headline luncheon

By The Collegian Staff

People interested in learning about the proposed Levee Park Trail will have the opportunity to hear a University professor discuss the project.

John Strickler, professor of forestry, is the scheduled speaker for the March "Lunch with League" meeting at 11:45 a.m. Tuesday at Kennedy's Claim restaurant.

The lunch is sponsored by the League of Women Voters of Manhattan-Riley County chapter.

He has been a member of the Riverside Parkway Committee, which has been pushing for the project for several years.

"We need to involve the students and the University community," Strickler said, adding the city commission will have to make a decision for funding.

The project is one of several items included in the proposed Quality of Life bond issue scheduled to be voted on by residents this summer.

Strickler said the future of the Levee Park Trail as a complete package depends on the bond election's outcome which would provide the project's funding.

The meeting is open to the public.

Campus police purchase 2 patrol cars

By JOLA MURPHY
Collegian Reporter

Two new patrol cars were purchased by the K-State Police Department before spring break.

Funds for the two 1986 Chevrolet Celebritys were provided by the department's budget allocation. The police department's budget is provided by the state and in part by parking fines and stickers.

"The department hasn't bought new cars since 1981," said Charles Beckom, superintendent of the K-State Police. "No student fees whatsoever were used in purchasing the cars."

Beckom said the department has a special account called Other

Operating Expenses which is used to supplement special financial needs.

Beckom said the money from student fines and stickers are used for maintenance of parking lots and related repairs.

The cars which were replaced, a 1980 Chevrolet and a 1981 Plymouth, had more than 130,000 miles on them.

Beckom said the police use three marked units with lights and sirens and one supervisor unit with no red lights.

"We also have one old truck for the traffic sergeant to use for setting up barricades and so forth," Beckom said.

"The cars were definitely in bad shape," said Lt. Robert Mellgren.

"The cars spent a lot of time in the garage. It's just like any other car. The older it gets the more repairs it needs."

Beckom said the constant maintenance on the cars was "definitely impeding our work. The average cost of the vehicles over a year's time on maintenance would exceed over half the price of the new cars."

The patrol cars are in use 20 hours a day, six days a week, Beckom said. The patrolmen have assigned areas covering the campus and outside grounds.

"The cars cover a considerable number of miles on the University and farm grounds," Beckom said.

It is also the job of the patrolmen to check University radio towers and parking lots on campus.

"The miles that are put on the cars are not like highway miles," Beckom said. "They drive at low speeds which increases maintenance needs."

Rock 'n' Roll Artistic freedom vs.

By LORI LUGINBILL
Collegian Reporter

While the music of Twisted Sister, Prince and Madonna is tremendously popular among America's teens, it is tremendously unpopular with the Parents Music Resource Center.

The PMRC is a group of women who have formed in Washington, D.C., to fight explicit musical lyrics. With help from the National Parent-Teacher Association, the group is trying to clean up what founder Susan Baker calls "porn rock" — songs with references to oral sex, incest, rape, sadomasochism and necrophilia.

Baker, wife of U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker, and Mary Elizabeth "Tipper" Gore, wife of U.S. Sen. Albert Gore Jr. (D-Tenn.), have been influential in pleading the case of the PMRC, evoking waves of protest from those in the music industry.

The PMRC has concluded that some songs by Cyndi Lauper, Prince, Sheena Easton and Sheila E. are "unfit for children," but is primarily concerned with the music of heavy metal groups.

In an appearance on "Phil Donahue," Gore explained her concerns.

"Right now there are really no boundaries. We're not talking about putting anyone in jail or censorship. We're saying, since the material is this explicit and violent, for those of us who care and don't want our younger children inadvertently bringing it home or listening to it, give us information."

"Give us a tool, a general rating on an album that the material is violent and sexually explicit...I don't think it's unreasonable to ask the music industry to exercise some self-restraint and to give me, as a parent, more information so I can do my job better in my home. That's not abridging anybody's rights," she said.

What the PMRC would like to implement is a rating system similar to the one used for movies. Suggested ratings are V for violence, X for explicit lyrics, O for occult and D/A for drugs and alcohol.

However, the issue of labeling was taken one step further when the PMRC went before the Senate Commerce Committee in September. Testimony against restraints on artists and record companies was given by musicians Frank Zappa, John Denver and Twisted Sister's Dee Snider. The Committee deemed legislation unnecessary.

The Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) and the PMRC reached a compromise hearing. Record companies' material is considered explicit.

"Explicit Lyrics, Parental Advisory Labels" are available to consumers.

As of November, according to American record companies (business) have agreed to issuing agencies have refused.

Rock musicians are not happy about the PMRC.

The most prominent of the Musical Majority. This group of artists and record industry figures includes Daryl Hall, John Oates, Andy Taylor of Duran Duran.

The Musical Majority has sued the American Civil Liberties Association (ACLU) for helping the PMRC fight the efforts of the PMRC.

Goldberg has called the plan of censorship. Gore of the PMRC is not censorship.

At the center of the conflict is the lyrics — as well as the art people who listen to them.

Mark Barnett, associate professor of music at the University of Kansas, said music's effect on children is a media material such as porno.

"I don't think there's anything that will not have heard or wherever," Barnett said.

As soon as you start making start censoring it, then you challenge for your child to snub about, he said.

"I think we need to deal with find socially unacceptable. The PMRC said."

ensorship of their artistic expression.

Censorship of forms of entertainment is really nothing new, said Robert Daly, associate professor of journalism and mass communications.

In the '50s, censorship was not so much on content of songs, but what the performers were doing. Elvis Presley was censored on the "Ed Sullivan Show," only shown from the waist up, because of the way he shook his pelvis, Daly said.

During the '60s, movies began to be rated. However these ratings were more for the children as to what they could view rather than for the parents.

"Rock 'n' Roll in the '50s was innocent, not suggestive. There was not much talk then of sex and violence in music," Daly said.

However, Daly said, music has always been used by youth for rebellion. Youth always pushes the limit to see how far they can go and that's where discipline comes in.

The situation with the PMRC and censorship of music comes right down to whether or not we can control taste, Daly said.

Nancy O'Connor, a family therapist in Junction City, said adolescence is a time of experimentation, of trying to discover where they fit into the scheme of things.

"The extremes (like Cyndi Lauper, Twisted Sister) are what's unique. Kids gravitate to things that are new and different," O'Connor said.

O'Connor said she believes the PMRC may be attempting to solve a problem before the cause has been traced to rock music lyrics. It's unwise to pin the blame on music alone.

"Sure, music and rock stars may be having an influence in my kid's life, but what else is going on in her head, in our family, to make my kid dress up like Cyndi Lauper?"

Rock lyrics, like poetry, are open to interpretation, O'Connor said.

"It's like when we're in high school and have to read poetry. What I interpret it to mean is different from what someone else interprets it to mean. How can music be any different?"

"This whole situation really makes me wonder two things: First, if the parents are trying to place responsibility on other people, and second, are parents looking for an excuse for their children's behavior or attitudes?" O'Connor said.

Film Review

'Pink' shows enough color to be viewed

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

After last summer's mediocre "Weird Science," John Hughes is back making conventional movies. Gone are the special effects; back is the simple storytelling of "Sixteen Candles" and "The Breakfast Club" — two movies that show he understands teenagers as well as anyone working in Hollywood.

The screenplay for "Pretty in Pink" is his own, but he has turned over the direction to Howard Deutch, a veteran of music videos. But "Pretty in Pink" is still very much a John Hughes movie. The story is a familiar one, maybe too familiar — as if Hughes is plagiarizing himself. It's a lot like "Sixteen Candles" — Jon Cryer takes the place of Anthony Michael Hall and Andrew McCarthy plays the rich kid with the million-dollar smile who's after Molly Ringwald. But even if the movie is derivative, it still has energy.

The plot is simple: The kids without money (Ringwald and Cryer) suffer at the hands of the kids with money. McCarthy is one of the rich kids, but he likes what he sees in Ringwald and asks her out. This brings him nothing but problems as his peers shun him.

Ringwald's status is always clear to the rich kids because she makes her own clothes. Her father (Harry Dean Stanton) is unemployed and he doesn't mind not having money. This means his daughter can't afford any off-the-rack fashions.

Unfortunately, Harry Dean Stanton's talents are wasted in "Pretty in Pink." His role is much too pat as the unemployed but loving father. Faring much better is Annie Potts as the owner of a record store. She's caught in a '60s time warp. Her performance is quirky and charismatic as she steals every scene she's in. Jon Cryer tries stealing every scene he's in but he's successful only about half the time. The other times he is plain irritating. Still, his performance is an energetic one. He spins and bobs his head, spitting out words at a machine gun pace.

John Strickler, professor of forestry, is the scheduled speaker for the March "Lunch with League" meeting at 11:45 a.m. Tuesday at Kennedy's Claim restaurant.

The lunch is sponsored by the League of Women Voters of Manhattan-Riley County chapter.

He has been a member of the Riverside Parkway Committee, which has been pushing for the project for several years.

"We need to involve the students and the University community," Strickler said, adding the city commission will have to make a decision for funding.

The project is one of several items included in the proposed Quality of Life bond issue scheduled to be voted on by residents this summer.

Strickler said the future of the Levee Park Trail as a complete package depends on the bond election's outcome which would provide the project's funding.

The meeting is open to the public.

Campus police purchase 2 patrol cars

By JOLA MURPHY
Collegian Reporter

Two new patrol cars were purchased by the K-State Police Department before spring break.

Funds for the two 1986 Chevrolet Celebrities were provided by the department's budget allocation. The police department's budget is provided by the state and in part by parking fines and stickers.

"The department hasn't bought new cars since 1981," said Charles Beckom, superintendent of the K-State Police. "No student fees whatsoever were used in purchasing the cars."

Beckom said the department has a special account called Other

Operating Expenses which is used to supplement special financial needs.

Beckom said the money from student fines and stickers are used for maintenance of parking lots and related repairs.

The cars which were replaced, a 1980 Chevrolet and a 1981 Plymouth, had more than 130,000 miles on them.

Beckom said the police use three marked units with lights and sirens and one supervisor unit with no red lights.

"We also have one old truck for the traffic sergeant to use for setting up barricades and so forth," Beckom said.

"The cars were definitely in bad shape," said Lt. Robert Mellgren. "The cars spent a lot of time in the garage. It's just like any other car. The older it gets the more repairs it needs."

Beckom said the constant maintenance on the cars was "definitely impeding our work. The average cost of the vehicles over a year's time on maintenance would exceed over half the price of the new cars."

The patrol cars are in use 20 hours a day, six days a week, Beckom said. The patrolmen have assigned areas covering the campus and outside grounds.

"The cars cover a considerable number of miles on the University and farm grounds," Beckom said.

It is also the job of the patrolmen to check University radio towers and parking lots on campus.

"The miles that are put on the cars are not like highway miles," Beckom said. "They drive at low speeds which increases maintenance needs."

Panel zeroes in on booster-rocket seals

Space shuttle investigations near close

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Presidential investigators expect tests supervised by outside observers to prove within a month how and why a booster rocket seal caused the space shuttle Challenger to explode.

They expect to be able to finally rule out equipment other than the booster seal as the "probable cause" within a week or two, well ahead of the June 3 deadline for the panel's report.

"If we need more time, we will ask, but there is no evidence now that we will need it," said a source close to the presidential Challenger commission. The report is crucial to resumption of space flights, because NASA won't begin changing hardware designs until it is in.

The commission is bringing in an outside expert to supervise, because panel members are skeptical of tests conducted by NASA and its rocket contractor, Morton Thiokol, Inc., the source said.

The boosters have been the chief suspect all along in the Jan. 28 explosion that claimed seven lives. But one NASA official testified only last Friday that tests might take three months to firmly establish them as the cause.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the independent observer will likely be a quasi-government agency, such as the Federal Contract Research Center.

The panel's insistence on independent observers reflects its dismay over NASA's post-accident tests of how the seals perform in cold weather.

Officials from NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center resisted cold-weather objections from Thiokol the night before Challenger's launch, when the temperature of the suspect seals dropped to 29 degrees Fahrenheit. These officials insisted last Friday that their tests have subsequently shown the seals do not fail until the temperature reaches minus 10 degrees Fahrenheit.

Commission members challenged those findings on the ground that the Marshall tests did not recreate launch conditions.

"The only thing that Marshall test proved was that at some point there is a temperature dependence," the source said. The new tests are to determine at what temperatures the seals begin to deteriorate and what the effect of prolonged cold would be.

There are 12 seals on each shuttle. And even a 1 percent failure rate at a given temperature would mean one seal would fail for every nine launches at that temperature.

The commission has publicly ruled out the orbiter, its three main engines and the powerful rocket in the cargo hold, as possible causes of the accident. The source said it is also near eliminating a leak in the external tank and the possibility that the booster rocket case split somewhere other than at the seal.

In addition to measuring the effect of cold on the booster's O-ring seals, the tests are designed to see if ice in the joint could have damaged the seals, whether cold could have ruined the putty that protects them or if a test port was improperly closed, the source said.

The Wall Street Journal reported Thursday that recent tests showed that cold might crack the putty.

The commission also wants to know if the O-rings were defective as manufactured or damaged when installed.

Meeting to offer guide for small business PR success

By The Collegian Staff

Carol Oukrop, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, is scheduled to discuss "Public Relations for the Small Business of Non-Profit Organization" at the March Early Bird Brigade breakfast series.

The program, open to the public, is scheduled for 7 a.m. Tuesday in the lower level of the University Ramada Inn. Cost of the continental breakfast is $3.

Oukrop will discuss how business owners and organizational managers, even on limited budgets, can afford a good public relations program.

She said small businesses and non-profit organizations are "needing public relations more now than ever before due to the state of the economy."

Oukrop also said reductions in government funding, especially for non-profit organizations, increase the need for good public relations to raise funds.

Oukrop, who has a doctorate from the University of Iowa, joined the K-State faculty in 1969. She has taught introductory through upper level public relations courses in the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, and is an accredited member of the Public Relations Society of America.

The series is sponsored by University Relations and the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce.

Gold-mine riots leave 7 dead

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Rioting between rival tribal factions at the world's second-largest gold mine Sunday left seven dead and 67 wounded, bringing the death toll to 14 in two days of mine violence, officials said.

The battle between Xhosa and Sotho miners at Vaal Reefs Gold Mine raged Saturday night into Sunday, ending by noon, said Errol Symons, a spokesman for mine owner Anglo American Corp.

He said factional grievances were unclear, but management was talking with both sides.

On Friday, police fired on rampaging miners demanding bonus pay at Blyvooruitzicht Gold Mine, about 45 miles west of Johannesburg. Police said seven miners died from police gunfire or in factional fighting then, and 176 miners were wounded, 58 of whom needed hospitalization.

Greg Kukard, spokesman for Rand Mines Ltd., which owns Blyvooruitzicht, said about 160 miners were dismissed after refusing to sign forms saying they wanted to go back to work. He said the mine would resume normal operations on Monday after a weeklong disruption.

Vaal Reefs, near Orkney about 95 miles southwest of Johannesburg, is second in size to a newly merged group of five mines in the Orange Free State. Both are owned by Anglo American, the huge South African mining conglomerate.

Vaal Reefs was hit by strike action earlier this month when miners demanded that police free nine black miners accused of killing four black supervisors. Anglo American refused to yield, and the strike petered out.

Violent strikes and factional fighting have left more than 1,200 dead in 18 months.

From Academy Award nominee, Peter Weir, director of WITNESS.

"Discover the surprise talent of 1979. Weir, like Kubrick and Spielberg, deals with cinema on its kinetic level. Picnic is at least as visually ravishing as Days of Heaven. I acknowledge the audaciousness and superb level of craft-I wholeheartedly recommend the imagery. An innovative, exciting cinematic discovery."

Department elects to chop softball, men's tennis teams

By TIM FITZGERALD
Assistant Sports Editor

Following the completion of the current season, K-State will no longer sponsor teams in women's softball and men's tennis.

The decision was finalized by the Intercollegiate Athletic Council last week, Assistant Athletic Director Steve Miller said.

The athletic department's decision follows a National Collegiate Athletic Association rule change which now allows universities to only sponsor 14 intercollegiate athletic teams to maintain a Division I status, instead of the previously required 16 teams.

Miller said the department decided to no longer sponsor the teams because of the financial difficulties of the department as a whole.

Men's tennis and softball are classified as "non-revenue," or sports which rely on revenue generated by the major athletic teams — football and basketball.

Miller said the teams will complete the season with the existing budgets which the athletic department will not tamper with for the rest of the year.

Softball Coach Ralph Currie said he was quite disappointed by the decision as well as the timing of the announcement to his team. Miller told the team on Monday, prior to the squad's season-opening spring break road trip.

"They (the athletic department) spends hundreds of thousands of dollars on football and basketball and cut a lil' old thing like softball," Currie said.

"Steve (Miller) acted as if it had been (the decision) made 30-60 days ago," Currie said.

A softball player who asked not to be identified said the general feeling among the players is anger. If the decision had been made long before the season, the player said, it was disrespectful to make the announcement to the team right before the first game, because as soon as the players competed they lost a year of eligibility.

Tennis Coach Steve Bietau said the small budget was the source of the tennis team's lack of success in the past years.

"It's an unfortunate situation any sports had to be cut. I'm sorry tennis is going to go — it's because we haven't been as competitive as we would have liked, but if you look at the budgets of the non-revenue sports which have been competitive you can see why (tennis hasn't been successful)," Bietau said.

Currie said he felt the pressure from the athletic department long before the season started.

"Since last October or November they have told us we can't spend anymore and since then they have been cutting and cutting us," Currie said.

"The girls are really disappointed — they expected to stay (at K-State) and play here for four years, then they jerk it out from under you," Currie said.

Miller said the decision was difficult, but it was one which had to be made for the good of the entire department.

"To make strides forward there had to be changes. This is something you never feel good about, but

K-State's Kenny Harrison established himself as one of the top long jumpers in the world with his victory in the NCAA indoor track and field championships in Oklahoma City.

"There's no telling what he can do," K-State Coach Steve Miller said. "He's truly one of the best in the world."

Harrison led the competition until the final jump when Ray Humphrey of Georgetown leaped 26-7 to take over the lead. However, Harrison was not to be denied, jumping 26-9 3/4 on his last attempt for the victory.

"It doesn't get any more dramatic. For two days, it was the talk of the meet," Miller said.

Harrison's winning leap, the best by a college jumper this year, was also a personal best and school record.

"It didn't surprise me that he won. I knew he had talent enough to win. What surprised me was the character he showed," Miller said. "Kenny proved that not only is he a talent, he's also a great competitor."

Harrison also placed fifth in the triple jump with a leap of 53-5 3/4.

With Harrison as its only competitor, K-State placed 11th in the men's team competition with 14 points.

Rita Graves' second-place finish in the high jump (5-11 1/4) was the top placing of four K-State women who earned All-American honors at the meet.

The top six American performers in each event are declared All-Americans.

Graves held the lead in the high jump until the final jump when she was edged by Katrina Johnson of Arizona. Johnson jumped 6-0 3/4 for the victory.

"Rita has got to be one of the most unsung performers around," Miller said. "This is the third time in four NCAA meets she's been beaten on the last jump."

Michelle Maxey broke an NCAA meet record in the 500 meters, but it still wasn't good enough for a victory. Maxey was one of three runners to break the old mark in the race, finishing in third place with a time of 1:10.23, a school record.

"Here she breaks the NCAA record and gets third. It's unbelievable," Miller said.

Also earning All-American honors were Jacque Struckhoff in the 3,000

After a slow start, the K-State tennis teams came back from their spring break southern road trip with more losses than victories, but feeling better prepared for the upcoming Big Eight Conference season.

The men's team finished with a 1-5 record, while the women fared better against the southern opposition, going 2-4. Coach Steve Bietau was especially pleased with his women's squad, which he said continued to play better with each match.

"The girls had a great trip," Bietau said. "They were playing some of the best people they had down there. They started looking like they can win the matches they are supposed to and grind out the tough ones."

Both Lena Svensson and Sigrid Ivarsson, the women's No. 1 and No. 2 singles competitors, caught fire after starting out the first three contests winless. The top duo had individual victories over players from Texas-Arlington, North Texas State and Louisiana Tech.

The women's team victory over North Texas State, a 5-2 decision, avenged a 7-2 loss to the Eagles last year. That match combined with the Louisiana Tech narrow loss, ended the trip on a positive note for the team.

"The girls played the best I've seen them this year against North Texas State and Louisiana Tech," Bietau said. "No question, Lena and Sigrid played especially well."

Baseball team struggles in Southern game tour

The K-State baseball team came home from a road series Friday night with a 10-8 record.

The Wildcats concluded the series with an 8-4 loss to the Louisiana State Tigers.

K-State jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the top of the second inning when Otto Kaifes belted his fourth home run of the season, but LSU tied the score in the bottom of the inning on a double.

The Tigers added another run in the fourth and three more in the sixth and seventh innings to take an 8-1 lead.

K-State came back in the eighth to produce three more runs, but it wasn't enough to lift them past the No. 4 team in the nation.

K-State opened the tour with a 10-1 loss to Mississippi State. The Wildcats had one run on seven hits, while Mississippi State had 10 runs on 14 hits.

The Wildcats then traveled to Nor-

Softball team drops five games

The K-State women's softball team dropped five games over the weekend in the Sooner Invitational softball tournament at Norman, Okla.

K-State opened the tournament March 13 with a 1-0 loss to Oklahoma. K-State's Rita McClure had three hits and Joyce Hawley finished with two hits.

Following the loss to OU, K-State faced Northeastern Louisiana and was shut out, 1-0. The winning run was the result of a fielding error by K-State in the fifth inning.

Central Michigan stopped K-State 5-1, March 14.

Central Michigan took the lead in the first inning on a two-run home run. The Chippewas scored one run in the second inning and two runs in the sixth to add to the total.

K-State's fourth loss came against Illinois State, 4-0. The Wildcats were able to manage just two hits in the loss.

Oklahoma City gave K-State its fifth and final defeat of the tournament, 2-0. K-State had only one hit, a single by Sandy Sasser in the fourth inning. Oklahoma City took a 2-0 lead in the third inning and held on for the victory.

The Wildcats will play next on March 20 in the Oklahoma City Hall of Fame Invitational with a first-round game against Kansas.

Crew teams place third in Texas

Four of five K-State crew teams took third place in their respective races at the Heart of Texas Regatta at Austin, Texas, Saturday.

Among the other teams entered in the regatta were Kansas, Washburn, Wichita State, Tulane, Xavier (Ohio) and Texas.

"To have four of the five take third place I felt was a good start for the crew," K-State Coach Don Rose said.

Rose said he believed being able to row this early in the spring will work to the team's advantage later in the season.

"I feel when we get into rowing with the northern competition, we will have the added advantage Tulane (winner of the men's varsity eight competition) had. Other teams have been outdoors more," Rose said.

In the men's varsity eight, K-State finished behind Tulane and KU with a time of 4:43.5.

"We showed well in first race. It was tough for KU to come from behind and nip us. One of our men didn't have his oar squared and allowed KU, when we were neck and neck, to take the advantage from us," Rose said.

In the women's varsity eight, K-State finished behind KU and Texas with a time of 5:55.5.

The men's novice eight and the women's novice four also finished third, both competing against six other teams. Competing in the field with the men's novice eight, the men's junior varsity eight finished fourth.

Robinson scores 35 in Navy upset win

By The Associated Press

David Robinson scored 35 points, grabbed 11 rebounds and blocked seven shots in what he termed a sluggish performance as Navy upset Syracuse, 97-85 Sunday in a second-round game of NCAA East Regional basketball tournament.

The 15th straight win for 17th-ranked Navy came in the Carrier Dome at Syracuse, N.Y., where the ninth-ranked Orangemen have seldom lost this season and where last December they beat Navy, 89-67.

In the other second-round results Sunday, Iowa State downed Michigan, 72-69 and North Carolina State beat Arkansas-Little Rock, 80-66 in double overtime in the Midwest; Auburn beat St. John's, 81-65 and Nevada-Las Vegas took Maryland, 70-64 in the West; Cleveland State defeated St. Joseph's, 75-69 in the East; Alabama edged Illinois, 58-56 and Kentucky beat Western Kentucky, 71-64 in the Southeast.

The winners of Sunday's games will meet each other in regional semifinal games. The sites will be East Rutherford, N.J., for the East; Atlanta, Southeast; Kansas City, Midwest, and Houston, West.

IOWA STATE 72, MICHIGAN 69

Jeff Grayer scored 16 points and Ron Virgil added 14 as Iowa State built an 11-point lead and held on to oust No. 5 Michigan, the second seed in the Midwest, which finishes 28-5.

The Cyclones, 22-10 and runners-up in the Big Eight, are coached by Johnny Orr, who led Michigan to the Final Four in 1976. Current Michigan Coach Bill Frieder was Orr's assistant in the 1970s.

NORTH CAROLINA STATE 80, ARKANSAS-LITTLE ROCK 66

Ernie Myers scored all six of his points in the second overtime, including a 15-foot jump shot that put

North Carolina State ahead to stay in another game between unranked teams.

AUBURN 81, ST. JOHN'S 65

The loss by St. John's meant that all four finalists from last year were eliminated this weekend. On Saturday, Memphis State, Georgetown and Villanova, the defending champion, were beaten.

Salvador," but believe "that the president is seizing military options before he has exhausted the hope of a peaceful solution."

"Let us call upon our diplomatic skills," Sasser said. "Let us call upon our patience, on our wisdom and, most of all, on our democratic traditions to achieve a balanced bipartisan policy in Central America, a course of action that has a realistic chance of success and one we, as Americans, don't have to be ashamed of," he said.

As the president prepared to speak, dozens of demonstrators carrying candles and anti-administration placards marched on the sidewalk outside the White House chanting, "Stop the killing; stop the lies. We know what Contra money buys."

For its part, the Nicaraguan government, in a statement issued by its embassy in Washington, accused Reagan of attempting "to hoodwink the Congress and US public opinion into supporting a policy of creeping military involvement of U.S. combat troops in Nicaragua" and trying to "trigger a bloody regional war in Central America."

KU pounds K-State in Hartman finale

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jack Hartman's last game as K-State coach certainly won't be remembered as one of the prettiest of his 16-year tenure with the Wildcats.

Eventual champion Kansas dominated K-State from start to finish in the Jayhawks' 74-51 victory in the opening round of the Big Eight Post-Season Tournament, March 7 at Kemper Arena.

Hartman, who announced his resignation Jan. 30 effective at the end of the season, ends his reign at K-State as the winningest basketball coach in Wildcat history with a record of 295-169.

"You like to win the last one," Hartman said. "But I don't feel bad. I have no regrets about it. I have been lucky. I don't have anything to feel bad about because I am walking out instead of being carried out."

While not ruling out the possibility of a return to coaching, Hartman indicated that his coaching career was likely at an end.

"Right now, I don't have any thoughts other than I am through coaching," he said.

Even with a full team, playing the Jayhawks would have been a difficult task for the Wildcats. But optimistic about his team's chances entering the game.

"You always have to find something to hang your hopes on. I said it was going to take a near-perfect game for us to win," he said.

KU used its great size advantage to jump out to an early lead and never looked back. Greg Dreiling, 7-foot-1 center, led Jayhawk scorers with 19. Danny Manning, 6-11 forward and the Big Eight Player-of-the-Year, followed with 16.

eighth on RBI singles by reserve second baseman Leo Seiler and right fielder Mike Hinkle.

K-State came back in a second game to win 6-4 over Tech with a 3-RBI double by Mike Hinkle in the top of the ninth.

K-State's Scott Lychter gave up only three walks, nine hits and one earned run in 9½ innings of work but came up short as a pair of K-State errors cost the Wildcats the game in a 3-2 loss to Southwestern Louisiana.

Back to back doubles by Otto Kaifes and Scott Gilbert with two out in the top of the ninth allowed K-State to send the game into extra innings, but a throwing error in the bottom of the 10th allowed USL to score the winning run.

KQLA to assist zoo in buying wallabies

By SUE DAWSON
Collegian Reporter

Don Wixom, educational coordinator of the Sunset Zoo, is hopping for joy at the opportunity to purchase two Australian Bennett's wallabies.

Wixom's goal, in coordination with radio station sponsor KQLA-FM, is to raise $2,400 to purchase one male and one female wallaby for the zoo. A wallaby looks like a short kangaroo, he said.

Wixom said the wallabies will be kept in the same area as the emus and the Australian black swans, creating the first mixed species exhibit at the zoo. The exhibit will be located outdoors by the main zoo building near the E.J. Frick Primate House.

Wixom said the money for the project will come from businesses and the private sector.

"The zoo is kind of an investment for businesses" because it brings money into the community, he said.

"It's one of the first times we've ever had somebody sponsor us (to purchase an animal for the zoo)," Wixom said. "It was very generous of them (KQLA) to contact us."

The station has been broadcasting Zoo Minutes, live one-minute remote radio spots featuring zoo staff members talking about different types of animals located in the zoo.

"That's an educational tool on the radio," KQLA General Manager Ed Klimek said.

The wallabies will be useful for educational purposes, Wixom said, since they will be only the second type of marsupial — mammals which lack a placenta and have an external abdominal pouch containing teats — at the zoo.

Zoo Director Steve Matthews said the wallabies will probably be purchased in the United States, because of Australia's strict animal export laws. The zoo must check out the age and health of the wallabies, he said, and an assurance of good blood lines is essential.

Wixom said the zoo has never owned kangaroos. Many of the different wallaby species are endangered, but he said the Bennett's variety is not.

No names have been chosen for the wallabies yet, Wixom said.

Klimek said participating sponsors such as Country Kitchen and Manhattan Mazda-Honda will donate a certain percentage of purchases to the zoo or through other types of promotions. People can also send in donations in the "Q-Roo for Sunset Zoo" campaign, he said.

"The main thing is to get the money for the zoo whether from individuals or sponsors," Klimek said.

"Every penny we get goes back into the zoo," he said.

The men's team was paced during the weak by Deon Botha, Scott Chandler, Shawn Walburn and Scot Sandlin, all of whom won individual matches for the Wildcats during the tour.

Botha, the team's No. 1 player, came away with victories against Texas-Arlington and North Texas State.

Although the men did not come back with an impressive number of wins, Bietau said the trip was invaluable for the team's league competition which gets under way shortly.

"We didn't go down to pad our record," Bietau said. "We went down to prepare for Big Eight play. If we are going to do anything in the conference, we need to play this caliber of competition."

The men's next match will be at home against Central State (Okla.), March 21. The women play again a day earlier against Kearney State (Neb.).

The second game went down to the wire, but K-State couldn't rally in the last inning and suffered a 4-3 loss.

K-State took a 2-0 lead in the first, but a pair of NLU runs in the bottom of the second tied the score at 2-2. In the third, back to back home runs by the Indians made the score 4-2. Jeff Turtle then homered in the top of the sixth for K-State to make it 4-3.

Louisiana Tech broke a 7-7 tie with a run in the ninth to slip by the Wildcats 8-7.

K-State took a 3-0 lead in the top of the third on a walk, a Mike Hinkle sacrifice and a two-RBI single by Gary Priddy. Louisiana Tech responded with three runs in the bottom of the third on a two-run homer by Montoyo and a pair of singles. Miller said he was surprised Struckhoff, the Big Eight champion in the two-mile and three-mile runs, didn't finish higher.

"It was her first time in the NCAA's with a chance to win and I think maybe she succumbed to the pressure," Miller said. "I was very surprised she didn't do as well, but that doesn't detract from the year that she has had, winning two Big Eight titles."

Entrepreneur club tries again with new sponsor, programs

By DAN SMITH
Collegian Reporter

After an absence of one year, the Kansas State Entrepreneur Club has been re-established and members want to make it a success.

The club's first attempt at success failed in the fall of 1984, the same semester it began. The club was sponsored by Raymond Coleman, director of the International Trade Institute and professor of marketing and international trade.

"The club just never seemed to really get off the ground," Coleman said.

"The club was a small group, composed mostly of seniors and was not well publicized," said Pamela Larson, senior in business marketing and vice-president of the club.

The new club, consisting of 34 members, was formed at the beginning of this semester by Robert Brockhaus, who holds the L.L. McAninch Chair of Entrepreneurship, and Bill Jeorling, fifth-year senior in architecture and treasurer of the club.

It was Brockhaus' idea to form the club, Jeorling said. Jeorling liked the idea and went to the Student Government Services offices to find out how to start a club.

"I did most of the advertising, and helped put the word out on the club by making posters and bulletins," Jeorling said.

This year the club, sanctioned by the Student Governing Association, seeks to develop leadership resources, exchange information and discuss common interests and concerns of the entrepreneur. It is open to students of all majors.

Greg Smith, sophomore in pharmacy and president of the club, said the club teaches students and faculty members how a business operates and how they can operate their own business.

"Several members right now own and operate their own business," Smith said. "We try to teach them that the word 'profit' isn't a dirty word."

Recently the club attended a national convention in Los Angeles, where several keynote speakers were present including George Allen, former professional football coach for such teams as the Washington Redskins and the Los Angeles Rams;

Steve Jobs, creator of Apple Computers; and Julie Brice, creator of the slogan "I Can't Believe It's Yogurt" for the yogurt chain.

Jobs said when starting a business, it's a good idea to get other people to invest in one's vision.

"The convention was really inspirational," Larson said. "It seemed that the people there really wanted to help you."

"The average age of the top 100 entrepreneurs in the world is 22 years old, and the total income of all these combined is $2 billion," Smith said.

Events coming up for the club include April Fool's Day, when the club will be giving away money to the person who finds the "fool." There will be a $1 donation, and if the "fool" isn't found by April 4, the money will be given to Students Against Multiple Sclerosis.

Other events include a Saturday luncheon conference April 26 at the Wareham Hotel, an international conference this spring in Chicago, Ill., the national conference here in the fall and a newsletter which will be put together this semester.

Meetings for the club are scheduled for 6 p.m. Mondays in Calvin 102.

Senior citizens fear discount loss

By The Associated Press

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — Furious senior citizens telephone Evelyn Weissman day and night to curse her. Last week, she said, someone threatened her life.

The callers fear they will lose discounts given to elderly residents by movie theaters, airlines, banks and hotels because of the 57-year-old woman's age discrimination complaint over a rent break for younger people.

To remedy the situation, Dade County Commissioner Harvey Ruvin has suggested allowing price breaks targeting any age group. His proposal, which has the backing of senior citizens in this retirement mecca, goes before the county commission Tuesday.

The controversy started when Weissman challenged her landlord's "yuppie discounts," 15 percent rent reductions to lure young, upwardly mobile professionals, or in this case tenants aged 25 to 50, into his hundreds of vacant apartments.

The county Fair Housing and Employment Appeals Board ruled that the rent break violated the county's ordinance against age discrimination. And its director suggested Weissman also deserved $50,000 for the mental anguish.

Then a counter-complaint was filed on behalf of younger people asking the board to deny discounts for the elderly, too. That complaint, which is pending, was filed by Robert Jednak, a Miami travel agent; he could not be reached for comment over the weekend because his home telephone number is unlisted.

"I don't think anyone anticipated that anyone would file a complaint against discounts offered senior citizens. We want to make the law crystal clear," said Commissioner Barry Schreiber.

"I'm sick about it. It's such a horror," Weissman said Thursday. "It's a lynch mob out there. My life has been threatened."

Landlord Robert Blum's appeal of the board's February ruling is set for April 17, and he says he will go to court if he loses. If older people can get discounts, his yuppie price break is also legal, he maintains.

The discount offered since last May "was the one thing we could do," he said, adding that in May, 255 of his 790 apartments in two oceanfront buildings were empty.

"I meant to offend no one," he said. "I just wanted to fill my apartments. The bottom line was that this was the only inducement I had to get them."

Now, there are 45 vacancies at his buildings, where discounted rents range from $490 to $1,200 monthly.

Weissman has lived in a studio apartment at one of his buildings for several years. When her last lease expired in September, she asked to move to a larger unit at the special rate.

But Blum, who is 59, said Weissman was too old for the discount, and she filed her complaint.

Municipal officials have tried to attract more young people, and their money, in hopes of rejuvenating the city of 98,000 people. In 1980, the median age of Miami Beach residents was 65.8.

Miami Beach planner Chris Heid said the city is getting younger without help because of an influx of Caribbean natives. The median age dropped to 53.9 by 1985, he said.

"I think it's terrible that the young people, making such tremendous salaries, should be jealous of senior citizens," said Ida Season, 65.

Shirley Acker supports her husband in his career and as president of K-State by being active in the community and by hosting celebrities, dignitaries and groups visiting the campus.

Shirley Acker aids in husband's job

By BECKY LUCAS
Collegian Reporter

When Shirley and Duane Acker were married, it was assumed that after Duane received his degree, they would move back to his family farm in Iowa.

Duane received his degree, but the move to the farm never took place. Instead, the Ackers spent the next 30-plus years moving around the Midwest.

Although she planned to move to the Acker farm, Shirley was not disappointed in the life she and her husband developed. As Duane became established in the academic world, Shirley began developing the busy life she enjoys today.

Her days are filled with a potpourri of activities including luncheons, teas, book club meetings and even grocery shopping.

As her husband is completing his final year as University president, Shirley is resigning from many of the Manhattan community organizations with which she has been involved.

Some of the activities include a program for visiting shut-ins which she initiated, serving as an elder and trustee for the First Presbyterian Church, serving on The St. Mary Hospital Board and an appointment to the Riley County Home Health Board. In addition, she belongs to two book clubs, and loves to read mysteries and tales of espionage.

Shirley's busy lifestyle complements her husband's career as president but she said the organizations she belongs to are not a prerequisite of being Duane's wife. Rather, they are a way to channel her energy.

The years Duane spent working at other universities in administrative capacities, and the many moves the Ackers have made, have helped Shirley prepare for her position.

"I feel at ease with people," Shirley said. "I know I can make a move, some people are afraid to move from one place to another, but we have moved so much, I'm used to it. I have also been at enough universities and watched the other presidents' wives, the other deans' wives, and seen how they've operated."

"The role (of a university president's wife) — this is my own personal opinion, because not every president's wife will feel this way — but my role is support. I don't feel like I have to have anything really going for myself. I put my energies into what he's doing, and that to me is compensation," Shirley said.

"He knows that he can tell me anything, and I will not pass it on. We can talk over things, and he can tell me the situation, and we will visit about it."

"We're friends — he's my best friend," Shirley said.

Shirley supports her husband in various ways, including acting as hostess to celebrities, dignitaries and groups visiting K-State.

Of the memories she has of K-State guests, the fondest is of Red Skelton. Skelton was in town as a Parents Day entertainer.

"He was the guest who sticks out in my mind. He stood in the living room, and greeted guests as they walked in," Shirley said.

The next morning, Shirley remembered Skelton bringing by a flowering plant to thank them for their hospitality.

Shirley said she doesn't play a role as the University president's wife.

"I learned long ago that it's much easier to be yourself, than trying to play a role. So, this is me."

Shirley hopes the future will leave more spare time for reading and painting — favorite hobbies.

Kansas' farm families receive K-State honors

By The Collegian Staff

Six Kansas farm families were honored at a banquet March 14 at K-State as the 1985 Kansas Master Farmers and Master Farm Homemakers.

The couples honored were: Lauren and Orvell Brunner, Dickinson County; William and Lillie Harries, Marshall County; Robert and Jo Eva McClellan, Rooks County; Darrol W. and Pauline Miller, Comanche County; Anita Niles and her husband, the late Herbert Niles, Coffey County; and Cyril and Kiliana Schmidt, Ellis County.

The couples were honored for excellence in farming, farm living and rural citizenship.

"The award was based on the growth of the farming operation, their community involvement and how the family has developed," said Gary Vacin, professor of extension information and coordinator of the program.

The families are elected by their county extension councils and are voted on by a panel of five judges in Manhattan to be selected as one of the six finalists.

The program is co-sponsored by the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the Kansas Cooperative Extension Service.

Certificates signed by Gov. John Carlin and plaques were given to the six winners during the banquet.

Hundreds attend memorial to honor former hostages

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hundreds of people attended a church service Sunday in honor of six Americans kidnapped in Lebanon who were described by the Rev. Jesse Jackson as "victims of a faceless war."

The 90-minute service of hymn singing, psalm-reading and prayer marked the second year in captivity for William Buckley, and the first for Terry Anderson.

"I have had a great sense of comfort today," said Peggy Say, 45, Anderson's sister.

House vote on Nicaragua may be close

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Supporters and foes of giving $100 million to Nicaraguan rebels claimed Monday that public support is running in their favor, but conceded that a crucial House vote later in the week will be close.

After special envoy Philip Habib maintained that President Reagan's proposal has strong support among Central American officials, the White House said calls and wires had shown that by a better than 2-1 margin, people were responding positively to Reagan's nationally broadcast Sunday night appeal for support for the aid program.

On Capitol Hill, however, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said calls and telegrams to his office were showing public resistance to Reagan's request to send money to the Contra counterrevolutionaries fighting the Sandinista government in Managua.

But Vice President George Bush, appearing on NBC's "Today" show, said, "I think we're going to win. It's going to be close," but "I really honestly feel we can" win.

The Democratic-controlled House is scheduled to vote Thursday afternoon on Reagan's program, which includes $30 million for non-lethal items like medicine and clothing, and $70 million that could be used for military help. The current program of $27 million in non-lethal aid expires March 31.

The Republican-dominated Senate will take up the Contra aid plan on Friday, Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Monday.

At the White House, spokesman Larry Speakes said that by 10:30 a.m. EST Monday, 1,952 calls and wires had been received in support of Reagan, while there were 799 against the president's plan. O'Neill said phone calls and telegrams to his office totaled 119 against Reagan's plan and 38 in favor of it.

Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., head of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, told reporters that calls to his California district office were 5-1 against Reagan.

O'Neill last week projected a 10-to-15 vote victory for opponents of the aid package. But the speaker refused Monday to provide a new vote count. However, Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash., the majority whip, said, "we're ahead and there is no perceptible erosion."

In the Senate, in which Republicans hold a 53-47 edge, Dole said, "I think there are enough votes (to win). It's close."

Dan Walter, Manhattan, listens with hands clasped behind his back to Lyman Baker, instructor of English, as the pair discuss their differing opinions on President Reagan's $100 million aid proposal to Contra rebels in Nicaragua. Walter and nine demonstrators voiced their support of the aid package Monday in front of the Union.

Supporters of Nicaraguan Contras hold rally

By PATTY REINERT
News Editor

Counter-revolutionary forces are the "most viable option we've got to preserve democracy in Nicaragua," said Dan Walter, spokesman for the Manhattan chapter of Americans for Biblical Government.

Ten members of the organization held a rally at noon Monday in front of the K-State Union to support President Ronald Reagan's $100 million aid package for the Contras, U.S.-backed rebels seeking to overthrow the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. The U.S. House of Representatives is expected to vote on the proposal later this week.

"We're holding the rally to say two things," Walter said. "We support President Reagan's aid proposal to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters, and we oppose the Sandinista government on three main grounds — violation of human rights, religious persecution and alignment with Communist countries.

"There are a lot of drawbacks to the Contras, but there just aren't any other options right now," Walter said.

"We're not professional politicians," he said, "but we want to have a voice in influencing the government toward basic morality and righteousness."

Walter said Reagan has made 10 attempts to negotiate with the Sandinistas and all have failed to bring peace to the region.

"History will testify that negotiations with militant Marxists is a dead-end road," he said.

Walter said the group wants to "lift our voice loud and clear" in saying U.S. national security is threatened by a secure Communist state in Nicaragua.

"Cuban and Soviet support of the Sandinistas is no secret to anyone. The White House and we are convinced this will serve as a vital foothold for Communist infiltration and aggression in all of Central America," Walter said. "It's one thing to be concerned about a Communist takeover halfway around the world, but it's another thing to be concerned about a Communist satellite country a mere two-day drive from our southern border."

"We're aware that the Contras are not a lily-white band of saints down there, yet the question that we've come to is what are the vital options for maintaining democracy in Nicaragua? History testifies that once a Communist state is established, the people don't just come in and vote it out. Once they're in, they're in. They'll put a stranglehold on the entire country," he said.

Walter said as holder of the highest U.S. office, Reagan "deserves both our respect and our support" because he was elected with a "clear mandate of the people to lead our great nation."

"It seems a tragedy that Congress would tie his hands in his efforts to preserve world peace," he said. "There is a saying that goes 'The man on the highest rung of the ladder has the broadest view of the world.' President Reagan has access to the best information available in the world about the entire Nicaraguan situation."

Gary Ingram, junior in computer science and one of the demonstrators, said information concerning Nicaragua is confusing. "You can look at newspapers and

OPEC meeting ends in disagreement

By The Associated Press

GENEVA — OPEC ministers, unable to agree on a strategy for reversing a traumatic drop in oil prices, suspended an emergency meeting Monday for at least one day, reflecting what cartel sources called major disagreements among the 13 members.

Arturo Hernandez Grisanti, oil minister of Venezuela and president of OPEC, said the break was needed to allow the group's technical experts to reassess the outlook for oil demand.

Grisanti said the ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries would hold informal, bilateral contacts before reconvening in full conference Tuesday.

The meeting's uncertainty caused nervous trading in the spot and futures oil markets. On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the April-delivery price of West Texas Intermediate, the main U.S. crude, vacillated between $12 and $13 a barrel.

There were unconfirmed rumors that cartel members were close to a production sharing agreement under which prices would stabilize between $15 and $20 a barrel. It was not clear where the rumors originated and they appeared to conflict with the atmosphere of uncertainty the session had created so far.

Ramzi Salman Abdul Hussain, acting chief delegate from Iraq, said a consensus favored cutting OPEC production and reinstating output quotas. But Libyan Oil Minister Fawzi A. Shakshuki said there had been no agreements and no proposals put forth.

Delegation sources, speaking on condition they not be identified, said the request for a new report from OPEC's technical experts was a stalling tactic that showed the sharp divisions within the cartel.

"We don't need more studies," one source said, noting that a formal oil market report from the experts had been submitted to the conference on Sunday.

The ministers were divided on the key issue of whether they should abandon the strategy they adopted in December to try to halt the erosion of their oil sales by forcing non-OPEC oil producing nations such as Britain to cut production.

The strategy so far has succeeded only in cutting oil prices in half, to about $15 a barrel.

The price decline has given a major lift to economies of Western industrialized countries by curtailing inflation.

Lottery bill vote close race, Hayden predicts

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — House Speaker Mike Hayden said Monday he believes several lawmakers have changed their minds on the lottery issue and there now is nearly enough support for adoption of a measure that would allow voters to decide whether to establish a state-owned lottery.

In addition, Hayden unveiled plans to bring up the lottery proposal for debate and a final vote "the latter part of this week or the first part of next."

Earlier this year, the lottery proposal fell five votes short of the 84 necessary for a two-thirds majority, the margin of approval required to adopt a proposed constitutional amendment. The vote Feb. 19 was 79-46.

However, the House voted 89-35 the next day to reconsider the action and voted 92-33 to return it to the debate calendar. The action was significant because the measure was approved last year with only one vote to spare in the Senate.

"I'd say we're within about one vote," Hayden told an impromptu news conference after Monday's House session.

If 83 lawmakers voted for the lottery, Hayden said "there would be tremendous pressure" on some legislators who are against the proposal to switch sides during a lengthy roll-call vote. He said urban lawmakers would feel the most intense pressure.

The proposal has picked up support within the last two weeks because of some suggested changes in the legislation, Hayden said. Among the proposed amendments are provisions that would require the odds of winning be printed on lottery tickets and a "sunset" clause that would require the approval of voters or lawmakers to keep the lottery operating, he said.

"We're taking a look at that," Hayden said.

The speaker declined to be specific about terms of the proposed lottery expiration language, but said it either could require the issue of continuing the lottery to be submitted to the voters or a two-thirds vote of the Kansas Legislature.

There have been "some suggestions" that the action to continue the existence of the lottery be taken in three years after the game is established, Hayden said.

The proposed amendments have helped satisfy some lottery opponents while "added input" from pro-lottery constituents has given other legislators incentive to change their vote, Hayden said. He refused to name the legislators who have changed sides.

Despite Hayden's claim that the lottery has picked up support, the Rev. Richard Taylor, director of the anti-gambling anti-liquor Kansans For Life at Its Best, said he has detected no erosion of support among lottery opponents.

Taylor said he was continuing to lobby against the lottery today by "visiting the right offices."

War with Soviets unlikely in future, Americans believe

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Most Americans believe the Soviet Union is a military threat to the United States, but few think nuclear war with the Soviets is likely in this century, according to a Media General-Associated Press poll.

In fact, many Americans believe relations between the Soviet Union and the United States are improving, the poll found.

In the nationwide telephone poll of 1,512 adult Americans, 47 percent said relations with the Soviet Union had improved under President Reagan, while only 10 percent felt relations had declined. Thirty-eight percent said relations had stayed about the same under Reagan, and 5 percent were unsure.

About half the respondents said relations would continue to improve under Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev. Only 6 percent said they felt relations would decline, and 34 percent said they would stay the same.

However, 69 percent said the Soviet Union was a military threat to the United States. Of those, 34 percent said the threat was increasing, 6 percent said it was decreasing, and 58 percent said it was staying about the same.

One-quarter of the respondents said the Soviets were not a threat.

On the question of nuclear war, nearly three-quarters said it was not likely to occur with the Soviets in the next 15 years. Eighteen percent said nuclear war was likely, and the rest were unsure.

Young people said nuclear war was likely more frequently than older people. Women also were more likely than men to think nuclear war would occur. And 34 percent of black respondents said nuclear war with the Soviet Union was likely within the next 15 years, compared with only 17 percent of whites.

Most of the respondents had a vastly different impression of American relations with China, once a U.S. foe. Only 26 percent said China was a military threat to the United States, while 64 percent said it did not pose a military threat.

Eighty-four percent of the respondents did not think a nuclear war with China was likely in this century.

Respondents in the Media General-Associated Press poll included a random, scientific sampling of 1,512 adults across the country Feb. 1-8. As with all sample surveys, the results of Media General-AP telephone polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variation in the sample.

Marcos' aides lose court battle

NEW YORK — A federal judge refused Monday to bar U.S. officials from providing the government of the Philippines with copies of financial records that deposed president Ferdinand E. Marcos brought with him to Hawaii.

Judge Dominick DiCarlo of the U.S. Court of International Trade ruled that the two Marcos aides who filed the suit against the Customs Service did not have standing to assert their claims on behalf of the ex-president. Marcos, who is staying at Hickam Air Force Base in Hawaii, was not himself a party to the suit.

It was not clear when the documents might actually be turned over to Manila, where officials of the new government of President Corazon Aquino are trying to unravel the details of Marcos' financial affairs during his 20-year reign.

The Marcos fortune has been estimated since his departure at up to $5 billion.

Czechs leave tour, seek asylum

MUNICH, West Germany — Ten Czechoslovaks left their tourist group in the West German city of Passau and three asked for political asylum, border police in Munich said Monday.

The 10 were part of a group of 185 Czechoslovaks who traveled to West Germany on a Danube river boat tour last Thursday. They left the group on Friday, police said.

Police said there was no immediate information on the whereabouts of the other seven Czechoslovaks.

Ten days ago, 14 Czechoslovak tourists defected from another group in Passau and asked for asylum in West Germany, police said.

House hears organ donation bill

TOPEKA — Hospitals should be required to ask relatives of a dead patient whether to allow donation of all or part of that person's body, witnesses told a House committee Monday.

Speakers from two organ and tissue banks told the House Public Health and Welfare Committee lives would be saved if the Kansas Legislature were to pass a Senate-approved bill to do so because organs and tissues for transplants would become more available.

Under the bill, the person in charge of a hospital or his or her appointee would be required to ask the relatives of a dead patient whether they would want to allow the organ and tissue donations and the hospital would have to identify the person as a suitable donor.

Comanche takes shot from bird

LAWRENCE — An Army horse that escaped the guns and arrows of the Battle of the Little Big Horn more than a century ago has fallen prey to an attack by a frozen bird.

Comanche — a stuffed horse and star attraction at the Dyche Museum of Natural History at the University of Kansas — was damaged March 6 when a thawing rhea, a large flightless bird, triggered a minor flood at the museum.

Thomas H. Swearingen, director of exhibits at the museum, said the damage was done when the thawing bird — also called a South American ostrich — caused a seventh-floor sink to overflow. He said Comanche "happened to be in the direct line of fire."

Swearingen said the frozen bird, which was being prepared for the museum's scientific collection, was thawing inside a plastic bag in a sink. It melted, slid into the sink and apparently flipped on a surgical-type faucet, he said. To compound the problem, the bird's plastic bag clogged the sink's drain, causing water to run over, seep down through two floors and onto Comanche.

Since the accident in the museum, Comanche has been wrapped in gauze to ensure that the materials inside the animal dry at the same rate as the skin. Swearingen said the gauge is expected to be removed in about two weeks and repairs will have to be made to the skin.

Swift currents delay shuttle salvage

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Strong underwater currents Monday delayed a salvage ship's effort to hoist a chunk of Challenger debris that might include the right rocket booster joint suspected of causing the shuttle explosion.

The Stena Workhorse started the retrieval after a robot submersible, the Gemini, attached a sling and lift lines to the piece.

But a Navy spokeswoman, Lt. Cmdr. Deborah Burnette, reported later that the effort was delayed by swift currents.

"They want to be very careful in lifting that part," she said.

Milk poses health risk to mothers

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Pesticide-contaminated milk that prompted officials to shut down more than 100 dairy farms in three states could pose a hazard to breast-fed babies, an obstetrician helping Arkansas deal with the crisis said Monday.

"If the mother has been drinking a quart of milk per day during pregnancy, and that's about average, and it's likely a lot of that milk came from a dairy that's contaminated, we would recommend that those individuals stop nursing," said Dr. Donald R. Mattison of the University of Arkansas for Medical Sciences.

The milk became tainted with heptachlor, which the federal government banned in 1983 after the substance was linked to cancer in laboratory rats, after cattles ate contaminated feed.

Thousands of gallons of milk have been recalled in eight states since the contamination was discovered in late February. Eighty-nine farms have been ordered closed in Arkansas, along with seven in Missouri and 12 in Oklahoma.

Officials say the contaminated feed was a byproduct of gasohol production sold by Valley Feeds of Van Buren, Ark., which obtained the feed from its sister company, J.E.W. Inc., a gasohol operation.

The byproduct, left after grain is mashed as part of producing gasohol, is often processed and fed to cattle. The grain that ended up in the byproduct was intended for planting, not feed, and had been treated with the pesticide to protect it until germination, according to Arkansas health department officials.

The states where milk was recalled are Arkansas, Mississippi, Kansas, Texas, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Missouri and Louisiana.

Fraud hotline helps nab criminals

WASHINGTON — Acting on an anonymous tip to a federal fraud hotline, Justice Department officials investigated a chauffeur-driven government car that kept taking a woman to and from a neighborhood grocery.

A Justice Department investigation found the culprit: the wife of then-Attorney General William French Smith. Smith later reimbursed the government $11,207 after his wife Jean used the car for some 300 personal errands.

The call was received by the General Accounting Office's fraud hotline, a toll-free number that has been called 74,000 times in its seven years of existence.

In a report released Monday, the GAO for the first time described in detail how the hot-line tip led investigators to conclude that a Cabinet officer's wife had been making an improper use of the limousine. The report did not name names, but the Smith case had been highly publicized at the time.

In Smith's case, the tipster jotted down the license number of the chauffeur-driven car outside the grocery and called the hotline. GAO officials found the vehicle registered to the Justice Department.

"Investigation by the department revealed that the car was assigned to the attorney general and that it had been improperly used more than 300 times by his wife for personal errands between 1981 and 1984," the GAO report said.

Dean Walter Woods

Staff/Jim Dietz

Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture and director of the Division of Cooperative Extension, talks on the phone Monday in his Waters Hall office. Woods came to K-State in July after spending 14 years as head of the Department of Animal Science at Purdue University.

Dean sets realistic goals for ag college

By MARCIA SULLIVAN
Collegian Reporter

Members of the College of Agriculture are setting realistic goals this year to meet proposed federal budget cuts, said Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture and director of the Division of Cooperative Extension.

Woods said his goals for the college include educating youths to assume roles in agriculture, generating new knowledge through research and applying that research in the classroom and in the field.

"These things have been the strength of agriculture in the past and, quite frankly, will be the strength of agriculture in the future," he said.

Before coming to the University in July, Woods spent 14 years as the head of the Department of Animal Science at Purdue University in Lafayette, Ind.

"By nature I am an optimistic person and a realist. As you deal with programs it's easy to manage them if funds are increasing all the time," Woods said. "It will be particularly challenging for the College of Agriculture — both research and extension — to respond to some of the proposed cuts in the federal budget."

Woods said even with the crisis in agriculture due to the federal budget cuts proposed by President Reagan, "agriculture is absolutely an important entity to K-State and the state of Kansas."

Woods said the college is assessing the impact of the proposed cuts and communicating the impacts to students and Kansans.

"We are working aggressively to increase communication with people across the state to be sure we understand their concerns and problems," Woods said. "We want to communicate to them the programs and research under way at the University that will benefit them."

Woods said the Division of Cooperative Extension provides the basis of research taught in the classroom as well in the field.

"Students may not see this (extension program) as readily while they're here on campus as they might have before they came to K-State or after they leave," Woods said.

He said students may benefit from the extension program and receive lifelong knowledge before they come to the University through 4-H and after graduation through interaction with agents and specialists.

Jardine residents plan appeal, survey on pets

By The Collegian Staff

Residents in support of allowing cats in Jardine Terrace Apartments are planning an appeal to the Department of Housing within the next week, said Tracy Schemper, freshman in business and Jardine resident.

Schemper and Sue Nelson, freshman in veterinary medicine, are leading the protest against the Jardine policy which allows no pets in the buildings. The two are considering forming a general survey of residents' responses to the policy.

"We are undecided as to what to do to go about the appeal, but we are debating on running a total survey of Jardine," Schemper said.

The Jardine mayors' council did a random survey, which consisted of 75 of the 500 Jardine residents, and then voted to continue the pet restrictions.

Schemper said the mayors' council handled the situation badly because it sent animal eviction notices to apartments where cats had been seen while the survey was being done.

Jardine Executive Mayor Sheldon Klassen, senior in management, said the survey was conducted with someone representing those who want cats and a member of the mayors' council.

"I don't think that there were that many turned in for having cats, but if a member of the mayors' council saw a cat in an apartment, it was their job to turn them in," Klassen said.

The reason people who had cats did not receive eviction notices before the survey, Klassen said, was because the housing department was awaiting a decision from the mayors' council.

"It's unfortunate that we have people who are harboring cats; it's these people who want to change the policy," Klassen said.

The complaints made about the council's random survey concerned the 69 percent of Jardine residents who said they did not mind if a neighbor owned a cat, he said.

"The most relevant question in the survey was 'would you like to own a cat,' and 87 percent said 'no.' That's a good sample of what the people in Jardine want," Klassen said.

Marvin Samuelson, head of the small animal medicine section at the veterinary medicine center, reviewed the Jardine policy on cats and said he thought they should not be banned from Jardine, but owners need to be responsible if they want to have them.

"The proposal (to ban cats) is unnecessarily restrictive," Samuelson said. "Many of our people in University housing are people experiencing a large degree of pressure, and companion animals can help them cope."

The emphasis should be on responsible owners of companion animals and the ground rules should be decided by a pet council made up of those who do and do not own pets, Samuelson said.

"If owners can be responsible then restrictions won't be necessary," he said.

Carriers of the AIDS virus will be advised not to participate in certain intercollegiate and intramural sports according to a draft proposal submitted to the University AIDS policy subcommittee Monday by Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center.

The policy proposal on sports participation for people with AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome), AIDS related complex and carriers of Hepatitis B will advise those carrying the viruses not to participate in intercollegiate "football, basketball, softball, baseball, volleyball, cross country and running events in track, the pole vault, and high jump in field events and doubles in tennis."

On the intramural level, carriers should be advised not to participate in "touch football, basketball, softball, baseball, wrestling, boxing, racquetball, squash, handball, volleyball, cross country, track, soccer, rugby, doubles in tennis and the high jump or pole vault in field events."

The proposal was drafted by Guy M. Smith, team physician and assistant physician at Lafene Student Health Center after a request from Tout.

Tout expressed concern about the text of the proposal and the difference between the kinds of contact sports.

"I don't know why he (Smith) included some of these things but it could be because of the way they share towels...use them to wipe the floor and then the possibility someone would wipe their face with it," Tout said.

Jeff Martin, psychologist intern at Lafene Mental Health, said he had some concern about the method of implementation of such a policy.

"Does the physician notify the coach, rec complex? I have some question about the confidentiality," he said.

Tout said it could be handled like drug screening for athletes.

"I, for instance, cannot tell you how many use recreational drugs," he said.

A method of notification could be set up where the physician could just tell the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics a certain player could not play, Tout said, but he did not think the athletic department would agree to this.

"Unless they are lying flat on their back in bed the coach wants them playing," Tout said.

Tout said the proposal does have some problems. A physician could not release the information to anyone that the player had AIDS without the permission of the player.

Martin said the proposal might prompt the athletic department to do its own widespread testing. He said he knows of no evidence of the AIDS virus being transmitted through participation in sports.

Larry Travis, director of the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, said he didn't know enough about the AIDS virus to make a statement about the policy proposal.

The entire University AIDS committee will meet at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday at the Lafene Health Center Conference Room.

Supply-side theory fails in practice

TIM CARPENTER
Editorial
Page Editor

Economic wizards have tried for years to develop the perfect economic theory. Some have succeeded on paper, but none in practice. Many false notions of what makes for economic prosperity have been pursued to no avail. President Reagan's dogged support for supply-side economics is a good example of how an unproven theory, once implemented, can have a devastating effect.

In February 1981, Reagan announced a new program for economic recovery. He pointed to the dismal background of economic problems — high inflation and interest rates, 8 million unemployed, a federal budget out of control, a national debt approaching $1 trillion, a record tax load relative to income and burdensome government regulations.

His plan called for budget cuts and a major reduction in individual and business taxes. The results of the plan would include lower inflation, an increase in workers' real incomes through higher capital investment and productivity, lower interest rates "by reducing government borrowing made necessary to cover massive deficits" and a lower tax burden. A large increase in military spending was also planned.

During his presidential campaign in 1980, and while he has been in office, Reagan has maintained that reductions in federal tax rates would provide enough of a boost to spur economic growth, enabling the federal government to balance its books and pay for a large defense buildup.

Reagan promised that the federal deficit would drop to $45 billion in 1982, $23 billion in 1983, and provide a surplus in 1984. But his predictions and his hope for a supply-side economic revolution were painfully wrong.

How bad was the Reagan blueprint? According to a recent report by the Congressional Joint Economic Committee, the supply-side experiment of the last five years has not met its three principle goals: economic growth, higher productivity and enhanced savings.

During the Reagan presidency the gross national product has grown at an average annual rate of only 2.3 percent, compared with an average annual growth rate of 2.8 percent in the 1970s. Individual tax cuts did not make a contribution to productive investment as the personal savings rate fell instead of rising as Reaganomics said it would.

In fiscal 1982, the first full year of the Reagan presidency, the government ran up a record budget deficit of $110.7 billion, breaking the previous record (set in 1976) by more than $44 billion. It has been higher in recent years.

The supply-side experiment has resulted, to some degree, in the virtual collapse of the nation's industrial base (the nation's trade deficit accounted for the loss of 2.3 million jobs in the manufacturing sector alone in 1985), a devastating farm depression, an unprecedented growth of Third World debt and, perhaps most importantly, a federal deficit totaling $1 trillion. The national debt now stands at nearly $2 trillion.

In view of the long-running consequences of supply-side fiscal policy, including our record-breaking trade deficits — which grew to $148.5 billion in 1985, up from $62 billion in 1983 — it is understandable why Reagan downplays his fondness for supply-side principles.

Reagan has succeeded in preventing deficits from being politically alarming simply by pretending that they are not. He avoids dealing with deficits because the costs are immediate and obvious and the benefits are distant and obscure.

Spending cuts are a proper way to reduce the deficit, though supply-siders tend to press for cuts in social services and programs and hope some sort of economic miracle will make it possible to avoid cuts which are painful.

But miracles are not a part of economic reality. Congress passed the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction amendment last year, which is an insufficient and unnecessarily harsh attempt to bring the deficit under control. Reagan's refusal to permit deep cuts in some areas of government spending indicates that he is not as committed to deficit reduction as he should be.

It is time for the president to concede to the failure of supply-side economics and take effective action to place a harness on spending. If that requires substantial spending cuts in Reagan's ambitious defense program, or individual and business tax increases, so be it.

Perhaps a born-again economist and a Congress bent on bettering its chances of reelection can join forces and battle the deficit in a responsible manner.

Kruger comes home to a tough situation

Lon Kruger has come home again.

With the announcement Monday that the two-time Big Eight Conference Player of the Year had been named Jack Hartman's successor as head basketball coach, Kruger officially returned to his alma mater after a four-year absence.

Kruger left K-State in 1982 to take the head coaching job at Pan American University in Edinburg, Texas. During his four seasons as head coach of the Broncs, the Silver Lake native compiled a 52-59 record, including a 20-8 mark this season.

Those numbers may not be all that impressive to the casual observer, but the situation Kruger encountered upon taking the job at Pan American was bleak at best. Pan American won only five games the season before Kruger became head coach.

The situation Kruger inherits at K-State isn't nearly as bleak as the one he encountered at Pan American, but several challenges still remain.

The 33-year-old Kruger must begin recruiting immediately if K-State is to be kept from falling further behind in recruiting top-quality athletes. Kruger is at a disadvantage in that the signing date is but three weeks away and his competitors may have the jump on him in the race to the top recruits.

This situation may seem like one in which K-State can't win, but Kruger is a determined man with ties to this University that will push him to be the best he can be.

Replacing a man like Hartman, who many refer to as a legend, will not be easy, but Kruger may just be the man who can get the job done. Kruger is home — let's hope his return sparks a return to basketball glory at K-State.

Propoganda prevents constructive dialogue

Propoganda is an attack word on an adversary's ideas and publicity techniques. The attacker believes that his (or her) view disseminates information and publicizes the truth; the other side engages in deliberate distortion and media hype.

The term "propoganda" is often connected with religion, war and politics. It is with politics that we should be concerned with in the on-going struggle between the United States and the Soviet Union — the two states at the summit of world power.

Leaders of the respective countries — President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev — are both fascinated by public diplomacy and battle each other regularly for "segments" on the evening news and for "ink" in the world's newspapers.

If the two leaders would tone down the rhetoric it would go far in developing a meaningful dialogue that could be used to promote a better understanding between the nations.

Three finalists should open selves to public

This year will be known as the year of change for the University — much needed change that will be welcomed.

The change starts at the top. The Presidential Search Committee has narrowed the field of contenders for University president to three very capable, very qualified individuals: Jon Wefald, chancellor of the seven-school state university system in Minnesota; John Campbell, dean of the College of Agriculture at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign; and Charles Sidman, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Florida in Gainesville.

Of the three candidates only Wefald has shown an open desire to assume the leadership of the University.

"I would be genuinely honored and thrilled to be president of Kansas State University because it is a first-rate university and because it is a land-grant university with opportunities, not only to serve students, but to serve the people of Kansas," Wefald said.

Wefald addressed the issues of University recruitment and academic standing with enthusiasm. One of his goals would be to make K-State into one of the best institutions in the Big Eight and "one of the top 15-20 public universities in the country."

The other candidates either could not be reached or declined to comment on the presidential search for reasons of confidentiality. Frankly, after being chosen from nearly 150 names, the three remaining candidates should be anxious to declare themselves contenders for the position and should willingly submit themselves and their records to public scrutiny.

The new president of K-State must work with the faculty, students and alumni aggressively and honestly. Secrecy will not inspire trust within the University and will not create good relations with alumni. K-State's president will be the University's most visible representative and must exhibit poise and charisma.

The Kansas Board of Regents will interview the finalists on Friday and Saturday and will announce the name of the new president Saturday afternoon. The board will select the most qualified person. From that point on, it is the new president's responsibility to use his qualifications in the best interest of K-State.

GOP leaders move to distinct beat

NASHVILLE — The sound that filled the Opryland Hotel recently was not country music, but the voices of seven of the Republican presidential hopefuls, trying out their tunes for 1,400 GOP activists from across the South.

Here are some first impressions of the performers as they start their auditions for the 1988 primaries.

George Bush — Draws the leadoff spot at the Southern Republican Leadership Conference and establishes immediately that he is a high-class act. An offstage amplified voice intones, "Ladies and gentlemen, the vice president of the United States," and a recorded band plays "Ruffles and Flourishes."

He turns over his second trump by reminding them that he has been working for the GOP since "Barbara and I organized the first Republican primary in Midland, Texas, in 1962."

Loyal service to President Reagan and years of party chores are Bush's claim checks for the nomination, and they may be enough. But he reads his speech on aid to the Contras in wooden fashion. What will happen if he has to campaign as plain George Bush and not as an extension of the Omnipotent Reagan?

Howard Baker — Fifteen months after he retired, the former Senate majority leader looks more rotund and relaxed than ever, two reasons why even some of his home-state Tennessee boosters wonder if he will really run for president again.

To counter the skepticism, Baker calls a news conference to introduce a top-notch New Hampshire political pro, former attorney general Tom Rath, as director of his exploratory committee.

If Rath and Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., can engineer a surprise for Baker in the 1988 New Hampshire primary, he might ride the momentum into the mid-March Southern primary and subsequent caucuses, where he

DAVID BRODER
Syndicated
Columnist

can play the Good Old Boy. As of now, the odds look as long as his belt.

Pierre S. DuPont — On paper, he looks like a potential Gary Hart, the hardworking dark horse with a "new generation" theme who might pop into contention when a front-runner fades. But his early-morning speech the second day is a hymn to the virtues of "success in the American marketplace," hardly a theme a DuPont needs to drive home. Curiously, he neglects to tell the story of his skill in making supply-side principles work for eight years as governor of Delaware, so the delegates leave knowing little more than that he is an earnest, pleasant fellow.

Alexander Haig — The former White House chief of staff and secretary of state looks every inch a president: silver hair, silver tie, deep tan and sharp blue blazer. He deflates his reputation for egotism with effective, self-mocking humor and a boldly challenges some of Reagan's stands.

He said the doubling of the national debt in the past five years "can't be blamed on Jimmy Carter," that the all-volunteer military won't work forever, and that Reagan was right to accelerate "Star Wars" research but wrong to make it such a high-profile project. Will the Republicans nominate someone who was squeezed out of the Reagan administration and occasionally ridicules the party's hero for sleeping overtime? Doubtful.

Pat Robertson — In a smash debut on the political scene, the television preacher steals the day's headlines and loudest cheers by attacking Democratic National Chairman Paul Kirk's knock on evangelical Christians' moving into partisan politics.

Southern Republican leaders covet Robertson's constituency, but are skeptical they want him as their candidate. It's notable that, even with this crowd, no other contender hits the "social issues" near as hard as Robertson. If they continue to give him that ground for himself, could he carve out a piece of the primary vote? He's an intriguing X-factor.

Robert Dole — The Senate majority leader displays the macabre penchant for put-downs that marred his earlier national campaigns in 1976 and 1980. He boasts that he led the Senate with a 92 percent Reagan support score, but he cannot resist adding, "That means he's wrong only eight percent of the time."

It would take a psychiatrist to explain why the Kansan, a gifted and often courageous legislator with real convictions, persists in playing the cynic and the clown in public. The audience loves Dole the entertainer; those who think he might in fact make a president feel cheated.

Jack Kemp — He may not be the legislator Dole is, but Kemp, like Reagan, understands that what fuels a political party is vision, inspiration and optimism. It is late in the day when the Buffalo congressman speaks, but he has them cheering when he said Republicans have a nobler mission than "defeating Democrats... We can bring the hope of freedom to men and women of every color and culture."

Kemp also shows why he is a high-risk candidate: His mouth sometimes outruns his brain, as when he said of his high-speed circuit of the issues, "Well, I've given you a grand tour de force."

Whether the GOP chase will prove to be just a tour or a tour de force, I don't know. But it isn't starting out dull.

Johnson's junket mired by weak lobby efforts

For a special interest group to get noticed in Washington these days, it almost has to have a well organized national lobbying effort.

To refer to education as a special interest raises the ire of most dedicated educators who know that without education, U.S. government as we know it would not even exist. Unfortunately, education is a "special interest" and, as Student Body President Steven Johnson can tell you, it suffers from a lack of cohesiveness and direction at the national level.

Johnson, sophomore in agricultural economics, accompanied student body presidents from Kansas' six other regents universities on a two-day lobbying visit to the nation's capitol during spring break. At the Student Senate meeting March 9, senators allocated $382 to Johnson for the trip on the basis that he would represent K-State students' concerns about the proposed cuts in federal student aid.

In Washington, the student leaders joined John Allen, a former Associated Students of Kansas activist, who recently founded the National Student Roundtable in an attempt to consolidate federal lobbying efforts.

"The national roundtable sticks to educational issues. There are no really well organized student groups," Johnson said of other organizations. Several national student groups "work toward divestment and other issues...and while these are very valuable and viable efforts" they detract from their efforts for education.

Johnson said he believes the trip was a success. Unlike most politicians, though, Johnson resisted the temptation to overstate the impact of the student leaders' appearance.

"Everyone was very receptive and very understanding," Johnson said of his visit with Kansas legislators, "but no, I can't say that any one (legislator) said 'Yes, I'm going to take this particular issue and hang this program."

CATHERINE SAYLER
Collegian
Columnist

One problem, Johnson said, is that he and the other student leaders couldn't comprehend President Reagan's proposed budget in the short time they were in Washington to suggest specific budgetary items that could be cut in order to bolster educational aid. The student leaders spent the first day in the Office of Management and Budget and the General Accounting Office researching proposed federal student aid cuts and then prepared a position paper outlining students' concerns with the proposed cuts.

In Kansas, 50,000 students receive federal aid. Johnson said that under Reagan's budget approximately 17,000 of those students would lose financial assistance. The Kansas student leaders' position paper asks for a unified needs test to reduce the number of forms students must complete, a new "credit system" for financial aid, establishing independent student status on a case-by-case basis, part-time student aid, aid for those without a high school diploma and allowing those without a declared major to be eligible for aid.

Johnson's appearance in Washington was a first step toward making K-State students' concerns known. To get the full value of the $382 senate allocation, K-State students should follow up on Johnson's trip by writing their legislators and reinforcing Johnson's claims.

CONTRA AID

Reagan paranoid about Nicaragua

In a couple of days, members of the U.S. House of Representatives will vote on President Reagan's $100 million aid package for the Contras, U.S.-backed forces seeking to overthrow the Sandinista government of Nicaragua.

During Sunday night's nationally-televised address, Reagan said the Contras are "virtually defenseless freedom fighters," and pleaded with U.S. citizens to "help us prevent a Communist takeover of Central America."

Reagan believes Nicaragua poses a threat to U.S. national security, and we must therefore act before the "malignancy in Managua" spreads to the Panama Canal or Mexico.

"Should that happen," he said, "desperate Latin peoples by the millions would begin fleeing north into the cities of the southern United States."

I've got news for you, Ron. Millions of desperate Latin people are already fleeing north. But they aren't fleeing Communist oppression. They are fleeing attacks by U.S. supported forces — the Contras in Nicaragua, and the government forces of El Salvador and Guatemala.

In response to Reagan's address, Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., said it is time for negotiations, not a military buildup. Although he agrees with Reagan that the Sandinistas have not upheld the promises of the revolution, have suppressed freedom and have supported subversion in El Salvador, he believes the president is "seizing military options before he has exhausted the hope of a peaceful solution."

Sasser would give the $100 million but delay it for six months to allow time for negotiations.

Just last month, representatives of the Contadora nations — Mexico, Colombia, Panama and Venezuela — as well as Argentina, Brazil, Peru and Uruguay, met with Secretary of State George Schultz and called for direct negotiations between the United States and Nicaragua.

By uttering a few non sequitur phrases about preserving democracy, keeping a cancer from spreading and preventing Communist takeover of the free world, Reagan has tried to sugarcoat the true intent of intervention in Central America.

The United States has a long history of meddling in Nicaragua. In the late 1920s, the United States created the National Guard to defeat rebels led by Augusto Sandino. With U.S. help, Anastasio Somoza began a 45-year family dynasty, one of the bloodiest and most corrupt in Latin America. Last week, a bipartisan congressional study group reported that 12 out of the 13 military leaders of the Contra forces served under Somoza.

After the Nicaraguan revolution in 1979, the U.S. government continued to support the defeated side. From 1981 to 1984, the Contras received an estimated $80 million in covert assistance from the CIA.

Reagan has accused the Sandinistas of providing weapons and training for a dozen Latin American nations, of persecuting and torturing religious leaders and directing international narcotics traffic.

Sandinistas closed the official radio station of the Roman Catholic Church which failed to broadcast most of a year-end message by President Daniel Ortega Saavedra. They also suspended publication of a church newsletter, Iglesia, and refused to permit broadcasts of Cardinal Obando y Bravo's masses because he wouldn't submit his homilies in advance.

In their crackdown on the Nicaraguan press, two other periodicals have been shut down since last October and editors of other publications have been warned to stop publishing. The editor of the opposition daily, La Prensa, also has been ordered to stop private circulation of photocopies of articles the government has refused permission to publish.

But for all of their faults, not even Reagan — if he were honest — could deny the fact that the Sandinistas have brought dramatic improvements in education, health care and land reform.

In 1980-81, Nicaragua's National Literacy Crusade reduced illiteracy from 52 percent to 12 percent earning Nicaragua UNESCO's award for outstanding achievement in literacy.

Health care has improved dramatically since 1979. National vaccination campaigns have all but eradicated polio and drastically reduced malaria, measles and other childhood diseases. The infant mortality rate dropped from 121 to 75 per 1,000, and in 1982, the World Health Organization chose Nicaragua as a model country for primary health care.

Housing, electricity and indoor plumbing were made available through the efforts of the Nicaraguan government. Land reform provided 2.4 million acres to more than 50,000 landless campesino families.

The Reagan administration's real goal is not to bring peace to Central America. And it is not to prevent a Communist takeover of this hemisphere. It is to overthrow the Sandinistas, a freely elected government.

Reagan does nothing but flatter Cuban President Fidel Castro by saying Cubans, operating out of Nicaragua, will take over Central America, Mexico, and finally, will cross our own southern border.

It is not a black and white issue. The Sandinistas are not angels, nor are they Communists. And the choice is not, as some would have us believe, between funding the Contras today and defending San Diego tomorrow.

Things might be different if there were evidence to show there are Soviet or Cuban military bases in Nicaragua. Clearly, the United States should not stand by as Nicaragua attacks neighboring countries. But that hasn't happened.

If Costa Rica, a democratic nation which has no standing army and shares a border with Nicaragua, is not worried about the spread of the "malignancy in Managua," why do we, the greatest military power in the world, feel threatened that Nicaraguans will soon be in our front yard?

Contra leaders have said they will have no moral right to continue if they cannot do the job in 18 months, but their "morals" are, at best, questionable.

And time will tell. Reagan is doing this in our name. Will we stand by as he sends more money, more advisers, more troops? Or will we educate ourselves now and speak up before it's too late?

Lecture series promote school's positive image

Quality vs. quantity. Not a new idea by any means. Nor is it a concept foreign to this University. But the notion can be easily implemented into the several lecture programs currently held on campus with favorable effects.

It is fair to say K-State is in the throes of an image problem, both internally and externally. Several factors affect the public profile of this institution — athletic performance, academic programs and lecture series, to name a few. But a relatively great impact is easily made when quality and prominence of speakers takes precedence over the number of public appearances.

A campus appearance of a U.S. president, a Salvadoran president, a 1964 Nobel Peace Prize winner, a nationally recognized news anchorman or secretary of state goes a long way in bolstering the University's image. Such arrivals also serve to validate the idea that K-State is much more than a Cow College, a Silo Tech or any other applicable nickname.

A stronger pride within the University structure could also come about as a result of the materialization of prominent men and women on campus.

The high honoraria linked with the lectures could very likely hinder the engagement of prominent speakers several times throughout the year. But they are an investment worth making. The long-term benefits are evident: greater University countenance, increased prestige for the lecture programs, and perhaps even increased student attendance at the lectures.

JILL HUMMELS
Staff Writer

A recent article in the University of Kansas student-run newspaper alluded to the prestige associated with K-State's lectures. The paper cited a supporter of a proposal for a KU lecture program as saying that when someone prominent was making a speech in the state, everyone in Lawrence packed into their autos and traveled to Manhattan.

The series do make long strides toward enhancement and maintenance of K-State's stature. If KU is looking over its shoulder for a change — wiping the Nixon sweat beads from its upper lip, so to speak — K-State must be doing something right.

The chairmen and members of the lecture committees should be commended for doing an admirable job of acquiring top-notch lecturers to this point. But it is essential the committees continue the search for excellent and prominent speakers for All-University Conventions, Lou Douglas Lectures and Landon Lectures.

K-State must continue to strive for excellence.

Kruger comes home as Hartman's successor

By TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

It may have taken a little longer than he expected, but Athletic Director Larry Travis finally got his man to fill the head men's basketball coaching position left open by the resignation of Jack Hartman.

As expected, Travis announced Lon Kruger, a star player at K-State from 1970 through 1974 and until Monday the head coach at Pan American University, as the new coach. The announcement was made at a press conference Monday morning in the Union Big Eight room.

Travis had earlier said a coach would likely be named as soon as a week ago, March 11.

"I searched the country out far and wide, and as of last Saturday night and Sunday morning, I was still talking to people and trying to get things worked out," Travis said. "It was a very tough decision because we had some very good people involved."

The other two finalists for the position were believed to have been Georgia Tech Assistant Coach George Felton and Fort Hays State Head Coach Bill Morse.

"One of the things that gave Lon the edge was his head coaching experience," Travis said. "Being a K-State alumnus is (also) very important for us right now."

"But several things more important than that really swung the deal for him. He took a program that had only won five games the year before he got there and built his own program. That was very important. I wanted someone who had experience in doing that and he did."

Kruger compiled a 52-59 record in four seasons at Pan American, including a 20-8 finish this season.

"For many obvious reasons, I'm excited about returning to Kansas State University," Kruger said. "I grew up here and I've been a Kansas State fan for all my life. Having played here and experienced the great moments in terms of working with some quality people throughout the state of Kansas and the University, I'm excited to return.

"As important as anything else, my memories of Kansas State University are associated with the great fans Kansas State has."

Kruger said he hopes "to rekindle the pride and enthusiasm and the great support that we've had throughout the state of Kansas and nationally."

Once one of the most consistently successful basketball schools in the Big Eight Conference in past years, K-State has suffered through four consecutive losing records in Big Eight play.

The Wildcats finished the 1985-86 season with a 16-14 overall record, 4-10 in the Big Eight under Hartman.

Kruger's two most immediate tasks will be hiring assistant coaches to fill out his staff and the recruiting of high school seniors and junior college players for next season.

"The two people that we bring in as assistants are as important as anything I do," Kruger said. "We've talked to a lot of very capable people and we're going to look carefully at that and try to make a decision as quickly as possible."

"We've got three weeks left until signing days (for high school and junior college recruits) and we haven't got any time to waste."

Although coaching staffs from most other schools have long since begun recruiting players, Kruger said he is confident of bringing in a number of top recruits.

"The athletes are there. Our priority is getting young people that want to play at Kansas State University and have the desire and dedication, the fight and commitment to win," he said. "There are enough athletes out there now that even at this late date I think we can realize some success in recruiting."

Taking over for Hartman, his former coach and boss, Kruger follows the winningest coach in K-State basketball history. Hartman's overall record in 16 years with the Wildcats was 295-169.

"My feelings are very mixed (about replacing Hartman). He's been so great for the game of basketball, not only here but around the country. To lose someone of his stature and quality, it hurts the profession," Kruger said.

Kruger served as a graduate assistant to Hartman for the 1977-78 season before being promoted to full-time assistant for the 1978-79 season. He served as an assistant until taking the Pan American job for the 1982-83 season.

Lon Kruger ponders a reporter's question at a press conference Monday in which he was named K-State's head basketball coach, replacing Jack Hartman. Kruger, a former Wildcat standout and assistant coach, leaves the head coaching position at Pan American University, where he compiled a 20-8 record this season and a 52-59 record in his four years there.

Walking in glass slippers on road to NCAA finals

DAVID SVOBODA
Editor

The National Collegiate Athletic Association's National Championship Tournament is beginning to pick up steam as the final 16 teams head into the home stretch. Each of the teams remaining has but one thing in mind — a trip to the Final Four in Dallas.

Some are obvious pretenders to the throne and others should have made their travel plans for Dallas weeks ago.

The pretenders include DePaul, Alabama, Louisiana State and Auburn.

Joey Meyer has done a fine job with the Blue Demons from DePaul, but who did the Demons beat to reach the final 16? "Chokelahoma," that's who.

This isn't intended to be a knock against the Blue Demons, but Oklahoma peaked during the Big Eight Conference tournament and didn't register a solid effort after that.

The "terrible trio" from the South — Alabama, LSU and Auburn — have all registered fine seasons, but Kentucky will rout Alabama, Georgia Tech will down LSU and a tough Nevada-Las Vegas team may run Auburn all the way back to their home state of Alabama.

Three teams have gained "Cinderella" status, and two of them will square off in the East Regional Friday night in East Rutherford, N.J.

Cleveland State and Navy, two of the biggest surprises of the tournament thus far, will meet Friday in what promises to be one of the most exciting games of the tourney to this point.

Navy's David Robinson was simply awesome in an upset win over Syracuse Sunday, scoring 35 points and grabbing 11 rebounds. Cleveland State posted one of the major upsets of the tourney thus far by knocking off Indiana in the opening round.

The third "Cinderella," Iowa State, is but one win from the Midwest Regional finals. Iowa State is led by Johnny Orr, who gained his biggest win as Cyclone mentor when Iowa State rallied from an early deficit to down No. 5 Michigan Sunday afternoon.

The victory was sweet for Orr, who coached Michigan before coming to Ames to take over what was at the time a struggling program.

The obvious cream of the crop in the final 16 includes Duke, Kentucky, Georgia Tech, Kansas, Nevada-Las Vegas, North Carolina and Louisville. The other two teams remaining in the field — North Carolina State and Michigan State — are tough to classify and shouldn't deny any of the giants their chance for glory.

Duke, the No. 1 team in the nation and a cinch to win the East Regional, should be the team to beat in the tourney, although the NCAA tournament committee should be shot for pairing the winners of the East and Midwest regionals in a semifinal game in Dallas.

It is obvious that the class of the tourney field was Duke and Kansas, and for these two teams to have to meet in the semis is absolutely stupid.

Oops, I let the cat out of the bag. I am picking Duke and Kansas to win their respective regions. I just can't see anyone stopping either of these two teams.

Friends, alumni hail Kruger as 'winner'

By TIM FITZGERALD
Assistant Sports Editor

K-State alumni and past acquaintances of newly hired K-State basketball coach Lon Kruger are wearing out the word "winner."

When talking about Kruger, many people are using the word winner, and despite a mixed reaction from the student body, most people are saying K-State could have hired no better a coach or person than Lon Kruger.

"The single thing about Lonnie is he's a winner," said Dick Renfro, member of the Alumni Athletic Board and alumni representative to the Intercollegiate Athletic Council. "Not only as a coach, but he was as a student and as an athlete."

Kruger played for former K-State Coach Jack Hartman from 1970-74 and then entered into coaching. He is coming to K-State from Pan American University, where in his four-year tenure as head coach he took a losing program and made it a winner. Kruger's Pan Am team won 20 games this past season.

Washburn University Coach Bob Chipman is a friend of Kruger's from the days the two spent together on the K-State basketball team. Chipman said he believes K-State hired the best man for the job.

"I think it's great for the University, the basketball program and the state. He's one of the greatest players in the history of Kansas. It's a perfect match," Chipman said.

Fred Bramlage, Junction City

"He's a great coach, tremendous recruiter and a winner. All those things tell me the program is going to be successful."

Washburn University Coach Bob Chipman on new K-State Coach Lon Kruger alumnus and namesake of the recently approved K-State basketball coliseum, thinks Kruger's proven record as a coach and the character he exhibited as a K-State player for Hartman in the early '70s were keys in Travis's decision.

"I think he's (Kruger) always showed he's a winner and has a lot of coaching ability," Bramlage said.

K-State alumnus and Manhattan resident Terry Ray served on the search committee which assisted Travis in looking for Hartman's successor. Ray said he is pleased the search is over and K-State was able to hire the man the search committee wanted.

"We're (K-State) off and running. Lon was undoubtedly the best choice — there wasn't any doubt. And, Lon being a K-Stater is an added plus," Ray said.

"We (the search committee) made a very thorough search and it's pleasing to know that Larry (Travis) hired our choice, because you've done a good job," Ray said.

K-State's controversy-ridden star, Norris Coleman, said he hopes Kruger is able to recruit some impact players.

"He's got a lot of recruiting to do. Hopefully he can get some junior college guys with some experience, because most of the best high school players are signed (to go to other universities)," Coleman said. "He's going to have to get some players for us to compete next year — we're young, but we have a good nucleus."

The attitude of the student body is varied — many are taking a wait-and-see attitude, some students are excited about the choice and others thought it was time for a change in the style of basketball played at K-State.

"I don't know about the teams he played against at Pan America," said Joe Vader, senior in journalism mass communications. "I know he had a winning record last season (at Pan America), but we'll see what he does here."

"I think it's fabulous for K-State fans and alumni since he is a household word. I'm anxious to see if he can keep the winning tradition," Vader said.

Scott Bush, junior in marketing, thought the job should have gone to one of the other finalists for the job, either Georgia Tech Associate Coach George Felton or Fort Hays State Coach Bill Morse.

"We needed something different than the old system. K-State needs a new style of basketball rather than Hartman's," Bush said.

"I think it's a good move," said Betsy Lienhard, senior in finance. "He's young and enthusiastic and acquainted with the K-State program, so he'll give that extra effort to rebuild the program to what it once was."

Bramlage said Kruger doesn't have any time to celebrate his hiring and that it is vital he get down to the job of recruiting quality players for next year's Wildcat team.

"He's got to do one hell of a job recruiting and get some assistants who can help him recruit," Bramlage said.

"He's hit the ground running," Renfro said. "Lon has always had an idea what he would do with the program — that was the single biggest asset he had over the other candidates."

Chipman said it is essential Kruger find a pair of assistants who are young, energetic and who are going to be dynamic recruiters.

Chipman's advice as a friend and fellow coach to Kruger would be not to change from the philosophies — an energetic and caring approach to his job and friendships — that got him to K-State.

"He's a great coach, tremendous recruiter and a winner. All those things tell me the program is going to be successful," Chipman said.

Spartans searching for KU's weakness

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas is the obvious favorite in the Midwest Regional of the NCAA Basketball Tournament, say the head coaches of the other three teams.

"We're still looking for a weakness in them," said Jud Heathcote, whose Michigan State Spartans will take on the second-ranked Jayhawks Friday in the Midwest regional semifinals. "They're a great running team with the size to work inside and great perimeter shooters to work from the outside."

In the first semifinal at 6:37 p.m., Friday in Kansas City's Kemper Arena, Jim Valvano's North Carolina State Wolfpack will battle

Johnny Orr's Iowa State Cyclones.

The Big Eight conference, host of the Midwest Regional, had the four coaches on a telephone hookup from Kansas City Monday morning.

In early round victories over North Carolina A&T and Temple, the Jayhawks showed why they're the No. 1 seed in the Midwest Regional. In addition, the Jayhawks are certain to have plenty of local support in an arena where they've appeared several times this year and sits barely 40 miles from Lawrence.

"I think Kansas is a great team," said Valvano. The Wolfpack lost to the Jayhawks in North Carolina earlier in the season.

"We played them early in Greensboro and hung with them for a half," Valvano said. "We're a much better team than we were then, but so are they. They should be the favorite right now."

"I absolutely agree," said Orr, whose Cyclones were 1-2 against the Jayhawks this year in Big Eight competition. Orr lost to Kansas in Lawrence and dropped a 2-point decision to the Jayhawks on March 9 in the finals of the Big Eight tournament in Kansas City. On their home court earlier in the season, the Cyclones handed Coach Larry Brown's Jayhawks one of their three losses.

"I congratulate Larry and his team on the job they've done," Orr said. "For the Big Eight to have two teams in the final 16 of the NCAA Tournament is great. I would certainly say the Jayhawks are the favorite. But trying to pick a favorite is not a good thing in these tournaments. You've seen the upsets and what can happen. It's hard to say one team's a favorite."

Yes, it is, says Brown.

"Everybody in the tournament is now so close to reaching the goal they've set from the first day of practice, everybody is going to be under the same kind of pressure," the Kansas coach added. "We're just going to take it one game at a time. Being the No. 1 seed is fine, but it's not going to have any affect on North Carolina State, Iowa State or Michigan State and I don't think it will have any affect on us."

Decision wrong

Sports Editor,

We wish to render an official protest to the recent NCAA decision regarding the Norris Coleman eligibility ruling.

To make such a decision after he qualified for admission under another interpretation of the rule is nothing short of capricious and arbitrary.

Moreover, the bottom line, and it seems to be, is the academic performance of the mature young man in the present setting — the late bloomer, as it were. Norris Coleman is a young man. He sought the guidance of an honest and competent coach, Jack Hartman. He has become a team leader at Kansas State. His classroom performance is highly satisfactory and is now above a 2.5 grade point average. He is going to succeed. He deserves to be commended for what he is and what he wants to do. Why is he being punished?

Rules are necessary in any hierarchy, but their interpretation must be rendered with compassion and fairness.

We feel Norris Coleman deserves another opinion, without which the NCAA will have lost valuable stature as an educational institution committed to excellence.

York, and appear to be headed for a semifinal showdown in Dallas.

The best regional final matchups will be in the Southeast and West. In the Southeast, Kentucky will likely face Georgia Tech on Saturday in the Omni in Atlanta. I like Georgia Tech to be the winner in a matchup between these two powers.

In the West Regional, Nevada-Las Vegas is my choice to make the Final Four. UNLV will beat Louisville in the regional final, but only because the Cardinals will be exhausted after defeating North Carolina in the semis.

Who will be the eventual national champion? Tune in next week for a Final Four preview.

Increased farm debts plague Kansas farmers

By SAM HOSTETTLER
Collegian Reporter

Net worth declining two years in a row and having to borrow money to pay interest are two early warning signs for farmers to be aware of if they want to stay in business.

The appearance of the warning signs might make a farmer want to look for another occupation, and many Kansas farmers are experiencing the indications of trouble ahead.

"Kansas farmers are in serious times," said Bill Collins, a farm management fieldman for the Farm Managers Association. "The farmers need money to live on and they may not get it from lending institutions because the lenders don't know if they will get the money back."

Lending institutions are the major reason farmers are staying afloat. If the institutions are not willing to lend them any more money the farmers will be in trouble, Collins said.

"Looking at a survey of the State Crop Association, in which 1,300 farms were surveyed, if the farms had a debt to asset ratio of 40 percent or above, these farms are in real trouble," Collins said. "If the debt to asset ratio is 70 percent or more, these farms have immediate problems."

The repayment of debt is one of the major problems Kansas farmers are experiencing. But the farmers don't have enough net income to pay off the debt and their expenses are way up. The farmers aren't getting any advantages from government payments, Collins said.

Making a decision is one problem farmers have in his association, he said.

"In 1980-81 the farmers should have been smart enough to liquidate their land when the interest rates were 18 or 20 percent," he said. "Land has the highest carrying cost and when the price didn't bring what they wanted, they were stuck with the debt."

The declining price of fuel is the only bright spot Collins sees.

"This will help the farmer unless the government comes in and puts a tax on oil," he said.

In the FMA, the farmers haven't made enough money on their farms to reduce debt. If they don't find a way to minimize debt, they may be finding other work.

Statistics taken of farms in the FMA show 3.1 percent of the farmers in Western Kansas are going to quit in 1986, 4 percent of the Eastern Kansas farmers, 7.8 percent of the Southern Kansas farmers and 5.6 percent of the Northern Kansas farmers are going to quit. This comes out to about 25 percent of the farms in the association.

Collins said one thing which has helped the farmers out in the past couple of years is the 'FACTS' hotline set up by the State Legislature.

"The 'FACTS' helpline was set up to help the farmer if he needed a little financial help," he said. "The farmer might receive food stamps if they need them and get free legal advice if they so desire."

Collins said if farming trends stay the way they are, many older farmers are going to retire.

"Landlords are going to have some trouble finding good tenants," he said. "It might take 10 years to get back to normal."

Guatemalan to speak on military violations

By The Collegian Staff

Dr. Enrique Morales, a physician who fled his home in Guatemala, will speak Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. in St. Isidore's Student Center, 711 Denison, following a 6:15 p.m. rice and beans dinner sponsored by the Manhattan Alliance on Central America.

Morales will assess continued military power and human rights violations in Guatemala since the recent election of a civilian president.

This is the first civilian president since 1954 when a coup sponsored by the CIA toppled a democratically elected leader.

The public is welcome and a $2 donation for the dinner will go to relief for Guatemalan refugees.

Court debate to begin on Wolf Creek limits

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Attorneys for the Kansas Corporation Commission filed a 161-page legal brief with the state Supreme Court Monday stating all the reasons why they believe the utility regulatory board was correct in its historic Wolf Creek rate decision last September.

In its rate order, the commission slashed 57 percent from three utilities' requests for $508.9 million in rate increases to pay for the $3.05 billion Wolf Creek nuclear power plant.

The commission gave the utilities — Kansas Gas and Electric of Wichita, Kansas City Power & Light Co., and the Kansas Electric Power Cooperative Inc. of Topeka — just $220 million.

The three utilities own the power plant, located 60 miles south of Topeka near Burlington. All parties in the case will face the supreme court on March 28, the Friday before Easter, to debate the decision. The utilities are challenging the legality of rate orders issued them by the three-member corporation commission.

Brian Moline, chief counsel for the commission, said Monday the brief centered on the theme that there was nothing unusual in the rate order except for three unique provisions. In the brief, Moline said his attorneys used evidence presented during the 75 days of hearings last summer, plus legal precedents and cases in other states, to support the decision.

"Our brief addresses all the points raised on appeal," Moline said.

Trade institute forms research network

By JANELL BERROTH
Collegian Reporter

The International Trade Institute, 1627 Anderson Ave., has created a new research and information center for international marketing in the department of marketing.

Raymond J. Coleman, director of the institute, said the new project is a research and information network for international trade. The idea is to develop a multidisciplinary, multi-state network in which each state would have a project research center.

"Each of these disciplines will be interacting, and that way you begin to see the interactions that take place in the real world," Coleman said.

Coleman said the International Trade Council of Mid-America Inc. and advisory sponsors will help select universities interested in the project.

He said a university in Wisconsin will try to develop a research center for international finance, and a university in Illinois may try to develop a research center for international taxes and accounting. The University of Oklahoma is possibly interested in a research center for international energy.

The institute has been asked to implement this project by the ITC, which will also be assisting with some funding, he said. The ITC is a non-profit corporation made up of executives of small- and medium-size firms which were started at the University.

Coleman said the institute has been developing the research and information center for the last two years.

Cynthia Fraser, assistant professor of marketing at Ohio State University, has been hired as lead research professor for the center. Her primary responsibility will be to develop this project as a research and information center for international marketing, Coleman said.

Coleman said the position requires special qualifications and the institute doesn't have anyone with the adequate skills on its current staff — thus the hiring of Fraser.

"We have been striving to find someone extremely well qualified. The success of this whole program depends on people, and certainly we want the best," Coleman said.

He said Fraser is coming because the international trade deficit of the United States is one of the major concerns as far as the economy.

Glee Club spends spring break on East Coast

By ROXIE MCKEE
Collegian Reporter

K-State's Men's Glee Club went on an East Coast tour over spring break to sing for three alumni associations and the Intercollegiate Music Council.

The Intercollegiate Music Council was held at Harvard University with eight groups from various schools represented.

"Harvard was a big turnaround for a lot of us, we thought they would be real stuck up, but everyone was really nice," Ted McFeeters, junior in journalism and mass communications, said.

IMC holds a conference every two years helping to promote men's chorus. The next conference will be held at K-State. Gerald Polich, associate professor of music and director of Men's Glee, is vice president for IMC and will be program coordinator for the conference.

Members of the Glee Club had a lot of free time to shop, eat, and enjoy the sights while on tour.

Some of the Glee Club members had the opportunity to attend "Donahue" and "Late Night with David Letterman" while in New York.

Dennis Walker, a K-State alumus who works for NBC, gave the Glee Club four complimentary tickets to the Letterman show, and two tickets to Donahue.

"My roommate and I just happened to be in our hotel room when our director (Polich) called — it was all luck that we got tickets," Todd Schultz, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, said.

The Glee Club had hopes of singing on the Letterman show, but were unable to meet with Letterman for a rehearsal. Although the club did get to hold Tuesday morning's practice in the Donahue studio.

"The studios for both Letterman and Donahue show were really small, but it was a lot of fun to be there in person," Schultz said.

McFeeters said their hotel in New York was located in kind of a rough part of town.

"It was kind of a culture shock, we were in the red-light district of New York," McFeeters said.

The Men's Glee Club held numerous fund-raisers throughout the school year to help finance the trip. Student Senate also allocated funds toward the trip. It cost about $800 per member to go on the trip. The entire trip cost the Glee Club about $30,000.

magazines to try to figure out what's going on and you can find just about any information you want depending on where you look," he said. "I think basically what it comes down to is that you have to pick somebody to believe, and it seems to me like we ought to be supporting the authorities that we put in place to guard our country, to run our country."

"I'm not talking about blind obedience. That doesn't negate our responsibility to think for ourselves. All the same, we also have the responsibility to support our authorities," he said.

Lyman Baker, instructor of English, spoke against the demonstrators saying, "If you want to see what's going on in Nicaragua, all you have to do is get on a bus or get on a plane and go down there.

They're happy to have you come down there as an American. They don't regard you as an enemy. That's ridiculous.

"Before you buy into the idea that this president's picture of things is correct, you really owe it to yourself to do some homework, and you owe it to the people of Central America to do some homework," he said.

"If you don't get your head out of the sand, terrible things are going to happen here — not only to the people in Central America, but to the people here," Baker said. "(The demonstrators) have a right to do what they're doing. They'd have the same right in Nicaragua. Where they don't have it is in El Salvador where we support the government, where if you do this kind of thing the government won't run you away, the police won't run you away, but somebody will visit you at night and put a bullet in your head."

"We're not going to make intelligent decisions if we just allow somebody who we've decided to call the president simply tell us that this is Communism going on somewhere, and therefore we must rise up and throw it out," Baker said.

"I think what you should do before you tell us that we should send more money down there to terrorize the Nicaraguan people is you should go see what the Nicaraguan people are living under and you should ask how much of their misery has to do with us and how much of their misery has to do with the Sandinistas," he said.

Mike Querrey, freshman in pre-design professions, agreed.

"How dedicated are they to freedom and all of that if they're not going to carry on without the U.S.? If it was a real groundswell movement for a revolution, I think they'd be a hell of a lot further along than they are now, and they wouldn't need to be supported, really just propped like puppets by our government. People would recognize the need and do something about it."

Architects to develop coliseum design

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

Schematic drawings of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum were unanimously approved with only slight modification on Tuesday authorizing coliseum architects to begin development of detailed design plans.

Coliseum architect Bill Livingston said the Coliseum Program Committee would be able to review more detailed plans before the project is put out for bid in August or September. Only minor adjustments were recommended by the 15-member coliseum committee, which is responsible for ensuring the plans meet specifications of a revised design approved last month.

University officials and Livington have been meeting since September 1985, when Livingston began redesigning the coliseum after bids on the original project came in over budget.

The site plan is unchanged from the original design and the coliseum will be accessible to the handicapped, Livingston said, with spaces for wheelchairs on the concourse level and at courtside. No changes were made in the support areas such as the locker rooms, training facilities, press hospitality and storage areas, he said.

However, the committee indicated previously that the facility would have 13,000 permanent seats and 500 removable seats located around the basketball court. Livingston said the number of portable seats would be about half the expected number.

"There is room for about 240 seats, but during preliminary discussions with students they felt that they could get more than that in there. There is some more capacity, but we can't legally show it in our plans," he said.

Committee chairman George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, said the preliminary drawings "look pretty good" and a positive vote from the committee on Tuesday was important because "it is essential that we push the project ahead."

Architects working on the project will conduct a series of technical meetings during the next several months to finalize contract, structural and mechanical drawings so bid documents can be prepared, said Vince Cool, University architect.

K-State is negotiating with Tom Parkinson, a consultant to owners of sports arenas, of Savoy, Ill., to analyze special events features of the coliseum, Miller said.

The contract with Parkinson, who has served as director of Assembly Hall at the University of Illinois since 1961, will be limited to providing input on the "amenities" in the coliseum such as types of special lights, equipment, rigging for curtains and implementation of a computer-based ticket facility. He may also address staffing needs.

"Our only concern is to get on with the show and not revisit things that have been addressed before," Miller said. "He will not address the design of the coliseum."

Documents may reveal Marcos' wealth, assets

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States on Tuesday gave the Philippine government a box containing 1,500 to 2,300 pages of documents expected to detail worldwide, multibillion-dollar holdings of deposed President Ferdinand Marcos.

The same documents also were subpoenaed by a House subcommittee which has been investigating Marcos' U.S. dealings, which include an estimated $350 million worth of real estate in the New York City area.

Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs, told his colleagues, "I have been informed by the administration that they will comply, that we will receive the documents within a few hours."

It was not immediately known how many documents were to be released. But subcommittee aides said they believed the box contained somewhere in the range of 1,500 to 2,300 pages.

The actions came a day after a federal judge in New York refused to halt the release of the papers which Marcos and his wife, Imelda, took with them last month when they fled to Hawaii after the collapse of Marcos' 20-year rule.

Jovito Salonga, chairman of a panel appointed by Corazon Aquino, Marcos' successor, appeared at the State Department Tuesday morning to receive the cardboard box of Survey results disclose lack of ag knowledge among state's students

By BECKY OHLDE
Agriculture Editor

An assessment sponsored by the Kansas Foundation For Ag In The Classroom found that many elementary and secondary students in Kansas don't know much about agriculture, said Becky Vining, graduate student in education and Kansas Wheat Commission employee.

"We sent the questionnaire to 105 schools and 2,016 students answered it," she said.

"The purpose of the assessment was to determine the level of agriculture knowledge the students have," she said. "We found out the students simply don't know all that much."

The questionnaire contained 45 questions, not just about the production aspect of agriculture, but how agriculture affects everyday life, Vining said.

"Half of the students would answer 'I don't know' and we found a lot of wrong answers," she said.

Only one-third of the students knew that wheat is harvested in June and early July in Kansas, and only 3 percent of the students picked the correct answer to the question concerning the percent of farmers still farming in the United States (3 percent), Vining said.

The study found only one-half of the junior-high students knew the method of destroying disease-producing bacteria in milk by heat is called pasteurization.

Vining found there was virtually no difference between the answers given by rural and urban students.

Vining wrote the questionnaire last spring, as a graduate student, with the help of her adviser Jerry Horn, associate dean of the College of Education and director of the Center for Rural Education and Small Schools.

Vining also had help from agriculture and education faculty in writing the questions and received input and funding from the foundation.

"The study was sponsored by the Kansas Foundation For Ag In The Classroom and was done to give them a starting point or a basis," Vining said.

The foundation is a group of people representing all facets of agriculture in Kansas, working together to help elementary and secondary teachers integrate the teaching of agriculture into the classroom, she said.

"They (members of the foundation) will try to target their materials to the elementary and secondary teachers based on the results," Vining said.

U.S. records high in trade debt; nation now ranks 3rd in deficits

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The deficit in the country's broadest measure of foreign trade hit a record $117.7 billion last year, confirming that the United States became a net debtor for the first time in 71 years, the government said Tuesday.

The Commerce Department said the deficit in the country's current account, which includes trade in merchandise and in services, surged 9.6 percent above the previous record deficit of $107.4 billion in 1984.

As recently as 1981, the country enjoyed a surplus in its current account because earnings on American investments overseas, the services category, were enough to erase perennial merchandise trade deficits.

But the deficits in the current account have steadily mounted since 1982. This has had the adverse side effect of pushing the country into the status of a net debtor nation.

Simply put, that means foreigners now own more U.S. investments than Americans owe in foreign investments, something that had not occurred since 1914.

The final accounting of the country's status as a net debtor will not occur until later this year, but Commerce Department analysts said the figures released Tuesday indicate that a small investment surplus of $28.3 billion at the end of 1984 was wiped out last year, leaving the country $56.7 billion in debt to the rest of the world.

This figure, if it stands up to revisions, means that the United States is now the third largest debtor country in the world, behind Brazil at $103.5 billion and Mexico at $97.7 billion.

Given current trends, the United States is likely to become the world's largest debtor country sometime this year, and some economists are predicting the total debt could hit $400 billion before it begins to improve.

These pessimistic projections are based on expectations that the country will run current account deficits for some time to come. The only way the country will be able to reduce its debt is to begin running surpluses in its current account.

"We are a net debtor and we are going to become an even bigger net debtor," said Roger Brinner, an economist at Data Resources Inc. He predicted that the current account deficit of $117.7 billion in 1985 will swell to $126 billion this year before beginning to decline slightly in 1987 as the favorable impact of a lower value of the dollar helps to reduce imports and boost American exports.

Some economists have raised concerns that the country's growing world debt will reduce the U.S. standard of living as Americans have to send more and more money overseas to pay interest on foreign investments. Concerns also have been raised that such a large foreign investment in this country carries the threat the U.S. economy will become hostage to the whims of foreign investors.

But President Reagan has dismissed such concerns, saying the U.S. debt shows that foreigners still consider America a good place to invest.

Foreign investment in the United States at the end of 1985 totaled an estimated $1,009 trillion while U.S. investment overseas totaled an estimated $952.9 billion, giving the Corridor plan creates havoc

Regents search for remedies

By TIM CARPENTER
Editorial Page Editor

The procedure developed four years ago to adjust the operating budgets of the Kansas Board of Regents institutions for changes in enrollment patterns is not logical and promotes growth at the expense of quality, an analyst for the regents said Tuesday.

Tom Rawson, legislative budget analyst for the regents, told Faculty Senate at its monthly meeting the system imposed by the Kansas Legislature in 1982 has reduced the amount of funding for regents schools and has failed to protect K-State and other universities from sharp shifts in enrollment.

"The corridor system has only marginally protected universities during enrollment declines. It has forced universities which grew to absorb much of the cost of that growth," Rawson said.

The system lacks logic because the corridor formula requires the fiscal year 1987 enrollment adjustment to make use of changes in credit-hour enrollment between fiscal years 1982 and 1985, cost rates based on fiscal year 1984 operating cost studies, and the 1986 fiscal year base budget, Rawson said.

"No one in this room can sit down this afternoon and project the enrollment adjustment," he said. "It is that confusing."

If enrollment changes at a school any adjustments in fiscal budgets depend on when that change occurs during a three-year corridor cycle. Budget shifts do not take place in the year that enrollments change, Rawson said, but that provides a buffer when schools are hit by a temporary decline in enrollment and hurts schools experiencing dramatic increases.

The system undermines the Legislature's intent to improve program quality when the unit cost of educating a student increases and enrollment drops.

"If the unit cost increases dramatically and if a department's enrollment continues to decline year after year, they end up taking a bath," he said.

The Council of Presidents' Enrollment Corridor Review Committee, made up of representatives from each regents university, recommended the system be altered. Their study indicates the enrollment adjustment should be recalculated annually without regard to the three-year cycle.

The key to creating a better system, Rawson said, is to develop a formula to ensure that during periods of enrollment decline, enrollment adjustments are made only after an institution proves it can be funded at a level equal to its peers.

Rawson, a K-State graduate who has been with the regents since 1974, said K-State's peer institutions are from all regions of the nation and include Colorado State University, Iowa State University and North Carolina State University.

"The review committee was most concerned with changes that hurt departments not funded properly in the first place. We assume that the regents system is currently underfunded. It is not realistic for underfunded programs to absorb growth."

The review committee recommended that during periods of enrollment growth, enrollment adjustments should be made to accommodate the cost of additional students if a university is funded below the peer average.

Under the corridor system, regents expenditures as a percent of the state general fund have declined. The average faculty salaries have fallen further behind peers and has left the system funded at a level comparable to that of fiscal year 1982.

Mitterrand wants new government

PARIS — President Francois Mitterrand discussed formation of a new government with Jacques Chirac for more than two hours Tuesday and presumably asked his conservative political ally, who is mayor of Paris and leads the conservative Rally for the Republic, the largest conservative party.

The conservative alliance won a slim majority in Sunday's legislative election. For the first time in the 28-year history of the Fifth Republic, a president must govern with a hostile parliament. France calls the predicament political "cohabitation."

Mitterrand said in a television address to the nation Monday night that, on Tuesday, "I will call the person whom I will have chosen to form a new government." Chirac was the only conservative leader summoned to the Elysee Palace on Tuesday.

Aides to Chirac said he would give the president his answer within 48 hours.

Chirac told reporters: "I was called by the president for a general discussion on the subject of forming a government. I told the president that I would give him my reply in the shortest possible time."

OPEC to abandon low price plan

GENEVA — OPEC indicated readiness Tuesday to scrap a failing campaign to capture more of the world oil market by dropping prices, but it remained uncertain whether the cartel could agree on a strategy of production cuts.

The enormous problems confronting the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries were further complicated by non-member Britain, which announced it does not intend to reduce production despite a worldwide oversupply that has halved the price of a 42-gallon barrel to about $15 since late last year.

While the price collapse has benefited the industrialized world, most oil producers are suffering a drastic decline in earnings, and some face financial crises unless the slide is reversed.

Emissaries from OPEC's 13 members were meeting in a tortuous atmosphere of secrecy and fractious differences, and reporters tried to discern what direction the summit was taking from a few public remarks by influential delegations.

The most direct came from Kuwait's oil minister, Ali Khalifa al-Sabah, who said a majority of OPEC leaders were ready to abandon their strategy to win a bigger share of the world oil market by driving down prices.

He said the delegates were considering reversion to a price-support strategy that calls for new cuts in OPEC production.

Pesticides to harm dairy business

LINCOLN, Ark. — Dairy farmer Dwight Baugh had a one-word answer for federal officials investigating pesticide contamination of milk when they asked if he could stay in business without selling milk for six months to a year.

"Broke," Baugh, 52, told members of the federal task force trying to assess the scope of the problem. The contamination has forced officials to pull milk, cheese and other dairy products from stores in eight states and led to warnings that some nursing mothers should stop breast-feeding.

Baugh and about 100 dairy farmers in Arkansas, Oklahoma and Missouri are under a quarantine banning milk sales because their herds ate a mash feed contaminated by the pesticide heptachlor. The pesticide was banned by the federal Food and Drug Administration in 1983 after it was linked to cancer in laboratory rats.

The contaminated feed was a mash byproduct of gasohol production sold by Valley Feeds of Van Buren, Ark., which obtained the feed from a co-owned company, J.E.W. Inc., a gasohol operation, officials have said.

Dairy products from the affected farms have been pulled from stores in Arkansas, Kansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Texas.

Senate to debate sales tax increase

TOPEKA — Gov. John Carlin's proposal to increase the state's 3 percent sales tax by one penny on the dollar will be debated in the Kansas Senate on Wednesday, but its chances of passing are unclear.

Senate President Robert V. Talkington of Iola said Tuesday it is time to find out exactly where everyone stands on the issue so work on the state budget can proceed.

However, Senate Minority Leader Michael Johnston of Parsons said he cannot predict how his colleagues in the minority party will vote. And Johnston would go no further than saying he is "leaning toward" supporting it himself.

It is a critical issue because increasing the sales tax to 4 percent would generate $190 million new income to support state government. Without the extra cash, spending must be cut and the budget will be lean.

The bill's success hinges on whether there are eight Democrats among the 21 votes needed for passage. Talkington has vowed to deliver 13 of the 24 Senate Republicans if Carlin can persuade eight of the Senate's 16 Democrats to vote for the tax hike.

But members of the minority party are balking at supporting the sales tax increase because it does not include funding for highway improvements. Mike Swenson, chief spokesman for the governor, said it will be tough to win Democratic support without GOP commitment to a highway program.

"It's time we found out if the governor's proposal will fly," Talkington said following his weekly meeting with Carlin. "We've got a budget to put together. We've got to know whether the additional revenue will be there or not."

Panel defeats death penalty bill

TOPEKA — A death penalty bill failed to get out of a House committee Tuesday, but the chairman of the committee predicted the measure will be brought up again and will eventually pass the state Legislature.

The House Federal and State Affairs Committee failed, on a 10-10 tie vote, to endorse a bill that would reinstate the death penalty for the premeditated murder of a law enforcement officer or prison guard.

But such a vote only keeps the bill from moving onto the House floor, and does not kill it, said Rep. Robert H. Miller, the committee's chairman. Miller, R-Wellington, said he expects to bring the bill up for a vote again Wednesday.

"I just wanted to have all the cards on the table," he said. Miller attributed the vote against endorsing the death penalty measure to the absence for personal reasons of Rep. Michael Peterson, D-Kansas City, a death penalty supporter. When Peterson returns Wednesday, supporters will have the votes to pass the bill out of committee, Miller said.

Under the bill, those who receive the death sentence would be put to death by lethal injection. However, if that type of execution is declared unconstitutional, the bill specifies hanging or electrocution as backup methods.

The last executions in Kansas took place in 1965. Kansas' capital punishment law was struck down by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1973.

Dean Mark Lapping

Staff/John LaBarge

Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design, left the University of Guelph in Ontario last year to replace Bernd Foerster, who had served as dean for 13 years.

Dean establishes programs to give real-life experience

By SUE DAWSON
Collegian Reporter

(Editor's note: This is the second in an eight-part series profiling the deans of the University.)

A change of direction in Mark Lapping's life led him to K-State and the path he chose has been eventful.

Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design, left the University of Guelph in Ontario last year to replace Bernd Foerster, who had served as dean for 13 years.

"At a very pivotal time in my life, the (direction) I chose made very good sense to me," Lapping said.

"I'm a whole lot humbler than I was before I came," he said. "I realize now how lucky I am to be here among these students and faculty."

"I can't believe the dedication of the faculty—they are so committed," he said. "I have absolute confidence in the people I work with."

Lapping took out a full-page ad in the Oct. 3 Collegian to acknowledge the work of the faculty and students in the college and to thank them, he said.

Lapping said he believes the faculty has been more active in design practice and research in the last year because the college has brought in four times the amount of grant money in that area. Grants have been received from governmental departments and from private donations including one from the Applicon Corporation for computer-aided design work.

"Research in a college like ours is not only of the more traditional type...but it also involves design, solving problems and such," he said.

To motivate students in problem-solving in a realistic environment, Lapping said the college expanded to Kansas City, Mo., by establishing a University design center last fall. He said the location will allow students to gain experience in a rapidly expanding and changing urban area.

'I can't believe the dedication of the faculty...I have absolute confidence in the people I work with.'

— Dean Mark Lapping

"This idea was my baby," he said, "but my role was marginal compared to that of the faculty."

The college also established a joint lecture program with the Nelson Art Gallery at the center, currently located in an office.

"We hope before too long to have a fully-equipped studio and a genuine center," Lapping said.

The center was created to assist students in facing urban issues and solving related problems, he said. Several design teams are now in the field, Lapping said, applying their knowledge to design problems in the Kansas City area.

"It gives them a chance to rub shoulders with bankers, lawyers and planners," he said.

To better educate its students in Manhattan, Lapping said the college has reviewed its graduate program and has decided to specialize in more specific areas. Graduate work will now include specialized programs in general practice, environmental behavior, land planning and small town and rural planning.

Lapping said he is pushing to increase the amount of financial support available to graduate students through outside assistance from the University Telefund and from industrial and private donations. In addition, he said he would like to see an increased number of research assistantships in the college.

Lapping said he tries to travel across the country as much as possible to visit alumni working in the industry. Communication with alumni provides information on industry trends, especially with professional groups, he said.

"We're far more in touch with our alumni than before," he said. "I get good vibes from former students. They all feel K-State had something to do with what they've become."

Lapping said the department is working with the Department of Mathematics and Provost Owen Koeppel to improve the math skills of students in the program. He said he believes fundamental liberal arts skills are important to his students. Lapping said the departments of architecture and environmental design have prepared proposals of curriculum changes which are currently before Faculty Senate.

"Clearly the primary responsibility of this college is not to 'train' architects...but to educate broadly and richly its student body so that they're poised to grow," he said. "We do not see ourselves as a vocational school."

Cultural alternatives worth a taste

Picky eaters are no fun to eat with. They're so choosy about food that they won't eat anywhere but Tasty Burger or Build-a-Pizza down the block. Consequently, if you want the pleasure of their company, you get the privilege of chowing on greasy hamburgers or cardboard pizza.

Because their palate can't handle anything but the standard American fare of hamburgers and french fries, they ruin their friends' appetites and dull their own taste buds every time the dinner bell rings.

After observing my finicky friends, I've identified two outstanding characteristics about picky people. First, choosy eaters are afraid to sample something different because they don't know what ingredients are lurking in the alien concoction.

While a dessert may sound tasty or look inviting, they won't take the final step and actually take a bite because they're afraid of the consequences. This exotic new delicacy could be tart and chewy, not sweet and fluffy like the usual dessert they munch on.

Second, they avoid foreign restaurants. But this is predictable, considering their earlier resistance to experiencing new culinary delights. If they won't try a simple variation on American food, it's absurd to expect these people to be open-minded enough and daring enough to venture into foreign foods.

While some are vehement in their refusal to set foot on foreign soil, others simply don't care about it. They don't see the value in trying something different when their old food line keeps them breathing.

Collegian
Columnist

Unfortunately, these negative or lackadaisical attitudes of Americans not only apply to foreign foods, but to foreign clothing, foreign dance, foreign culture — foreign everything. What the American culture offers is far superior to anything from the outside.

Granted, Americans are starting to appreciate the cultural heritage of their immigrant forebears, but they aren't branching off into cultures to which they have no ties. Most people are content to live in their small, worlds where everything is familiar to them — where there are no threats — only security.

By choosing the security of a tried-and-true system over the adventure of sampling different cultures, people sacrifice a potpourri of learning experiences that could broaden their horizons. That is a mistake, especially when it happens at a university — an institution of higher learning.

K-State has a variety of ways people can learn about new cultures and different peoples.

Tonight Enrique Morales, a psychiatrist at the Menninger Foundation in Topeka, will speak about the Guatemalan elections at the meeting of the Manhattan Alliance on Central America.

The International Coordinating Council will sponsor the 4th Annual International Film Festival March 25-28. In addition, ICC sponsors an International Week each spring that includes cultural displays and entertainment in the Union and a foreign foods potluck dinner that is open to the public.

Union Program Council committee, Kaleidoscope, brings in films from foreign countries such as France, Spain and Canada.

On the academic side, foreign language studies give you the opportunity to participate in another culture, while history and literature classes provide background material about the cultures studied.

Whenever the opportunity to learn about another culture arises, seize it. Life is a banquet of experiences. And one of the main courses is foreign lands.

Boxing needs reforms to cut risks of injury

Imagine, for a moment, you are witness to a professional heavyweight boxing match. Two boxers have been pounding each other for 14 rounds. Both fighters are near exhaustion as they relentlessly strike blows to the head and body of their opponent.

A few seconds into the final round one fighter goes for broke, flings his right fist at his opponent's head and lands a solid punch. The struck fighter crashes to the mat as the crowd roars with approval. The fight is over, but so is the dead boxer's fighting career.

Unfortunately, this fictional characterization isn't far from the truth. Steve Watt, a Scottish boxing champion died Monday, several days after he collapsed in the ring during a fight.

Watt, 28, sank into a coma shortly after being stopped by Rocky Kelly of London in the 10th round of a bout. He never regained consciousness, despite undergoing surgery to remove a blood clot.

Examples of boxers losing their lives abound. South Korean boxer Duk Koo Kim died of a beating he took during a fight in 1983; Mexico's Kiko Bejines died after a championship fight the same year; and American fighter Willie Classen died from a boxing injury in 1979. The last boxer to die after a pro bout in Britain was West African bantamweight champion Young Ali. He remained in a coma for six months before he died in December 1982.

Boxers' victory-at-all-costs attitude — a mindset that creates a war-like environment (without the shooting) — sustains boxing. Boxoholics enjoy watching two guys get paid for doing something they'd be arrested for if they got drunk and did it for nothing.

For the benefit of their egos or pocketbooks, fighters like Watt risk their lives when they step into the ring. Apparently they realize the risks of the sport, but many find out the hard way that the human body was never designed for boxing.

Skin, muscle, bone and organs react poorly to a raging fist encased in 10 ounces of leather. As in the United States, ring deaths have led to calls among British authorities for boxing to be banned or dramatically altered.

Dr. Nelson Richards, president of the American Academy of Neurology, said last year that when someone is knocked out "the brain, which is a fatty, watery mass in the skull, is put into motion. It sloshes around in the skull."

Richards led a successful campaign last year to convince the American Medical Association to pass a measure calling for a ban against boxing in the United States. In 1984, the British Medical Association proposed banning both pro and amateur bouts because of the risks of brain damage and other injuries.

A ban on boxing is not a realistic approach, considering the overwhelming support for the sport, but a more realistic approach would be to impose a comprehensive set of safety regulations. Rules that require all boxers to wear head gear and use thumbless gloves should be implemented. It would make boxing a safer sport.

The safety of boxers — not the pleasure of the fans or the income of promoters — should be the determining factor governing decisions concerning the future of boxing in America.

A conservative bias

Editor,
Re: Rich Harris' column, "Brokaw to give his side of story," in the March 17 Collegian:
In his column Harris tells us about the "liberal bias" he sees in the media. His argument, however, also tells us about his bias. Like most people who are "rich" he has a bias in favor of conservatism. Furthermore, he must be an ultra-conservative if he thinks that "the Left" holds sway over newspapers, TV and radio.

If he would travel in Europe he would learn that most Europeans believe all of the U.S. media to be conservative.

Mr. Rich's conservative Kansas provincialism is showing.

Model lab facility

Editor,
I would like to congratulate the College of Business Administration for the job they have done in providing and running a computing center for business students.

I recently visited one of the other labs on campus, and was astounded by the lack of organization, control and respect I was confronted with. Though it is true that I probably caught this particular lab at its worst, no computer equipment should be subjected to this kind of abuse.

Every corner of the room was strewn with trash. Soda cans were sitting on tables, and even on top of the monitors. Students were chewing tobacco, eating, drinking and smoking while using the terminals, and there was no one with any authority or computer knowledge to be found.

I was amazed by the fact that money had been spent to provide these facilities and necessary precautions had not been taken to ensure their proper use. It seems to me, in light of the cost of this equipment, that if a computing lab cannot be provided and run correctly, it should not exist at all. This includes respect and support on the part of the students using the equipment.

If there are any questions as to how a computing facility should be set up and run, let me refer those responsible to the College of Business Administration and its computing lab to use as a model. Good work business administration.

Walk in their shoes

Editor,
Re: Susan Baird's column, "Society fashions adults from kids," in the March 5 Collegian:

Thank you Susan for sharing your observation with us, but I would like to point out a few things that you were not adult enough to realize.

As a father of two I know that the blame for the speed with which children attempt to become adults is not completely attributable to society. Those girls in Aggieville only want their chance to experience that breakneck pace and why shouldn't they get their chance?

Those girls are only reacting to what they've seen and heard from you and your peers. You set the example, it is your actions before your siblings, relatives and acquaintances that influence those children to be like you: wild and crazy, drunk and disorderly, fast and dangerous.

The greatest part of the blame falls on the parents. It is us alone, not "society," who must cherish our children enough to say, "No." It is our responsibility as parents to point out the grimy realities and to educate our children about the costs of their actions. Parents must be blunt about the realities of life in our times, explain the consequences of our acts and encourage them to seek answers.

That is my philosophy in raising my children, and I could carry on the length of this paper on the hows and whys as could any other parent, but instead I charge you and your peers to remember similar observations and experiences the next time you are around young children. Remember also that they miss nothing you do and say because they desperately want to be like you.

To help with that charge I would ask you to take a moment to think what you would have done if you had entered that particular establishment in Aggieville and one of those girls had been your daughter. What would you have done? The answer to that question should temper your actions the rest of your life.

Walking posters

Editor,
The recurring problem of "disappearing" Union Program Council posters has unfortunately been a more frequent occurrence this spring.

UPC, an organization which brings a variety of entertainment to the Union for K-State students, depends upon promotional posters for its success. Our films committees alone have had more than a dozen large paper posters stolen during the past few months, and the Travel Committee has lost three banners since the beginning of the semester.

If the thieves would only realize the amount of student volunteer work that is spent on each poster, they might think twice before taking one. It is obvious that the more time spent preparing a large paper poster, the more attractive it will appear, increasing its promotional value. However, when we devote much time to make a poster look professional and appealing, we drastically increase the chances of it being stolen. This occurrence is frustrating to the student volunteer who strives to do an excellent job of promotion.

Often, UPC would be more than happy to give these posters away after we are finished with them. All that you must do is come up to the Activities Center and ask.

Mascot mistake

Editor,
I realize that I am not an expert on Willie the Wildcat, or am I by any means suggesting that K-State should adopt a new mascot. I am simply encouraging the student body at K-State to take a stand on how they wish to have the mascot of their future alma mater portrayed.

The image I have in mind of a Wildcat is much like that of the one that is currently displayed at center court in Ahearn Field House. Now that is a Wildcat. Contrary to this image is that of the so-called Wildcat that is displayed in the middle of the football field at KSU Stadium. This so-called Wildcat reminds me so much of the Tom on the "Tom and Jerry Show." For those of you who have watched this show you know that Tom is just a cat; just a plain old housecat.

I personally don't want the mascot of my future alma mater to be a plain old housecat. I will have to admit that I — along with several of my friends — had to laugh at the image that was on the football field when we first walked into KSU Stadium.

I want to say one last thing. If Fred Bramlage, Junction City businessman, is willing to donate over $1 million for a new coliseum, which will cost over $15 million to build, I want a Wildcat on the floor not a housecat.

Parking headache

Editor,
Re: Jonie Trued's column, "Apartment quantity passes quality," in the March 7 Collegian:

I agree with Trued's opinion that many new apartments constructed recently are bad-looking and have caused problems. I want to stress one of the points that was mentioned in that article — the parking space. I have lived on the 11th block of Vattier

Street for almost two years, and last summer a new apartment complex was constructed there near my house. My friends and I who lived in that area realized the problem last fall when we found we could no longer park our cars in front of our houses. We were forced to find some available spaces at the back of the houses.

The problem is not confined to neighbors. Residents of the new apartments also have their problems as well. I was told by a friend who lives in the complex that there are actually only two parking spaces behind the building per apartment unit. However, the average number of residents in each apartment is three or four so the landlord of that apartment complex solved the problem by issuing city parking permits to park in the street to the third and fourth occupants in each apartment.

I tend to believe that the number of permits issued could easily fill two blocks of the street with cars from that place, let alone cars from nearby houses.

I think the Manhattan City Commission should consider controlling the proliferation of such troublesome apartments, and students who are considering moving to those places should also be warned of this serious problem.

Negotiations silly

Editor,
When I listened to President Reagan talking on TV about Nicaragua I said to myself: What a great fellow he is. If he was the American president in the early '40s, my fellow compatriots in Poland would not have been enslaved by the Russians and half of Europe would not be lost by the free world. He would not call Stalin "Uncle Joe" nor believe in negotiations with Russian-style communists. Who ever heard about truly positive results of negotiations with them? Please do not be naive again.

deficit total of $56.7 billion.

Even though foreigners now own more in American investments, the United States still enjoyed a $21.4 billion surplus in earnings compared with foreign earnings on U.S. investments.

For 1985, the surplus in investment earnings of $21.4 billion was wiped out by a record $124.3 billion merchandise trade deficit and $14.8 billion in transfer payments such as foreign aid to give the $117.7 billion current account deficit.

For the final three months of 1985, the current account deficit totaled $36.6 billion, a giant 25 percent increase over the deficit from July through September.

In another report Tuesday, the Commerce Department said housing construction fell back 3.5 percent in February to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.99 million units.

Analysts dismissed the small decline, noting that the level of starts was still the second strongest in the last two years. They said it provided further evidence of the strength in the housing sector that has come from sharp declines in interest rates.

Lawmakers discuss grants for farmers

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A Senate committee was told Tuesday the state needs to help displaced farmers who want to go back to school, but lawmakers disagreed on the best way to assist them.

A lobbyist for the Kansas Farm Bureau urged the Senate Agriculture and Small Business Committee to endorse a proposal to provide grants of up to $3,000 a year to displaced farmers who want to go to a vocational school to get more training or sharpen existing skills.

But one committee member questioned whether the state's money could be better spent, and others asked whether the bill should be broadened, to allow aid to displaced farmers who want to go to community colleges or state universities.

A subcommittee will work on the bill and report back to the full committee Friday, said Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa, the panel's chairman.

Sen. Ross Doyen, R-Concordia, said the proposal was designed to help displaced farmers get back on their feet. Under the bill, the state Board of Education would award 500 grants a year to displaced farmers who enroll in vocational education programs lasting up to one year.

A farmer could receive up to $600 for tuition costs and up to $2,400 for living expenses.

Doyen said as much as $2 million in federal funds could be available for the program through the state Department of Human Resources.

The state also could use $800,000 in federal funds to the state Department of Education, Doyen said.

Bill Fuller, a lobbyist for the Kansas Farm Bureau, called the measure "a sign of compassion."

"The bottom line is lives must be rebuilt," Fuller said.

But Sen. Joseph Norvell, D-Hays, said he questioned the value of such a program, especially when displaced farmers who go back for more vocational training might not be able to find a job after they leave a program. Also, the state could be paying to educate people who would seek out-of-state jobs, Norvell said.

College of Education's '86 telefund surpasses previous years' earnings

By The Collegian Staff

The College of Education marked a 15 percent increase in pledges during its 1986 Telefund campaign.

In addition to the increase over last year's total, the pledge money earned this year surpassed the 1984 total by 33 percent.

Approximately 75 students and 25 faculty members raised $40,482 in pledge money from education alumni.

Michael Holen, associate dean of education and coordinator of the telefund, attributed the fund raiser's success to the efforts of the students involved and to the concern of the alumni.

"The success was due to an increasing awareness on the part of our alumni in supporting good quality students who will become teachers," Holen said.

"The administration of the College of Education is committed to expanding our efforts of attracting the best students possible to the education profession. With these contributions, which primarily support student scholarships, we can do just that," he said.

The college uses 50 percent of the money for scholarships and places the remaining money in an endowment fund. Interest earned by the endowment is also used for future scholarships.

Sharon Stuart, junior in secondary education and chairman of the telefund, said the event was a "positive experience."

"I was glad that all the people involved could play a part in the telefund," she said.

Suspects ransack vehicle, take weapons from rack

Sometime between Feb. 15 and Feb. 16, a vehicle was burglarized in the Lundin Apartment area in northwest Manhattan.

The victim's vehicle is a blue 1964 Chevrolet pickup truck and had two firearms on a gun rack inside. The suspects unlocked the truck through the driver's side vent window and removed the firearms.

The weapons taken in the burglary are described as a Winchester brand .22-caliber semi-automatic rifle, tubular fed magazine with a scope, model number 190, serial number B1645608. The second firearm is a shotgun of undisclosed brand, model number 870, serial number 5743816V.

New coach more than just a Hartman protege

Interesting choice, this Lon Kruger. The word around campus was the K-State head men's basketball coaching job was all but George Felton's. Supposedly, all the other candidates were going through interviews only as a formality. Felton, an assistant coach at Georgia Tech, was going to be the man regardless of the other prospective choices.

Felton had the strong ties with Athletic Director Larry Travis and a reputation for being a recruiting wizard. He seemed to be just what Travis was looking for in a coach. But Kruger got the job.

"Wait a minute," people said. "Kruger? A former Hartman player? I thought we had seen the last of Hartman. Now we've just got a younger version. That's all we need."

Admittedly the comparisons between Kruger and Hartman are inevitable. Kruger learned much of his basketball from Hartman and was the retired coach's assistant for five years.

But if you think Lon Kruger is going to be the same type of coach Jack Hartman has been over the past 16 years — slow, defensive minded and deliberate — think again.

TOM PERRIN
Sports Editor

At the press conference to announce his hiring Monday, Kruger made no secret of the idea that he wants to play an up-tempo style of basketball, a running game. Kruger seems to realize this is what Wildcat fans want and that a fast-paced attack is the way to win in college basketball in the 1980s.

Any successful coach is aware of the role strong defense plays in the game today as well. Kruger appears to realize this, too. After all, nothing starts a fast break quicker than a good pressure defense to force turnovers.

It seems there has been some negative reaction from students about Kruger's hiring. Many people had visions of the Georgia Tech basketball program coming to Manhattan along with Felton, if he have been hired.

Although he may well turn out to be a great college head coach, the fact of the matter is that Felton has no college head coaching experience, having spent practically his entire career as an assistant coach to Bobby Cremins at Appalachian State (N.C.) and Georgia Tech.

While Felton's skills as a recruiter are without question (Mark Price, Bruce Dalrymple, John Salley, Tom Hammonds), he recruited those players to Atlanta and the Atlantic Coast Conference, not Manhattan and the Big Eight Conference. There is a difference. And attracting big-city players to a small city like Manhattan is not easy, either. Ask anyone who has coached here.

Kruger knows what it takes to recruit players to out-of-the-way places like Manhattan, having coached at K-State and Pan American in Edinburg, Texas. If you think Manhattan is in the middle of nowhere, try Edinburg. Edinburg isn't close to anything except Mexico and there aren't too many 6-foot-9 power forwards who average 25 points a game down there, either.

Now that Kruger has the job, recruiting must be his first priority.

Finding some immediate scoring help in the juco ranks will be essential. Who knows, maybe there's another Walter Berry or Anthony Bowie in some juco, just waiting to come to K-State.

Kansas high school basketball has been a bit short on big time talent in the past few years, but this year there are a couple of unsigned players so far — 6-7 swingman Sam Roark of Kansas City Wyandotte and 6-1 guard Steve Henson of McPherson — that are true major-college talents.

Except for the possible (but also unlikely) return of Norris Coleman to the line-up until late next season, K-State has almost no offense returning next season. Losing Coleman, Joe Wright and Ben Mitchell could be potentially devastating.

If Kruger isn't able to bring in some major scoring threats, Colorado's record for the worst Big Eight finish in history (0-14 last season) may be in jeopardy of being tied by K-State next season.

Recruiting is the key.

Boxer's death revives debate on British ban

By The Associated Press

LONDON — A long-running political and medical debate over whether the boxing should be banned in Britain was revived by the death of Scottish welterweight Steve Watt.

Boxing's opponents say Watt's death reinforced arguments for a ban, or at least a radical review of safety standards. But supporters of boxing countered that tight controls were already in force. A ban, they said, would only drive fights underground and make the sport even more dangerous.

Watt died Monday night, three days after he lapsed into a coma in the ring. He was the first British boxer to die after a fight in 5½ years.

In the 10th and last round of his fight against favored Rocky Kelly last Friday at the West London hotel, 28-year-old Watt was stopped after taking several head punches at the end of a savage contest.

He was carried from the ring on a stretcher and rushed to the hospital where he died without regaining consciousness.

As newspaper headlines reported Watt's death Tuesday — the 12th British boxing fatality since World War II and the 340th worldwide — the British Boxing Board of Control prepared to hold an inquiry into the fight next week.

Dr. John Dawson, under-secretary for the British Medical Association, which represents two-thirds of the country's 97,000 doctors, commented: "Being repeatedly struck on the head always carries with it the risk of this sort of damage."

The BMA has been using new brain scanning techniques to gather information about the effects of boxing on the brain. In 1984, it published the findings of a two-year survey that concluded that the boxing could cause permanent brain and eye damage, and even death.

The report, intended to illustrate the long-term dangers of the sport, said that boxers could sustain severe injuries, especially to the brain, without showing any immediate symptoms.

Dawson accused ringside doctors of lulling boxers into a false sense of security by passing them as fit to fight.

Dr. Adrian Whiteson, chief medical officer for the British Boxing Board of Control, said there were strict controls governing the sport.

"We retire boxers when we think their conditions may allow them to suffer some form of brain damage. Money does not speak louder than sense in this country," he said.

Whiteson said that banning professional boxing would be counter-productive.

Pray guides student athletes

By JIM LUNDSTROM
Collegian Reporter

Bea Pray's job as director of academic services involves more than simply keeping tabs on the progress of student athletes — shuffling papers and completing other tasks comes with the territory.

"There is a lot of paperwork involved in this position. I keep tabs on all student athletes' academic progress, with the exception of football athletes. This involves following up on their class progress. We have class evaluation forms that we send to their professors. These forms will be issued up to three times per semester," Pray said.

Pray then calculates the information and calls the students in to discuss their class standing. She also informs the coaches of their standing. If the student needs assistance in a class, she arranges tutoring services.

"This gives us a good reading on early problems in class, such as attendance. It also helps the student see how the instructor perceives the work they are doing," Pray said. "If they are not performing satisfactorily, we can arrange a tutoring program."

One of the more difficult tasks Pray performs is trying to keep the squad lists updated. This is difficult when there is a roster change, Pray said, because she must constantly check with coaches regarding squad changes.

Pray also said she is in charge of advising student athletes and will have about 90 students to advise for fall pre-enrollment.

"I do the advising for all the Arts and Science undeclared majors. Many of the student-athletes remain in an undeclared curriculum during their first two years," Pray said.

Working with recruits is another responsibility of Pray's. She visits with recruits when they are on campus to explain the University's academic counseling program and the services it offers.

"I send out follow-up letters after I've met with recruits. Many times we will have parents come in with the prospective student athlete," Pray said.

Pray said once a student athlete has made the decision to attend the University, there is a great deal of paperwork to complete.

"We have to have their high school release (transcript) of information. I have to keep tabs on when that information arrives in the admission office. After the information arrives we can start the process for the certification scholarship approval," Pray said.

Pray said one of the major changes in the future that will affect her department is the NCAA's Proposition 48, which goes into effect this fall. Proposition 48 raises academic standards for athletes who receive financial aid to attend college.

"Instead of high school students having to achieve a 2.0 grade point average, they must have a 2.0 GPA in their core curriculum classes. This will go into effect in August 1987," Pray said.

"It's going to be a major issue that we'll have to deal with. There is going to have to be a lot of consideration on the coaches' parts to make certain the students they are recruiting meet those new academic requirements," she said.

A serious problem with the new proposal will be that K-State will not be able to recruit athletes that are normally recruited because the athletes will no longer qualify for scholarships, she said.

"The students do have the option of coming to K-State and sitting out of athletics one year to establish a grade point if they don't have the required GPA," Pray said. "I don't know how the coaches are viewing this or how they will consider it though."

Underdog Bears find NIT success

By The Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — The surprising Southwest Missouri State Bears can thank Cleveland State, which has been pulling off some upsets of its own in the NCAA Tournament, for their success in the National Invitation Tournament.

The Bears knocked off Pittsburgh in the first round of the NIT and upset Marquette 83-69 Monday night to advance to a quarterfinal match against Florida Thursday night in Gainesville, Fla.

However, the Southwest Missouri team that won those two games was not the same one that Pitt and Marquette had seen in a game film provided by Cleveland State Coach Kevin Mackey.

Mackey had sent Pittsburgh a film of Cleveland State thrashing the Bears — who finished runner-up to the Vikings in the Association of Mid-Continent Universities Conference — 94-67 in Cleveland. He chose not to send film from Southwest Missouri's 65-61 victory over the Vikings earlier in the season at the Hammons Student Center.

"I had said the greatest thing that could happen would be if Cleveland State sent that film to our NIT opponents," Bears Coach Charlie Spoonhour said Tuesday. "We played so bad in that game ... there's no way anyone could tell anything about what we do. We were falling down and they were taking the ball from us."

Neither Southwest Missouri nor Cleveland State was expected to survive this far in the playoffs. But Spoonhour said he isn't surprised.

"This is a little late in the year for us to be playing, but we're not complaining," Spoonhour said.

"It's been a lot of fun and the kids and I are having a great time."

"And I thought if Cleveland State could first get into the tournament, get their feet on the ground and not be in awe of the likes of teams like Indiana, they could go somewhere."

Spoonhour, a 46-year-old Mulberry, Kan. native who grew up in Rogers, Ark., and coached high school in Missouri for eight years before entering the college ranks, has directed the 24-7 Bears to their best record ever.

The Bears, who have been playing Division I basketball for three years, lack height but have used quickness to overcome the handicap. On Monday night they went one-on-one against the taller Warriors for layups, and their 6-foot-6 center, Phil Schlegel, grabbed a career-high 11 rebounds in addition to scoring 21 points and limiting the taller Marquette centers to just three field goals.

"It can make a big man dizzy, watching some guy run around him in circles," said Bears' forward Greg Bell, who scored 16 points. Despite its size, Marquette grabbed only one more rebound than the Bears, 31-30.

"The players may be surprised a little to be here, but they have confidence in their ability and know they can win," Spoonhour said. "They're having fun, and are very loose. And it's helped that we've been playing at home in front of a great bunch of fans. You can just feel the electricity when we play here."

A record crowd of 9,229, some of which stood in the aisle, packed the Hammons Student Center for the Marquette game.

Golfer misunderstands penalty

NEW ORLEANS — Seve Ballesteros said Tuesday he was unaware of the consequences — a one year loss of his playing rights in the United States — when he failed to play in the required 15 American tournaments last season.

The Spanish star said that, up until Aug. 16, he thought the penalty would be loss of his membership on the American Tour and "we go back to the old rule. I could still play some tournaments on sponsors exemptions."

As it was, Ballesteros was banished from the PGA Tour for one full season with the exceptions of:

1 — this week's USF&G Classic, in which he is the defending champion, and

2 — the Masters, U.S. Open and the PGA national championship, which are not PGA Tour events.

Ballesteros, a two-time winner of both the British Open and the Masters and arguably the finest player in the world, did not contest that the penalty may have been in the books earlier, but said he was unaware of it.

Tennessee school wins NAIA

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Senior center John Kimbrell scored 22 points to help David Lipscomb, Tenn. subdue unseeded Arkansas-Monticello, 67-54, Tuesday in the championship game of the 49th annual NAIA men's basketball tournament.

Kimbrell, who was named the tournament's Most Valuable Player, made six of 11 floor attempts and 10 of 11 free throw tries while grabbing 11 rebounds.

The Bisons, winning their first championship, trailed throughout the first half, but used their size advantage to take control midway through the second half.

Trailing 40-36, Kimbrell, 6-foot-10 and 210 pounds, made two free throws on a foul that sent Arkansas-Monticello's 6-7 center Ikie Corbin to the bench with four personals.

The Bisons, who finished the year 35-4, then scored eight straight points to go ahead, 44-40, with 8:30 left.

Corbin, who scored 15 points and grabbed nine rebounds for the Boll Weevils, returned to break the David Lipscomb string with a pair of free throws.

Dillards decides to locate in proposed mall

By TOM SCHULTES
Business/Government Editor

With the receipt of federal grants for site acquisition and preparation for the proposed Town Center Mall, at least one new major company will be locating in the facility.

One of the anchor stores for the facility, Dillards Department Store, based in Little Rock, Ark., has recently expanded in the Kansas City region with the acquisition of 12 Macy's stores in the area.

But who, and what is Dillards? Community Development Coordinator Gary Stith said the company "has been expanding a great deal recently, (making it) one of the largest department store chains in the country."

According to the March 7 issue of Value Line Investment Survey, the company operated 101 stores primarily in the South and Southwest United States as of Feb. 5.

The report states the department store chain features brand-name goods in middle- to upper-income price ranges, with fashion-oriented apparel accounting for about 60 percent of sales. Home furnishings account for about 21 percent with shoes, jewelry and similar items providing about 10 percent in sales.

Company officials in Little Rock would not discuss the proposed Manhattan facility. Stith said he would estimate a peak employment level of about 140 for the Manhattan store, based on its square footage.

According to Standard & Poor's stock reports, "the company's market strategy is to enter or further penetrate markets where it can become the dominant conventional department store. Most new stores are located in suburban regional shopping malls, with Dillards anchoring the mall with (Sears Roebuck and Co. or J.C. Penney Co. Inc. stores). The co-anchor for the Manhattan facility is the J.C. Penney Co. Inc."

The organization, known for its ability to revive struggling markets after acquisitions, recorded a 10-year compound growth rate of 22.1 percent for sales and 33.1 percent for income.

The company, incorporated in Delaware, began in 1938 as Mayer & Schmidt Inc.

On March 4, 1974, that company was acquired for 334,445 common shares for the inventories and supplies of six department stores, operated by the Leonards Division of Tandy Corp., which leases or subleases the stores to the company, based on a percentage of sales.

Recent acquisitions include the January 1984 purchase of 12 stores and one warehouse of the Stix, Baer & Fuller division of Associated Dry Goods for approximately $93 million. Several of these stores were in the Kansas City area.

On Sept. 30, 1984, the company acquired 18 department stores and one warehouse from two Dayton Hudson holdings, Diamond's and John A. Brown department stores, for about $143 million in cash.

William Dillard is company chairman and chief executive officer, with William Dillard II serving as president and chief operating officer. Vice presidents are Alex Dillard and Mike Dillard.

Two subsidiaries of the company are Construction Developers Inc. and Dillard Investment Co. Inc.

Acquisitions serve as the main route for expansion, with the organization growing from 31 stores in 1976 to the present 101, with the largest jump from 66 at the end of 1984 to 93 at the end of 1985. Stith said the Manhattan facility will be about 72,000 square feet, approximately one-half the company's average. Dillards' store sizes range from 40,000 square feet to 240,000 square feet.

Regionally, in addition to the Kansas City market, Dillards also operates 10 stores in Wichita and three in the Wichita area. With the Macy's acquisition, Dillards also enters the Topeka market. Dillards also has a store in Hutchinson.

Stith said the Manhattan facility will lease ground from Forest City Rental Properties Inc. of Cleveland, co-developer of the Town Center Mall with JCP Realty Inc., a subsidiary of the J.C. Penney Co. Inc. of New York City. The actual building will be owned by Dillards, though.

Panel agrees to building construction

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A legislative construction panel voted Tuesday to go along with nearly all of Gov. John Carlin's recommended building projects for three state agencies during the next fiscal year.

The Joint Committee on State Building Construction recommended proposed capital improvement projects totaling $919,341 for the Kansas Fish and Game Commission, $99,561 for the Department of Human Resources and $1.7 million for the Department of Transportation.

All of the recommendations were the same or slightly lower than amounts Carlin had suggested in his proposed budget for fiscal year 1987, which begins July 1.

City OKs streetscape improvement plans

By The Collegian Staff

Revised designs for streetscape improvements in downtown Manhattan were approved Tuesday night by the Manhattan City Commission.

Commissioners authorized the designs on the condition the project not exceed the $1.18 million estimate.

Mayor Suzanne Lindamood said she supported beginning the streetscape project now because "there is a lot of excitement and support for it."

Gary Stith, community development coordinator, said "whatever is torn up (now could) be finished by Thanksgiving."

Commissioners agreed with most of the design changes but added $15,000 for trash receptacles.

"No matter how much money we spend on the streetscape it won't look good if trash is flying around," Commissioner Rick Mann said.

The commissioners also agreed that city employees be utilized whenever possible to reduce costs on the project.

In a related matter, commissioners approved a resolution to issue $1.6 million in temporary notes for downtown parking lot development.

Lindamood opposed the resolution saying the notes were a new expense and the city was obligated to pay 25 percent of the cost.

Department aids nature area

By JILL LANG
Collegian Reporter

In conjunction with Kansas Wildlife Heritage month, the Department of Landscape Architecture is participating in the design of a nature area on the Cedar Crest grounds in Topeka.

The nature area at the governor's residence was dedicated March 13, by Gov. John Carlin.

The planning design class, instructed by Tim Keane, assistant professor of landscape architecture, will be undertaking the landscape project. The class consists of two groups, nine graduate students and 19 undergraduates.

The project is expected to begin in mid-April. The completion date is set for approximately 3½ weeks later.

Keane was introduced to the project by two coordinators of wildlife month, Terry Shoeman and Jan Garton.

Keane worked on a previous project with Shoeman and when she learned of the Cedar Crest project, she suggested the landscape department might be interested. Keane was able to fit the project into his class schedule.

This type of project was started by Keane last year when he instigated the "Design with Nature" competition.

Definite plans for the area's size and ground layout have yet to be determined. Keane believes the class will be working with approximately two to three acres.

"The project will use the existing topography (surface features) and rough trails to develop the nature area. The purpose of the area is to educate Kansans and visitors about native wildlife," Garton said.

"We will develop nature trails, possibly even interpreted trails. The interpreted trails would use informative brochures to guide visitors through the nature sight," Keane said. "The basic outline of the project is to add to and diversify the already existing plant life."

Some plant and animal life and a small pond currently exist on the site.

"Ideally, the pond will be made into a marsh-type area to attract more wildlife," he said.

Keane said the project will be completed in phases to accommodate limited funding. Phase I involves developing the trail system.

Phase II entails working with and establishing vegetation near the trails and the final phase will be the general development of the entire area.

Most of the labor and materials for the project are being donated, so no direct funds are being collected by the department. Keane and the coordinators are trying to allocate basic funds to pay for the transportation to and from the site.

"Everything begins and ends at exactly the right time and place." Miranda (Anne Lambert), an exquisitely beautiful girl described as a "Botticelli angel" by her teacher, speaks those words just before she leads three friends to ascend Hanging Rock, a geological formation in Australia. One girl, pudgy and asexual, turns back halfway; the other three mysteriously disappear, as does the middle-aged teacher chaperoning the girls from Appleyard College on their Valentine's Day picnic in 1900. One girl is later found alive; her companions are never discovered, and she has no recollection of what became of them. As director Peter Weir (The Last Wave) probes this enigmatic puzzle, he delicately dissects the stifling repression of Victorian Australia. Rich in visual symbolism, with beautifully atmospheric photography and a haunting musical score, Picnic At Hanging Rock is a multi-layered, hypnotically visual cinematic experience.

Area conference to examine civil rights, peace relations

By The Collegian Staff

Four nationally recognized civil rights and peace leaders will participate in a conference addressing justice and peace issues.

The conference, "An Affirmation of Freedom," is scheduled for 8 a.m. until 8 p.m. April 19 at the Junction City Senior High School. The conference is to focus on the relationships between civil rights and peace issues.

Speakers scheduled to participate include Yolanda King, daughter of the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.; the Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the Atlanta-based Southern Christian Leadership Conference; Father Daniel Berrigan, a poet, author and critic of America's military policies; and Mitch Snyder, co-chairman of the Community for Creative Non-Violence, a Washington, D.C.-based group which has created national interest in the plight of America's hungry and homeless.

Kevin Willmot, chairman of the conference steering committee, said, "Our goal is to help Kansans affirm or renew their commitment to Martin Luther King's dream of a peaceful and just society."

He said the conference will allow Kansans to ask important questions concerning the interrelationship between peace issues and civil rights issues. Willmot used the example of the effect President Reagan's call for increases in military spending and armaments has on poor and minority Americans.

Sponsors of the conference include Junction City's Church of Our Savior United Methodist and Ward Chapel A.M.E. churches; Manhattan's Mennonite Fellowship and Manhattan Association of Christian and Jewish Congregations; Salina's Center for Peace Concerns and St. Marys Catholic Church; and the Concordia Sisters of St. Joseph Human Rights Commission. The Junction City Commission has also endorsed the conference.

Student appears on 'Price is Right'

By MARGARET MAY
Feature Editor

"Sandi Sloan, come on down, you are the next contestant on 'The Price Is Right.'"

Those well-known words helped Sandi Sloan, senior in marketing, win an aquarium on the television game show, "The Price Is Right."

Sloan went to California with three of her friends for spring break and seeing "The Price Is Right" was part of their plans. When they looked into getting tickets, there were two tickets available, so they drew for them and Sloan got one of the tickets.

"We went to L.A. for spring break," Sloan said, "but we didn't mail-in for tickets, which is what you usually do."

Being on the show is an all day procedure, Sloan said. The contestants arrive early in the morning to stand in line and get a number. Sloan's number was 60. Then they were free to go until noon, she said.

At noon the contestants are lined up in rows of five, and then each contestant is interviewed. Sloan was asked what she was doing in Los Angeles and what she did for a living.

"I said I was on spring break and that I was from K-State," Sloan said.

The crowd is kept excited during the filming of the show, she said. The crowd is so loud the names being read can't be heard, so large flash cards with the contestant's name are shown.

"I didn't even hear my name. My friend told me to get up," she said.

The first prize Sloan bid on was a TV and then a washer and dryer, but she didn't win either of those. The third prize was an aquarium, and Sloan bid $1,100 and won. The actual retail price was $1,150.

"I had no clue what to bid," she said. "I was the third person to bid."

The first person bid $1,200 and the second person bid $900, so Sloan tried to bid between them, she said.

"I kissed Bob Barker," Sloan said,

"it was the highlight of the show. I told him I wanted a kiss."

Once on stage, she played the game Squeeze Play to try to win brass and glass shelves. In order to win the shelves, Sloan had to take away one number out of five and the remaining numbers had to be in the price of the shelves.

Sloan picked the wrong number, so she didn't win the shelves. She was able to be in the "Showcase Showdown" and spin the wheel to try to be in the "Showcase." She didn't win that either.

Sloan had to sign a contract in order to be on the show. The contract stated she was at least 18 years of age, a U.S. citizen, had never been on "The Price Is Right" before and had not been on a total of three game shows before.

"Seeing 'The Price Is Right' is one thing we planned on doing for sure," Sloan said.

The show Sloan appeared on airs Friday, April 18, at 10 a.m. on CBS.

Few harassment victims file complaints

By ANNETTE FANHAUSER
Collegian Reporter

Although there will probably be an increase of one or two sexual harassment complaints filed on campus this year, complaints are usually seldom filed because the procedure is unknown or, most likely, the complainant is afraid of being identified, said Jane Rowlett, director of Affirmative Action.

This year seven to eight complaints will be filed in the Affirmative Action Office for sexual harassment on campus, which is an increase of one to two over the previous year, Rowlett said.

Victims of sexual harassment vary — some are verbally harassed and others are physically harassed. According to a pamphlet put out by the Affirmative Action Office, 214 Anderson Hall, sexual harassment takes on several forms. Minor offenses include slurs, demeaning jokes and comments towards women.

Other harassments include sexual advances, embarrassing remarks toward an individual personally and luring romantic suggestions. All examples are forms of sexual harassment and will be treated as such if a complaint is made.

The sexual harassment policy, developed in 1983, is made available to all students through the student handbook, and to all faculty, staff and employees upon employment.

"The policy is a non-gender one, applying to both men and women," said Rowlett, "however, more complaints are made by women."

Those people making complaints are faced with a few concerns. The main one deals with identity. Individuals are afraid of being identified through the complaint and therefore, jeopardizing their work or education.

"With the University policy, the individual is not required to divulge their identity," Rowlett said.

If demeaning remarks are made to a class, usually a group of students will comment about it, and therefore, it would be difficult to identify any one particular person.

Another reason complaints are minimal is because one-on-one cases are difficult to review. Without witnesses, Rowlett said, this type of a case needs strong evidence, which is difficult to get.

One or two remarks are also hard to bring a complaint against. The comments or actions must follow a pattern, Rowlett said.

"The majority of the complaints are filed by classified employees. Most of these complaints deal with verbal harassment and inappropriate contact," she said.

Student complaints usually involve comments made in class which are sexually demeaning, she said.

"Most actions are unintentional," Rowlett said. "Usually the person has a lack of understanding of how it affects the student or employee and generally quits after a complaint has been made."

A survey conducted at K-State in 1981, two years before the policy was formed, indicated 335 employees experienced or observed sexual harassment over a two-year period.

"Many things regarding sexual harassment have been taken for granted in the past, but not anymore," Rowlett said in reference to the enactment of the policy.

Administrators and supervisors are responsible for making the policy known to their faculty and staff in order to prevent complaints from happening.

When a complaint is filed with the Affirmative Action Office, the director contacts the head of the department and the dean to discuss the complaint. If the complaint is justifiable, another meeting is conducted with the director, the dean and department head, and the complainant. Following the meeting the respondent will be made aware of the allegations. The department head is then responsible for deciding whether or not the complaint is substantial. If it is, action will then be taken against the respondent.

For most cases the penalty is admonishment, however, for more serious cases stronger action is taken.

Shuttle explosion remains under investigation

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — A key NASA official expressed confidence Tuesday that investigators will be able to "nail" the cause of the Challenger accident even if recovery teams fail to retrieve parts of the shuttle's suspect right booster rocket from the Atlantic Ocean floor.

"We will find out what happened and fix the deficiency," said J.R. Thompson, the vice chairman of the space agency task force investigating the Jan. 28 accident that killed seven crew members.

"The exact sequence of events, I'm reasonably optimistic that we'll nail it," he told reporters. "I believe we will identify with high confidence the problem area; we will redesign the problem area."

Some other officials have said a certain cause could not be established without finding the suspect booster rocket debris. Asked if he agreed with this, Thompson replied:

"Obviously, we'd very much like to get that....But with the photo work we've done, looking back at design....I feel confident we can arrive at the right conclusion even if we don't have that."

Thompson also said that a presidential commission investigating the accident has asked NASA to finish its preliminary reports on the cause of the disaster by April 18. The panel has until June 3 to report to President Reagan, and its chairman William P. Rogers is known to want to finish early.

"There's only one investigation," Thompson said, declaring that the space agency was working at the direction of the commission. Thompson is a former senior NASA official, who ran the shuttle's main engine project.

He said that recovery teams have retrieved an estimated 4 to 5 percent of the debris from the Challenger, and expressed the hope that salvage efforts could be concluded in about 30 days.

At a NASA briefing, Thompson said he did not expect crew member tape recorders or on-board computers to shed any significant light on the cause.

"The problem is down in the propulsion, and we have that telemetric data," Thompson said.

The Navy announced Tuesday that a ship had raised a chunk of debris that might include the right solid booster rocket joint suspected of causing the explosion.

Marcos

documents from Michael Armacost, undersecretary of state for political affairs.

Salonga's panel, the Commission on Good Government, was appointed by Aquino to investigate what Salonga calls "the ill-gotten wealth that was stolen from the Filipino people."

Salonga has estimated that Marcos' total worth might range as high as $5 billion to $10 billion. Salonga's commission recently said that papers found in Manila showed Marcos had a Swiss bank account worth $800 million.

On Capitol Hill, the Foreign Affairs panel voted 6-0 to subpoena the documents, and Solarz said most of them probably will be released to the public.

The panel also voted 6-0 to subpoena eight more people in its continuing investigation. It had earlier approved subpoenas for two New York brothers.

None of the eight people was identified, but Solarz said four of them are suspected of having information about Marcos' New York real estate dealings.

Coliseum

Parkinson has submitted several proposals during the past two years to do consulting work on the coliseum, but each proposal was rejected by the University.

Athletic Director Larry Travis told Livingston he objected to the "ticket windows" included in the coliseum design.

"Ticket windows are something I don't like...it is an impersonal thing. I would like to see an open area," Travis said. There should be no problem altering that portion of the design, Livingston said.

University Planner Larry Garvin said he believes the new design is adequate. The original design with 16,000 seats and cross aisles is more desirable and would be more comfortable, but everyone will enjoy the new design more, he said.

The new design eliminates a concession and restroom facility, most of an office structure for coaches and administrators and more than 2,500 seats, but the concession and office areas will be bid as "add alternates."

Livingston said if final plans are finished in September, construction might begin in December. The coliseum, scheduled for completion in October 1988, replaces 35-year-old Ahearn Field House.

The construction cost of the coliseum is budgeted at $15.9 million. The total cost of the coliseum is $17.5 million.
